The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.
Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred gentlemen are present—a quorum.
Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.
The CHAIRMAN. Five gentlemen have come in since the Chair counted 100 present, and therefore the Chair is absolutely sure that a quorum is present. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. Par. 3. The Public Printer is hereby authorized, upon the requisition of the superintendent of public documents, to print or reprint from time to time a sufficient number of copies of such publications as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the printing of any document or report, or any publication authorized by law to be printed, or hereafter authorized to be printed, for congressional valuation distribution, which shall not have been ordered within two years from the date of the first publication, the authority to print shall lapse, except as orders for subsequent editions may be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 59, by striking out the section beginning with line 14 and ending with line 25.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that paragraph is already passed, and the Clerk was reading the next paragraph.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES] was on his feet trying to get recognition, and the Chair's attention was momentarily diverted. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for the purpose of answering the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. He produced a letter from the Public Printer in which he said the Public Printer stated that the price for facing slips was 11 cents a thousand.

Mr. FINLEY. I will read exactly what he stated in his letter.

Mr. BEAKES. The price now paid for the printing of facing slips by the Post Office Department is 4.99 cents per thousand. I was not talking about facing slips, exactly, when I said that there was a case where the Government Printing Office bid eight or nine times the rate at which the work could be done under contract. What I was talking about was this: That on September 3, 1914, the Public Printer bid on a contract for furnishing 1,375,000 card labels, and the Fiest Printing Co., of White Haven, Pa., got the contract for $101, while the Public Printer's bid was $962.89.

Mr. BARNHART. They work girls over there 12 hours a day. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. BEAKES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARNHART. Let the gentleman finish his speech. I have a few remarks to make about the conditions in the factory over there. Probably the gentleman is not aware of these conditions.

Mr. BEAKES. I do not know anything about the factory. I do not know anything about the Fiest Printing Co. I hold no brief for any concern on earth.

Mr. BARNHART. Does not the gentleman know that they work girls 12 hours a day? The gentleman would not make a comparison between a shop in which they work girls 12 hours a day and the men in the Government Printing Office that are paid from 50 to 60 cents an hour and are given an eight-hour day and annual leave?

Mr. BEAKES. I am not doing that.

Mr. BARNHART. That is what the gentleman is doing.

Mr. BEAKES. I want to call attention to the fact that instead of this bill saving money, it is going to cost you more money, and I think that every word these gentlemen are saying proves that my contentions are correct.

Now, I do not believe in sweatshop labor, and I do not believe in men working over eight hours a day; but many of these firms which bid on Government contracts and get the contracts at less money than the Government Printing Office bid are union firms, employing union printers, and working under union laws and regulations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where is the factory located that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. BEAKES. This particular firm, of which I know nothing, is located at White Haven, Pa.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAKES. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not true that the printing industry is more generally unionized than any other industry in the country, most of the employees working under the eight-hour system?

Mr. BEAKES. The printing industry is the best organized industry in this country. I know something about the printing business. That has been my business all my life; and I want to say to you that when you come to these special things that require special machinery, private contractors having that machinery can do them much more cheaply than the Government can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Or I can speak to the amendment, in opposition to it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES] does not realize that he is standing on the floor of this House as a champion of manufacturing industries that are doing in these shops what these affidavits that I hold in my hand say they are doing. If, as a matter of course, Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States desires to go out and seek to have this work done in sweatshops, the Government Printing Office can not compete with them, and it ought not to compete with them because the Government of the United States ought to stand——

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BARNHART. No; not now. The Government of the United States ought to stand as a champion of the interests of labor.

I do not like to say it, but I know what I am talking about. The opposition to this proposition comes from men who are representing manufacturing industries such as the one in which this one employee says:

I was employed with the understanding that I was to receive 25 cents per hour, and work 12 hours—from 7 p. m. until 7 a. m.—seven days per week. This condition prevailed for a while until one night the electric power company cut off the power for the purpose of installing power in another plant in the neighborhood. This caused the presses to stand idle for a while and——

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. BARNHART. The affidavit continues:

When Mr. Young saw this condition he remarked that hereafter he would pay the man that did the work, and that also the pressmen were to receive 6 cents per thousand impressions instead of the 25 cents per hour. Knowing that meant a decrease in wages several of the pressmen refused to work, as we knew that it was almost impossible to make 25 cents per hour when the presses would not average 4,000 impressions per hour for the 12 hours.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, I am sure that no Member of this Congress is willing to subscribe to a policy that will give the work of the Government to a manufacturing institution that goes into competition with grown-up men at the head of families, who have a right to the wages that the Government is paying them, by employing girls and adopting sweatshop methods in their broadest possible sense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. Par. 4. Documents specifically ordered by Congress for congressional valuation distribution and the following publications shall be printed and subject to distribution by the superintendent of public documents under the provisions of this section: Provided, That said superintendent shall supply, on the request of the Vice President, or any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, not to exceed two copies each of any publication of the Government not provided for by this section which he may have available in stock and charge the same against his valuation account; and if the publications so furnished were printed for sale, the Public Printer shall credit the amount charged therefor to the reprint account of said superintendent by transferring a like sum from the allotment for printing and binding for Congress: Provided further, That this section shall not be construed to include the speeches of any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in whatever form printed.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of this committee——

Mr. EDWARDS. I make the point of order that the section has not been concluded.

Mr. BEAKES. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. EDWARDS. I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, but let us finish the paragraph.

Mr. BEAKES. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. EDWARDS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BEAKES. I want to ask the chairman if the Printing Committee does not intend to perfect this bill by striking out words referring to the valuation provision which the Committee of the Whole has stricken from the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, that was not a committee amendment. The committee is not interested in perfecting that feature of the bill.

Mr. BEAKES. Then the Committee on Printing is not willing to accept the action of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BARNHART. Why, certainly; but the Committee on Printing does not feel under obligations to perfect the bill by offering 30 or 40 amendments, because it is up to the opponents of the bill, who are changing it, to submit those amendments. If the Committee on Printing can agree with them the committee will do so, but it is not up to the committee to formulate those amendments, now that the Committee of the Whole have taken it into their own hands to change this whole plan.

Mr. BEAKES. The question I want to ask the gentleman is whether or not, if the House cuts out this valuation scheme when the bill comes into the House, that will entirely destroy the value of this bill?

Mr. BARNHART. Gentlemen can answer that question for themselves. They will have to read the bill.

Mr. BEAKES. I notice that the chairman of this committee has been opposing amendments here that were intended to perfect the text. We have stricken out the valuation scheme, and yet all these sections have reference to the valuation scheme. If the gentleman wants his bill to pass, he ought to try to get it into some shape.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Michigan can not dictate to the chairman of the Committee on Printing as to what the committee must do. It is up to the gentleman from Michigan himself to make the bill the way he wants it. If the House decides to adopt his theory, all right. If the House refuses to stand by the committee, we will go along and read the bill and do the best we can, and see what can be done when we get back into the House. That is a fair and open proposition.

Mr. BEAKES. I am fair with the gentleman. I am opposed to the whole bill.

Mr. BARNHART. I understand that, and I know why.

Mr. BEAKES. I wish the gentleman would tell the House why.

Mr. BARNHART. Because of the statement that the gentleman has already made.

Mr. BEAKES. What is that statement?

Mr. BARNHART. He has informed the House what objection he has to the bill, and there might be some other objections, in addition to that, which the gentleman has not yet given to the House. The chairman of the committee can not anticipate all that, but I understand what the gentleman's objections are so far.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman by inference said something about some one representing some manufacturing interests here. I tried to get that inference brought out plainly, but the gentleman refused to yield to me. I want the gentleman to state fairly if he thinks I represent any manufacturing interests?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, Mr. Chairman, whether the gentleman is representing the interests of these sweatshops or not, it seems to me—and that is only my own opinion—that the gentleman is working in the interest of those shops. I may be mistaken about it, but the gentleman is taking that side of the question.

Mr. BEAKES. The only element that I represent here is the Post Office Department of the United States, which is opposed to this bill.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman referred to some slips that were being printed in a Washington sweatshop.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, there is no Washington——

Mr. BARNHART. Both in Pennsylvania and in Washington, and we have the affidavits here. If the gentleman would like to have the statement of the Public Printer and the affidavits of the employees of that shop introduced into the RECORD, I will ask unanimous consent that it be done on his request, and then the House and the country will understand what the gentleman from Michigan is fighting for. If the gentleman will suggest that I do so, I will ask unanimous consent that they be placed in the RECORD. I do not want to do it of my own accord, because I admire the gentleman from Michigan, and I know he does not want to be put in the situation in which these documents would place him.

Mr. BEAKES. They could not place me in any bad position, because I know nothing about them. I only used that as one illustration of a very large number of cases, and the other cases this firm have nothing whatever to do with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BORLAND, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, and Mr. PLATT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. BORLAND. I want to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. To the paragraph that has just been read?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. TILSON. I make the point of order that the paragraph has not been completed and that we have only suspended the reading by unanimous consent without having completed the paragraph.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that is strictly correct, and I am willing to hold my amendment until the paragraph is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) Addresses and messages of the President to Congress: Provided, That the annual message of the President shall be printed in pamphlet form immediately upon its receipt by Congress.

(2) Congressional Directory: Provided, That there shall be prepared, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, not to exceed two editions of the Congressional Directory during each session of Congress. The first edition shall be distributed to the President, the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, Resident Commissioners, the principal officials of Congress, and the heads of the executive departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government on the first day of the session, and shall be ready for distribution to others within one week thereafter. The number and disposition of such directories shall be under the control of the Joint Committee on Printing, except as otherwise provided in this section. Official correspondence concerning the directory may be had in penalty envelopes, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing. The compiler of the Congressional Directory shall be appointed by the Joint Committee on Printing and shall receive $1,600 per annum for compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory, to be payable as ordered by said committee and disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to this paragraph, page 61, line 1.

Mr. BARNHART. Might not we read the whole section through and then refer back for these amendments? I think in that way we will make better progress.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we proceeding by section or by paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The general rule is to proceed by sections. This bill has been peculiarly arranged; they have printed the bill so that each one of these paragraphs might be under the parliamentary rule considered as a section, because many of them are disconnected as sections of a bill would usually be. The Chair will hold that the different subdivisions marked as paragraphs are subject to amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. I rose to offer an amendment to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will not lose any of his rights.

Mr. FESS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. These paragraphs are numbered. The one we are considering is paragraph 4, and it runs to the bottom of page 73.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that each of these paragraphs is subject to amendment. For convenience the bill was printed in this way, and the Chair thinks that each paragraph is subject to amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 1, after the word "Congress," strike out the period and insert the following: "Containing a small cut or photograph of each Representative in Congress on the margin accompanying the biographical sketch of such Representative."

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good provision, otherwise I would not have offered it. I have offered it in good faith, and I hope the Members will so consider it. With a body of men of over 400, with considerable changing every two years, it is hard for the Members of the House or the public to know and point out a new Member of Congress. This often applies to older Members also. I have offered the amendment in the form it is for the reason that I understand the Members of the Senate do not care for the photographs of Senators to become a part of the Congressional Directory. It is not so badly needed in the Senate, as there are only 96 Senators and not so many changes every two years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is all right for a good-looking man like the gentleman from Georgia, but where does it apply to a man like myself? [Laughter.]

Mr. EDWARDS. I think the gentleman from Iowa would bring up the average very well.

Mr. COX. How much would this cost?

Mr. EDWARDS. I have not estimated the additional cost.

Mr. BARNHART. It would depend on the size of the photograph. It you used the miniature, it would cost for the cut itself about a dollar. Then there would be a little space required, which would make the volume larger by a few more pages.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand the cost would not exceed $200.

Mr. COX. For each Directory?

Mr. EDWARDS. For each issue of the Directory. The additional cost in a single copy of the Directory would be very small, and it would add very materially to the usefulness of the Directory.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Is the gentleman aware that the Delegate from Hawaii, one of our most striking Members, as well as the Delegate from the other Territory and the Commissioners from the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico would not have their photographs in the Directory under the gentleman's amendment? In other parts of this bill the words "Delegates and Resident Commissioners" are used in connection with the Representatives in Congress, and, for conformity's sake, I suggest the amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS. I should be happy to have them included, because I think it would add to the appearance and usefulness of the Directory. I will ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified in that particular.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia by inserting, after the words "Representatives in Congress," the words "Delegates and Resident Commissioners."

Mr. EDWARDS. I will include that in my amendment, if there is no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. The motive of the gentleman in offering his amendment is to have the Congressional Directory contain these photographs so that a person looking at the photographs would be able to recognize a Member of the House?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes; largely for the purpose of identification.

Mr. FINLEY. Then the gentleman would discriminate against me. Eighteen or twenty years ago I thought I was good enough looking to have a photograph taken. Since then I have not had one taken, and never expect to have another. I should have to stand on my photograph of 20 years ago.

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, I think the gentleman is better looking now than he was 20 years ago, and I am not saying that with any reflection on his appearance 20 years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is this to aid in the identification of Members of the House?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not be better to have their finger prints? [Laughter.]

Mr. EDWARDS. No; I think in some cases it would not be. As I have stated, Mr. Chairman, I offered the amendment in all seriousness, and I hope the House will consider it in that light. It will serve a good purpose. You take the office of the Sergeant at Arms to-day, and he has there the picture of every Member of the House for the purpose of identification, and I believe they should go with a sketch in the Directory so that when the sketch is read it will be considered along with the face of the Member so that those using it will recognize at once the man they are reading about, especially as the sketch and the picture will be associated in the thought and mind of the reader. It will facilitate the business of Congress, and in the long run be in the interest of economy. It will also tend to bring about a closer and earlier acquaintanceship in the early part of each Congress and materially aid new Members in becoming known among their fellows.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia. When the old method prevailed of having desks in this House, and each Member sat in his own seat, it was an easy matter to examine the sketch in the Congressional Directory of the seats and locate the individual Member, but since the desks have been abolished that is impossible.

There was published by a private concern during the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses a book containing the photographs of the Members by States and their names, and in that way the Members could by examining this booklet soon be able to recognize the faces and the names of Members and the States from which they came. There is no doubt in my mind but that it is very greatly to the advantage of the disposition of public business for the Members to know each other, and it certainly contributes to their pleasure to become acquainted. Without a list of photographs of Members such as was published in the previous Congresses, and as the Members do not sit in the same seat all of the time, the pages of the House are hindered in the performance of their duties because they do not know the Members by sight, and the new Members are handicapped in getting acquainted.

I have no doubt that if you were to ask any old Member of this House how many of the new Members he knows he would say he probably did not know one-half of them by sight, while the new Members do not know one-fourth of the membership. It would certainly be very much to the advantage of the transaction of the business of the House if the individual Members knew each other personally, and when a Member rises to speak to know who he is and where he comes from. By having the photograph of the Member inserted opposite the corresponding biography of the Member you could read the biographies and look at the photographs and in that way be able to identify the Members when you meet them on the floor or elsewhere.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does the gentleman think that he could also arrange by putting these photographs on several pages and by twirling them rapidly with the thumb to produce a sort of moving picture so that you could recognize the Member while he is walking on the street?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, this is a serious matter. It is a matter of very great importance that the Members know each other, and the only way they can speedily know each other is to be able to identify them by means of photographs.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman if it would not be a little less expensive to have a plush-covered photograph album containing the photographs at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is another jocular inquiry that I do not care to take the time of the House to answer.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a good deal in what the Member is saying. How expensive would it be to have the printed book we had in another Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That would be more expensive than this. That would cost at least 25 cents a copy. Under the method I propose the cost of an edition of the Directory would be increased only a couple of hundred dollars, possibly less.

Mr. FESS. The other would be more convenient for the Members.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; I do not think so, because you can take your Directory and read about a man, and you examine the photograph at the same time. When you see him you are instantly reminded of some information you have gleaned from his biography—what college he was graduated from, where he was born, and so forth, and you may have something in common about which you can talk with him, and in this way make his acquaintance, which would be mutually enjoyable and advantageous.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. COX. Why not also include the photographs of the Corps of Official Reporters? We deal with them every day. Why not also include the newspaper reporters?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, that is another effort to say something funny. I have discussed this matter informally with about 65 Members of the House, practically all of whom favor the idea, and I have a petition addressed to the Joint Committee on Printing, containing signatures of a large number of Members, asking that this action be taken, which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition referred to is as follows:

We, the undersigned Representatives, believe that the placing of a small photograph of the Senators and Representatives besides their respective sketches in the Congressional Directory would be very desirable for the following reasons, and recommend that this be done in the next edition of the Directory:

First. New Members would be enabled to more quickly identify their colleagues by studying their features while perusing their biographical sketches.

Second. In a body of more than 400 men it is difficult to learn their names and identity, and frequently when a Member arises to speak many inquiries are made by Members of each other as to who the Member is before the fact can be ascertained.

Third. Officials in the departments could more easily recognize the Members and make frequent introductions unnecessary.

Fourth. The Directory would be more valuable from a historical standpoint, and be more attractive and desirable as a public document.

Fifth. The extra expense would be nominal, as many of the cuts would not need to be replaced at the beginning of a new Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. On what subject?

Mr. RAKER. I just want to say a few words on the question of the restriction of immigration and to insert a small article in the RECORD, with a few comments upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an article here printed by the Yreka Journal, published at Yreka, Cal., on April 19, 1916. This journal was established in 1860. It is now published by W. Earl Smith, editor, and F. C. Pollard, manager. The heading of the editorial is "Restricting immigration," and it reads as follows:

For the third time the House of Representatives at Washington has passed the literacy test for immigrants, and now the public is curious to know whether for the third time the bill will be vetoed.

It is well known that both President Taft and President Wilson vetoed the former bills largely on the ground that, in their estimation, Congress did not reflect public opinion in the restriction imposed. But that can no longer be a valid excuse, for there is no doubt that Congress does voice public sentiment.

Much has happened since Congress last passed the literacy test. Europe is at war, and that makes a great difference to this country. Events have shown that a very large percentage of immigrants remain unassimilated, that they are not in full sympathy with American institutions, and that they give to our Government but a qualified allegiance. A nation that fails to assimilate its immigrants suffers from an acute attack of indigestion. This is no fault of the Government, but is due, probably, to too great an influx in a given time of foreigners. It is in the position of a man who has eaten more than he can digest. When a man thus suffers he abstains from eating for a time, or eats but sparingly. It is this fact that leads an increased number of American citizens, anxious for the country's welfare, to ask if it is not better to check immigration for a time, and do it by imposing a literacy test.

Under ordinary conditions the question is important, but it is now of unusual moment in view of the fact that the close of the war will make the immigration problem even more acute than ever. The prospect now is that the end of the war is nearer than seemed possible a few weeks ago, and when it comes it is altogether likely that millions of peasantry and others will seek to escape the burden of crushing taxation by coming to this country. The United States likes to be hospitable, but present conditions make it necessary, judging from congressional action, that the Nation guard its own safety.

Mr. Chairman, these views accord with mine, and I believe it is as clear a presentation as any man could possibly make. And I want to compliment these editors in presenting what seems to me to be the sentiment of the American people upon the present attitude of the Burnett immigration bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment. The Chair will ask the Clerk to report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were reported.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that those same words "Delegates and Resident Commissioners" be added at the end.

Mr. EDWARDS. I consented to that, and unanimous consent was granted that it be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the words indicated by the gentleman from Delaware will be added to the amendment.

The question is, Shall the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] be adopted?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 16.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] demands tellers.

Mr. WALSH. I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. In the first place, the request comes too late; in the second place, it is in the discretion of the Chair. There is no question about there being a quorum

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] demanded tellers, and immediately thereafter made the point of no quorum. He having made the demand for tellers, the question recurs to the demand for tellers.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that the call for tellers was not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The call for tellers was not sustained. There were not enough to get tellers, and the gentleman raised the point of no quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as the record will show, the question was not submitted to the committee as to whether there was a sufficient number to warrant tellers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Chair never submitted the question to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that there be no question about it, the Chair will now entertain the motion for tellers.

Those in favor of tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. COX. The other side, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no other side. The rules provide that 20 Members, one-fifth of a quorum, can demand tellers.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment is disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to offer an amendment, on page 60, lines 10 to 15, to strike out all after the word "stock," in line 10, down to and including the word "Congress," in line 15.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the paragraph has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the chairman of the committee that it was understood at the time that the amendment could be offered.

Mr. BARNHART. Then I withdraw that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 60, line 10, after the word "stock," strike out all the language down to and including the word "Congress," in line 15.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume that the chairman of the committee and the other members of the Committee on Printing who have this bill in charge are perfectly willing, even if they be not particularly anxious, to perfect the bill in accordance with the vote of the House striking out the valuation clause. We all recognize, and recognized at the time that vote was taken, that there would be incidental amendments scattered through the bill. I think the chairman of the committee said there would be about 31 incidental amendments necessary to carry out that principal amendment.

This is one of those amendments, as it strikes me. I have not any pride of opinion or technical knowledge as to whether this is the exact wording that ought to come out, but this is the wording that refers to a charge against the valuation account, which valuation account by the vote of the committee has been eliminated; so that there is now no valuation account to which these particular documents can be charged.

I take it that this particular amendment, therefore, ought to prevail without question. But in order to save the time of the committee, and in order to be fair with the Committee on Printing, it seems to me that the question might resolve itself down into changes to be from time to time suggested by the committee itself as to what is necessary in that regard.

I find here a provision that certain documents shall be charged against a valuation account. The valuation account that was carried in the preceding page has been eliminated. There is now no valuation account to which that particular charge might be carried; so that as to this particular amendment, it seems to me the House is in a position to adopt it, if it adheres to its own views on that subject of valuation account.

I have not any other argument to advance in favor of the language except that; but I will ask the chairman of the committee whether that would not be his view, that the committee itself could make and offer these amendments as we went along?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has asked the question of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and in reply it is only fair to the members of the committee to say to the gentleman from Missouri, who will probably stand sponsor for the bill in its present condition, he being one of the comparatively few men who have been the means of defeating this bill providing for giving the House what it wants and giving the people the documents they need, and besides saving $125,000 a year. The committee would not be true to itself if it did not feel, after having formulated a plan whereby all these things could be accomplished, while the gentleman from Missouri has stood in opposition, that it will be necessary for the gentleman from Missouri to go ahead and perfect his plan along this line; and if the House decides that is the course, the Committee on Printing will certainly agree to it. The Committee on Printing, having gone into this undertaking as far as it has and believing that the plan is right, can not consistently be a party to any other course.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Missouri can not proceed, except by unanimous consent. He has already had five minutes, speaking to his amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to reply to what the gentleman from Indiana has said. It seems to be a personal matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to expedite the consideration of the bill, but——

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to do so, too. I would not make a personal matter of legislation. I would resign my seat in Congress if I thought I would ever make a personal matter of public legislation. I never have done so, and I do not for a moment admit the imputation that I have prevented this House from doing what it chose to do in public business. I could not do anything in this House unless a majority of the Members who saw fit to come here and vote voted with me. I deny that I have prevented anybody from saving $125,000 or any other sum for the Government or that I have ever voted against a proposition of economy that seemed to be a genuine proposition of economy. Never knowingly have I ever done so, and I deny that I insisted on the House defeating a bill that the House did not want to defeat. [Applause.]

It is utterly impossible for me to do so. As a matter of fact, every Member of this House knows that the chairman of a committee in charge of the bill has all of the weight of precedents and votes on his side, and that a man who opposes a chairman of a committee has thrust upon him the burden of proof and the laboring oar to make the slightest change against the wishes of the chairman of a committee. That has been universally true in this House. To say that a man can, alone and single-handed, defeat the will of this House, as against the will of the chairman of the committee, is contrary to all of the precedents that have existed in the eight years I have been here, and, so far as I know, for a century before that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I can not yield. A chairman of a committee, by virtue of the long precedent established here, has the deciding voice in case of doubt, and Members who know nothing of a matter and who come in for the first time to vote are inclined in case of doubt to sustain the chairman in all cases, and only in a very clear case will they vote against a chairman.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I will not yield at this time. And yet the chairman of the Committee on Printing, having all the advantage of support on this side, having an organized committee, says that I can, single handed, get this House to defeat its own will. It is the most astounding statement I ever heard of. Now, the gentleman attributes virtues to his bill that it does not possess. That is the only difficulty about him.

I recognize the fact that he has been very much interested in the framing of this legislation and has put into it a great deal of mental effort and physical toil, and I recognize and am willing to concede to him, whether he is willing to concede to me or not, that he is perfectly sincere in his advocacy of his side of the proposition. But legislation is a matter of agreement of minds, and the gentleman must recognize that if other minds do not agree with him, they may have reasons that are sufficient unto themselves.

Now I call for a vote.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] as one of the steps necessary to be taken in the perfection of the bill, in view of the action of the committee in striking out the first paragraph of section 50. I fully agree with him that the duty devolves upon the chairman of the committee to make these corrections, and I am surprised that the chairman of the committee shows ill feeling and is refusing to be guided by the action of the committee. It is in keeping, though, with the statements he made a few moments ago in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, my colleague [Mr. BEAKES], who pointed out that this method of proceeding, as outlined by the bill, would not result in economy. The chairman of the committee charged my colleague with representing sweatshops, and charged him with representing private interests, and otherwise indulged in a cheap kind of talk. It seems to me that the Committee of the Whole can control this bill, and if the chairman of the committee does not choose to follow its direction, the committee itself can do it.

Mr. BLACK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. When this bill is reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, will it not then be in order to call for a separate vote on the Borland amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it will.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of this committee feels that the castigation just delivered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is not worthy of his attention, because the chairman of the committee understands, and the members of the committee understand, what this opposition from certain members of the Michigan delegation means. They know and I know what it means. I do not know that there is anything wrong about it. They are probably standing up for the interests of some citizens of the State of Michigan, and that is their own privilege. So far as the reference of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is concerned to what I have said, I did say that the gentleman from Missouri had led the opposition which terminated in what the members of the Committee on Printing felt was a lack of courtesy to them, for the reason that the intervening motion made by the gentleman from Missouri cut out the possibility of the committee presenting to the House the real merits of the amendment which was cut out, or of the section of the bill. Therefore I said, without any disrespect to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], that it looked to me that the effort of the gentleman from Missouri to defeat this section meant an effort to defeat the thing for which the bill stands. I do not believe that there was any personal offense. I surely did not mean it. I have nothing to say in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. I have always considered him a friend and I want to continue so to consider him. I hope that the chairman of this committee has been patient and enduring, and I know that the committee itself has been industrious in trying to perfect this bill; and if the chairman of the committee has said anything in the course of this proceeding that has been personally offensive to anyone, he certainly did not mean it so. He does not believe that he has, because he has tried to be guarded and fair and gentlemanly, both in the consideration of the bill for some 19 days at a preceding session, and in what was done last Thursday, when the chairman yielded to the unusual request of all who asked it to turn back to sections of the bill which had already been passed.

The chairman does not understand how he could have been any fairer than he has been in the presentation of this bill, but he does insist that the motion made and industriously supported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] forestalled the members of this committee and prevented their presenting the real merits of this bill, and cut us out of the possibility of presenting them.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. BARNHART. I must decline to yield.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will be fair enough to state that I voted against the motion to close debate.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman did not yield to me, and I can not yield to him.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Indiana made the motion that debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] close in five minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. I voted for the motion that debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] should terminate in five minutes, but not on the motion that debate on the whole paragraph should end in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, there is no man in the House of Representatives for whom I have more respect than the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Indiana. I have been a printer in my lifetime, and I know what printing is. When I stood up here and placed my opinion against his as to whether this bill saved or lost money, he charged, first, that I represented a contractor in my district. When I told him I did not, he said that I represented one in my State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make it plain to this House and plain to the gentleman from Indiana that I know of no contractor for printing Government supplies in the State of Michigan. There may be, but I do not know of him. I have never seen or been approached in any shape or form by any contractor that has a contract with the Government for printing. Furthermore, the gentleman from Indiana has been a printer himself. He probably has a different idea of what the word "sweatshop" means than have I; but I would like to ask him to point out where in this broad land of ours in the printing trade there is what is known as a sweatshop. A sweatshop is a place in a tenement, where work is taken home to be done under distressing conditions.

The printing trade has the most highly organized trade-union in the country, and many of these bids which have been made for the Government and which the Government has accepted have been made by contractors who are working under union printing laws with union printing labor. The only reason why they can make a better contract with the Government than the Government can with itself is because special work requires special machines operated by specially trained men. Now, if the Government gets the machinery it has got to obtain specially trained men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were 15 ayes and 21 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(7) Navy Yearbook: Provided, That not to exceed 1,000 copies may be printed for the Navy Department and not to exceed 500 copies for the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee, now that the valuation clause is stricken from the bill, if it is possible under this provision for a Member of Congress to get a Navy Year Book or obtain one outside of the Naval Committee?

Mr. BARNHART. That has been provided for and is covered by the Borland amendment.

Mr. BEAKES. This provides for extra Year Books over the present law?

Mr. BARNHART. That is the misfortune of the gentleman from Michigan that I was not allowed to make a further explanation. A Member of Congress under the valuation plan, which the committee did not believe in, would give the gentleman from Michigan or any other Member any kind of a public document he wanted.

Mr. BEAKES. The gentleman does not understand my question. This committee has knocked out the valuation scheme, and we have the old law established. We are talking about the old law. Here is a provision that 500 books shall be printed for the Naval Committee; is that an increase or a decrease?

Mr. BARNHART. That is the same number the committee has had heretofore.

Mr. BORLAND. These are the copies given to the Navy Department and the Naval Committees of the House and Senate. It does not refer to the copies for the Members of the House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Since the valuation clause has been stricken out, is it the policy of the chairman to strike out other portions that refer to that clause and return to the old system or to leave the bill in such fix that there will be a conflict of provisions?

Mr. BARNHART. For the information of the gentleman from Georgia, I will say that it is the intention of the committee, when we go back into the House, to have the membership of the House vote on the Borland amendment. That is the fair way to reach an understanding on this matter of valuation. If it is all stricken out, the law would evidently stand as it does now, because nothing would be done in another branch of Congress, but inasmuch as I stated once before—I do not know that the gentleman from Georgia was present—if the Committee of the Whole wishes to perfect the bill in relation to the valuation, the committee will offer no objection. If this should be all changed and we go into the House and reestablish the section providing for the valuation plan, then in the House we would have to take up 30 or 40 amendments.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman is operating on the idea that the House, when he gets a record vote, will go back to the gentleman's system and refuse to reform the bill in accordance with the wishes of the House at the present time.

Mr. BARNHART. If the House should reestablish it, it would involve less work, and if it does not, the probability is that the bill would be lost.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If you leave this bill in the Committee of the Whole in the shape it is now, conforming to the valuation plan, then you will have the section providing for the valuation plan stricken out and the balance of the bill providing for the machinery for the valuation plan instead of the present law system.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Georgia is hardly consistent in insisting that the committee knows what will be done.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will tell the gentleman what I think the committee should do. I think the committee should follow the instructions of the House at this time and perfect it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Printing is willing to proceed. It has offered no obstruction whatever.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. I want to call the attention of the committee to the method under which we are proceeding here. We voted awhile ago by a vote of 61 to something less than 50 to change the method of publication allotment proposed in the bill, the valuation method, and leave it as it is under the old method. That is an amendment upon which, when we get into the House, we can have a separate vote. If the House reverses the work of the Committee of the Whole by refusing to adopt that amendment, and we proceed here as we did a little while ago, refusing to make changes in accordance with the vote of the committee, when we voted to cling to the old method—if we refuse to perfect this bill in accordance with that change, then we are in the House unable to do a single thing with this bill. It fails if in the House you refuse to accept the work of the Committee of the Whole. I want to ask the chairman a question. Is it the purpose of the chairman upon that parliamentary maneuver to make the work of this committee absolutely nugatory?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly not.

Mr. FESS. What will the gentleman do in case the House adopts the amendment referred to?

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] must remember that this Committee of the Whole has within the last hour taken two directly opposite positions, and, according to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] said, the Printing Committee can not prevent the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from doing it. The Committee of the Whole House voted to strike out the section providing for the valuation plan, and since that time twice this same Committee of the Whole House has voted to refuse to make these changes.

Mr. FESS. And the chairman voted with that side of the committee.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The chairman remained sitting in his seat, and did not vote at all on a standing vote.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, we have no record; but I looked to see whether the chairman voted on that measure, and if the chairman says he did not vote, then I will specifically state that my eyes failed me.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a great deal better and more magnanimous on the part of the chairman of this committee, after the Committee of the Whole House has instructed that this valuation plan be stricken from the bill, to go ahead and tell the House what is in the bill that should be stricken out to conform to the old system.

Mr. FESS. I will state to the gentleman that the truth about the matter is that we are proceeding, according to this last vote, upon the plan to make all of the work of this committee nugatory. We can not do anything when we get back into the House if when we get there we refuse to accept this amendment, if in committee we refuse to perfect the bill in accordance with the amendment. I am wondering whether that is the purpose. There is no possible object in getting this bill adopted in the House if you refuse now in the committee to perfect it in accordance with the amendment which we have adopted, unless you reject that amendment in the House; and I want to know whether that is the procedure to be followed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. We can recommit it and go back to the committee if we want to; but that is a most unusual procedure and not at all probable.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to move to rise in a few moments, and pending the motion to rise, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Printing wants to again impress on the membership of the House that he said that since the vote was taken on the elimination of the section referred to the Committee of the Whole House has twice refused by vote to strike out these provisions that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said would have to go out. That leaves the Committee on Printing as helpless as it does the gentleman from Ohio, who wants to strike out the whole provision. If the Committee of the Whole now goes ahead and leaves the bill as it is, and the vote of the House reestablishes the provision for the valuation, well and good, and we are all right. If it does not, then we are all wrong. If we go ahead and perfect it upon the other plan and then the House decides to reestablish the valuation plan, then we will have to go over the whole matter in the House, a probable impossibility. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SISSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8664) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, owing to the fact that the next call on Calendar Wednesday carries a committee that has an important matter, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Printing may have Calendar Wednesday of two weeks from to-day for the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 27, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I have here some letters and some telegrams sent to me which I think might be of interest to the Senate and to the people. I first want to offer about a thousand letters which I received some time in February and ask to have the Secretary read one of them. They are all identical.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To read one. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MONTELLO, WIS., February 14, 1916.

Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a citizen of the State of Wisconsin, I am addressing this appeal to you, as my representative in the upper House of Congress, to support the resolution placing an embargo upon the further shipment of arms and ammunition to the belligerent nations of Europe.

I note in the public prints that you are pointing to the speech delivered by United States Senator REED on January 10 and that you are quoted as writing to your constituents that the position he (Senator REED) takes on the question of an embargo "exactly expresses" your sentiment in the matter and that the arguments he advances appear to you to be unanswerable.

May I call your attention to the editorial printed in the Milwaukee Free Press Wednesday morning, January 12, and may I take the liberty of asking you to point out to me where the Free Press and not Senator REED is in the wrong?

May I also ask, as the Free Press asks, why Senator REED did not point out that the Wilson administration had all along the weapon with which to bring Great Britain to time—the threat of an embargo on arms and ammunition?

May I also call your attention to the fact that Senator REED is reported as saying in his Milwaukee speech that "unless England makes reparation for confiscation of American goods" and unless this "will have effect within 60 days" he will be one of the first to vote for an embargo, and may I ask if you are joining with Senator REED in voicing this declaration?

I would point out to you that the large majority of the Wisconsin congressional delegation is in favor of the embargo resolution. Senator LA FOLLETTE is for it and Congressmen CARY, BROWNE, STAFFORD, BURKE, ESCH, KONOP, and COOPER are reported for it, and I feel that these men are convinced that their constituents want an embargo, and with this the situation in our State, I repeat my request that you give the embargo resolution your support.

I am very earnest in making this plea to you and ask that you be good enough to favor me with a reply. If you will do so I would like to have you give me some facts supporting your stand against the embargo other than your general reference to general statements that may have appeared in the newspapers.

Thanking you for an early reply, I am,

Very truly, yours, GUSTAV WESELOH.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I also received in due course of mail a letter which I hold in my hand not addressed to me but evidently sent to me by some one whose name appears in the left-hand corner. I should like to have the Secretary read it, omitting the name in the left-hand corner.

ALL READY FOR THE SIGNATURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE,
139 North Clark Street, Chicago, February 9, 1916.

DEAR SIR: Taking the liberty of assuming that you are heartily in favor of any move that might hasten the end of the war and the slaughter of humans in Europe, and that theretore you are in favor of the movement to have an embargo declared upon the further shipment of arms and ammunition to any of the belligerents, we are taking the liberty of writing to you and asking whether you will join with us in the effort being made to induce United States Senator PAUL O. HUSTING, of your State, to join with practically all of the other members of the Wisconsin congressional delegation in their work to bring about such an embargo.

Believing that you feel with the hundreds of thousands of our members that the United States should at least have no hand in the war, and should not be reaping a harvest of blood-stained money, and that you stand for a real and genuine neutrality for this Nation, we are sending you with this letter some letters addressed to Senator HUSTING.

These letters are ready to be dated and signed and then should be placed in separate envelopes and mailed as personal letters to Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

We would be glad if you were able to get some of the voters to write personal letters, but the big thing is to have all letters possible sent to Mr. HUSTING at the earliest possible moment.

If you think it would be a better plan to have all of the letters signed and then left with you and you would then have them forwarded in separate envelopes to Senator HUSTING, we would consider this a very great assistance on your part and would be very glad to reimburse you for the postage and envelopes.

We sincerely hope that you are with this effort to secure the embargo and that you will do all in your power to aid the movement. If you could use more of the letters, please let us know, and we will forward you as many as you think you can have signed. We are sending you a circular letter showing you the latest developments in the campaign.

Will you please be good enough to let us know just what assistance in this manner you can give us?

Thanking you for giving this your attention, we are, with best wishes,

Very sincerely, yours,

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE,
WILL R. MACDONALD, Secretary.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I received these letters in February, and also this one. I did not then appreciate the full significance of it. I did not believe, or at least I thought it would not be advisable for me to bring it to the attention of the Senate. I thought perhaps that the matter might die out; that there was no need of stirring up the undertow of our foreign relations with another country. I understood it was the policy not to discuss these matters. I am in hearty accord with that policy; but, in connection with what has been happening recently and is happening now, I consider it quite relevant now to discuss the matter, especially because of this telegraphic campaign that is now being carried on in opposition to the Government's position.

In this letter it will be noticed there are several things which are quite significant, especially that part calling on the Wisconsin Senator to make him line up and work with the rest of the Wisconsin delegation; and it shows that that campaign was carried out with some thoroughness, because I have had about 1,000 identical letters sent to me. These letters are printed with my address on them. They are all identical. There is no difference between them, even to the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." The date and the place of signature are left blank, but aside from that the letter is absolutely complete, and the purpose is quite clearly stated in this letter; that is, to get me to line up with the rest of Wisconsin's representatives.

This emanated from Chicago, not from Wisconsin; and thus these thousand letters were placed in the hands of Wisconsin citizens for them to express, not their own sentiments, but the sentiments of some bureau or bureau clerk in Chicago, and back of him the person or institution or influence fomenting the propaganda and paying the bills.

Further he states as follows:

These letters are ready to be dated and signed, and then should be placed in separate envelopes and mailed as personal letters to Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, United States Senator, Washington, D. C., designating them as "personal letters."

It shows the intention to deceive the representative from Wisconsin in the belief that he was getting the personal sentiments of Wisconsin citizens.

I must confess that they were not paying their representative a very good compliment when they thought he would be deceived into the belief that they were personal letters, because these thousand letters were all printed on the same paper, with the same contents, and with the same appearance, and sent in envelopes duly stamped and which were identical in appearance and substance. The clerks in my office knew the contents before they ever opened them by the appearance of the envelopes; but at least the intent was there to deceive.

Now, they also urged you to get some of your neighbors to write personal letters to the Senator, but the big thing is to have all the letters sent to Mr. HUSTING at the earliest possible moment.

At that time there was a good deal of talk about an embargo. I think it was about the time when the embargo petitions were exhibited here in the Senate, and it was considered to be a good time to influence and overwhelm a representative of Wisconsin. Now, they make a further suggestion:

If you think it would be a better plan to have all of the letters signed and then left with you, and you would then have them forwarded in separate envelopes to Senator HUSTING, we would consider this a very great assistance on your part, and would be very glad to reimburse you for the postage and envelopes.

All they wanted was to have our citizens express the sentiments of the propagandists, and they were willing to pay the bills! All they asked of the citizens of Wisconsin was their cooperation in attempting to deceive their Senator!

The supply of letters was inexhaustible. As you will observe from the letter, they agree to send as many more as their correspondents might be able to secure signatures for. The supply was equal to the number of all citizens who were willing to put their hand down to a manufactured letter which they could sign and put it into an envelope which had already been addressed and with a stamp that had already been paid for.

Here is more that is significant:

We are sending you a circular letter showing you the latest developments in the campaign.

What campaign? The campaign of the American Embargo Conference and those back of that conference, a campaign of intimidation, a campaign to influence a representative of the people of the United States to vote against his own convictions!

THE SUBSIDIZED TELEGRAMS.

Now, as I said, these letters date back as far as February. I did not think it worth while to bring that to the attention of the Senate then, but some things are now occurring which come from the same malevolent source as the letters, which bear the same label, are of the same handiwork, initiated by the same influences, paid by the same money.

I have been favored with a great many telegrams from constituents in Wisconsin, and when I know that those telegrams are sent in good faith and are an honest expression of an honest opinion I think they are entitled to a great deal of respect and consideration. This is a country where everyone has a right not only to believe but to express his personal belief and to petition Congress at all times. But I began to receive these telegrams in such numbers and found such striking similarity between them, notwithstanding identical dates and from places far distant from one another, that I took the trouble to have my secretary inspect telegrams of other Senators. I took the liberty of having my secretary examine hundreds of telegrams received by Senators all over the United States, and there have been plenty of them introduced here, and I found this to be the fact, that telegrams emanating from places thousands of miles apart and dated on the same day were identical in form even to repeating an error which I found in the telegraphic forms which I shall hereafter show you.

These were dated April 24 from States like Wisconsin, and, for that matter, from many points in Wisconsin, 200 or 300 miles apart, from Illinois, from Missouri, from Indiana, from New York, from Ohio, are not only similar in character but absolutely identical word for word, and as I have said before, repeating grammatical errors in the original form. I have assorted these telegrams and have taken them from the above-named States and find them in the various forms in identical terms. I have them here, and for the purpose of not confusing them I have numbered them. Here is No. 1. It comes from Norwalk, Wis., dated April 25, addressed to "Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.":

Your constituents urge and expect you to stand like a rock against the passing frenzy of insane and criminal folly on the part of the small portion of interested persons who are clamoring for war. We want peace. Nothing warrants any other action.

Apparently a spontaneous conviction passing into the mind of some constituent, and, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, it would naturally indicate his own sentiments. But here we have one from Fond du Lac, bearing the same date, saying:

Your constituents urge and expect you to stand like a rock against the passing frenzy of insane and criminal folly on the part of the small portion of interested persons who are clamoring for war. We want peace. Nothing warrants any other action.

Here is one from another part of the State to the same effect. I will read some a little later.

Here is No. 2, from West Salem, Wis.:

Will you let me reassure you that the great majority of your constituents stand for peace, believe war now unnecessary and uncalled for, and will resent being participated into the European conflict?

Will you let me reassure you that the great majority of your constituents stand for peace, believe war now unnecessary and uncalled for, and will resent being participated into the European conflict?

Here are two others with the word "participated," repeating the mistake of the man who sat in his office in Chicago and made a slip over the typewriter or did not know how to spell "precipitated."

Here is No. 3:

As to-day's reports indicate that this country is likely to be rushed into the European war, let me assure you that I and your constituents who will be the real sufferers will bitterly resent anything but calm action, and calm action means peace continuing.

That was on April 25. Here is one from St. Louis, dated April 25, which I shall read—telegram No. 3:

As to-day's reports indicate that this country is likely to be rushed into the European war, let me assure you that I and your constituents will be the real sufferers, and will bitterly resent anything but calm action, and calm action means peace continuing.

St. Louis and Wisconsin! Fond du Lac and Missouri!

Here is No. 4: I want to call your attention to it. I will read these telegrams, because of all of the telegrams coming from most small towns no two are alike. They did not give the same telegram to the same man in the same small town, but had a collection of telegrams, and gave each one to a different man in the same town, of course, so that their representatives could not discover that there was any concerted action there; but to make it appear that these telegrams were a spontaneous expression of something that had just occurred to each separately because of recent events. Before I get through I want to show the Senate how these things were provided and arranged for. Now, here is another:

Other constitutents of yours join with me in informing you that we believe the great masses of the people resent being dragged into war, that we must consider unnecessary. We appeal to you to lift your voice in opposing steps leading to war.

Here is another from another State far away:

Other constituents of yours join with me in informing you that we believe the great masses of the people resent being dragged into war, that we must consider unnecessary. We appeal to you to lift your voice in opposing steps leading to war.

Here is form No. 5 from Milwaukee; here is one from Fond du Lac; here is another one from a State far away, in identical language:

Your constituents joining with me in sending this message are deeply alarmed by rumors that this country is near to being plunged into the European war. You know your constituents want peace, and we emphatically urge that you so express our sentiments. We know we can depend upon you.

That is from Kewaunee; another one from Fond du Lac; one from St. Nazianz; one from Wausau; one from Ripon, Wis., and one from Illinois and several from other States. I will just read one:

Your constituents joining with me in sending this message are deeply alarmed by rumors that this country is near to being precipitated into the European war. You know your constituents want peace, and we emphatically urge that you so express our sentiments. We know we can depend upon you.

I want to call the Senate's attention particularly to this question of rumors, because the rumors, apparently from the text of these telegrams, are of recent origin. There is another telegram from Fond du Lac containing form No. 6. Here is another one in what are called forms No. 7 and No. 8.

I have refrained from reading all of these telegrams, but those sorted according to number are absolutely identical in form, and I am informed by other Senators that telegrams identical in form have come from points all over the United States.

MADE-TO-ORDER "RUMORS OF WAR."

It is true that if the people of the United States were suddenly alarmed by rumors that were being spread by an intention on the part of this Government to plunge us into war, it might be alarming, and we would not be surprised to be overwhelmed with telegrams expressing the sentiment of the people—and it is the sentiment of the people—that they do not want any war. But the cruelty and the cunning of these telegrams is that they were framed perhaps weeks ahead of this crisis, a. I shall show you later, and the foul thought is being implanted in the minds of United States citizens, and citizens of my State, and I have no doubt in the minds of other citizens, that this administration is, in fact, seeking to plunge this country into war. But what will you say of conduct, what will you say of a practice, which puts into the mouths of honest, decent citizens of my State and of the United States words and suspicions that are not founded on fact, but founded on something that has been handed to them by some one else living away out of the State, by some party, hired by who knows what or whom?

After all, I want to cover this matter as fully as possible, and I hope that I shall not say anything that will in any way embarrass our Government in this matter. The only purpose of my dwelling upon this subject at all is merely in the interest of peace. I believe that the best way to preserve peace is for the people of the United States to get right squarely back of their Government and to sustain that Government in every crisis which comes to it; and I am only talking now in the hope of exposing a plot which, in its very nature, if long continued must bring us into serious trouble—if not with foreign countries, with the people of our own country. It is high time that the people who are being duped should know that they are being duped; that the masks be torn from the faces of those who pretend to be in the interest of peace, and in the garb of a peacemaker are endeavoring to stir up dissension and insurrection in our own country by these methods; and these methods are calculated to bring about that very result.

After collecting these telegrams, thinking that I had made a fairly satisfactory showing, at least to myself, I was fortunate enough to have presented to me some things which throw additional light on this campaign which is being now carried on. You have seen the articles in the World, in the Times, and in some of the other papers—the Herald, I believe, the Sun, and other New York papers—you have seen there that a certain secretary of the American Embargo Conference asked the newspaper men to give him publicity. I understand that the very man who asked them to give him such publicity is the man who stated that he was going to "pull off," so I have been reliably informed, "the biggest publication stunt that was ever pulled off in the United States." This secretary is the secretary, or at least is connected with the concern which I hope to show you not only sends out these telegrams, but which does something more, namely, pays for them.

I hold in my hand an original copy of blank-form telegrams. From a letter which I shall hereafter read you will learn that this blank telegraphic form was sent from the American Embargo Conference, located at Chicago. I am going to read this blank telegraphic form together with the directions at the top, and by comparing these forms with telegrams I have just read you will observe that Telegram No. 1 is identical with Form No. 1, that Telegram No. 2 is identical with Form No. 2, and so forth.

THE FORM TELEGRAMS.

Now, telegrams that have been received by various Members of Congress almost invariably follow the form of the "form" telegrams on the following sheet, even repeating typographical and grammatical errors of the form.

Here is the sheet of blank-form telegrams:

Please sign one of these telegrams and have voters each sign one telegram. Cross off the telegrams that are not signed and then hold this sheet until we wire you to telegraph it. Then please send it without delay.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HUSTING. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, in line with the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, I want simply to state in this connection that I received this morning a number of telegrams dated at Kansas City, Mo., but evidently most of the signers residing in Kansas City, Kans., 35 of the telegrams being identical with No. 1, which the Senator has read; 27 of them being identical with No. 2; 15 of them being identical with No. 3; 9 being identical with No. 4; 30 identical with No. 5; and 20 corresponding identically with No. 6, showing clearly that they were inspired from the same source as those received by the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in the telegrams coming from small towns, he found any two alike or whether they were not different telegrams?

Mr. THOMPSON. These all came from the same place, being dated at Kansas City, Mo.; but I am acquainted with most of the signers, and they reside in Kansas City, Kans. I have only one little, lone telegram from an outside town, evidently voluntarily sent by the sender himself, as it is couched in entirely different language.

Mr. GORE. No. 5 seems to be the favorite.

WHO HAS KEPT THE PEACE?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes; No. 5 seems to be the favorite.

It was rumored that the Republic might be plunged into war. Rumored when? To read these telegrams it would appear that the rumor had just started; that word had just gone out that the President of the United States desired to plunge this country into war, when, as a matter of fact, the telegrams had been lying on the desks of the senders for weeks, and perhaps months, waiting for the time when they should be rushed to the telegraph office and be sent to Senators and Representatives in Congress at a time which they then already anticipated would come, as though they were the creation of the moment, as though they were expressing the opinion of the moment.

The President had kept us out of war under the most trying and difficult circumstances for nearly a year and a half. Who else has helped to keep us out of war thus far? Certainly not the belligerent powers, who have trampled upon our rights, who have killed our citizens on the high seas, and who are now obstructing our commerce. Nor have their sympathizers kept us out of war. Our rights have been violated by all of the belligerent nations, by the entente allies as well as the Germanic allies. Suffice it to say that our rights have been trampled upon and a hundred things have occurred, each one of them sufficient under ordinary circumstances and conditions to have precipitated us into war, if instead of a peace-loving President we would have had an impulsive and warlike President, and yet we have had no war. Who kept us out of war? Who was here from March 4, 1915, until December, 1915, to bear the heavy responsibility of maintaining our honor and keeping the peace? Congress was not in session. There were no warning resolutions; there was no necessity to warn the President; there is no necessity to warn him now to keep us out of war. There was an attempt made here to warn our citizens from traveling on the high seas, because such action on their part might perchance get us into trouble with Germany; but I should like to know whether the same men—and I am speaking of the country at large—who favored warning our citizens not to travel upon the high seas for fear we might thereby become involved in trouble with some foreign Government would have been or are now in favor of issuing a warning to the shippers of the products of this country—cotton, wheat, wool, anything, if you please—not to ship their goods across the high seas for fear that it would get us into trouble! Who would have had us warn our citizens to abandon all of our commerce for fear we might get into trouble with the other powers? It was the administration now representing our Government that has kept us at peace, as all the world knows!

POISONERS OF PUBLIC OPINION.

I am only saying this in passing, because the President of the United States has exerted every patriotic effort that he could to keep us out of trouble, and I resent it as a base insinuation and foul slander upon our Government for anyone to intimate or charge that the President of the United States has any idea in his mind except to preserve the peace of this country, if he can do so with honor to ourselves.

And what shall we say of a conspiracy financed by money from some mysterious source to slander and to bring the President of the United States into the hatred and contempt of his fellow citizens in the manner referred to?

So I say we have a peace-loving President, who has been criticized, on the one hand, because he is too peace loving, who has kept us out of war all this time, and, on the other hand, we find him charged, through the instrumentality of some organization, using the citizens of this country as its messengers, with attempting to plunge this Nation into the maelstrom of war. Here we find a deep-laid plot to poison the minds of his fellow citizens all over the country into the belief that the President wants war when every fact gives the lie to such assertion!

I say this is being done by this mysterious "embargo conference," this embargo conspiracy, I have not gotten through with it yet; and I want to come to the point now of showing conclusively to any fair mind that this propaganda, these 200,000 telegrams, are not only being sent out from a common head but they are being paid for by this same head.

THE TELL-TALE LETTER.

You will notice at the head of this blank form the holders are instructed to procure signers at once and hold the same subject to further orders, and I have already shown that these must have been in the hands of holders, who appear to have been part of the organization, for weeks or perhaps months. The word came to these procurers in the letters of April 24, namely, Monday of this week, as will appear from one of these letters which I will read into the RECORD and comment on in detail.

APRIL 24, 1916.

DEAR SIR: Feeling confident that as one of the patriotic citizens of the United States you are anxious to see this country held out of the present terrible war in Europe, we are making this extraordinary appeal to you because we know from the most positive information that is possible to be obtained at this time that the situation warrants it.

We can not find words strong enough to tell you of the gravity of the situation, and we assure you in the most earnest manner possible that the only way in which this country can keep from becoming involved is an immediate and great expression of the real sentiment of the people of the country who want peace.

We also most solemnly assure you that it is too late to mail an expression of this sentiment to Washington. It must be telegraphed. We have prepared night-letter telegrams that are ready to be signed by the voters. At the top of these sheets we asked that you hold these sheets until we give you notice to telegraph them. Now, we ask that you have the night letters signed as rapidly as possible and that you send them from the telegraph offices without a moment's delay.

Do not wait for any further word from us. Conditions are now even more serious and the messages should be sent at once. They should all be in Washington by Wednesday.

We beg that you will realize how grave we consider the situation to be when we assure you that we are to pay for all of the messages. All that we urge you to do is to get the telegrams signed and send them at once. Then send the bills to us and a check will be mailed to you immediately. We know what you have done in the past to help keep this country in a neutral position, and we know that at this, the most critical time in the diplomatic negotiations, you will not fail to act for us.

Only believe that our information is of the best and send the telegrams now. Please let us depend upon you in this crisis.

Thanking you for what we know you will do and repeating the assurance that we will pay for all expenses incurred, we beg to remain,

Most earnestly, yours,

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE.

You will observe that the letterhead on the above letter is the same as the letterhead on the letter I received in February. Now you have heard the letter read. Let me call your attention to some of the details of this letter.

Let me call your attention to this:

We can not find words strong enough to tell you of the gravity of the situation, and we assure you in the most earnest manner possible that practically the only thing that will keep this country from becoming involved is an immediate and great expression of the real sentiment of the people of the country who want peace. We also most solemnly assure you that it is too late to mail an expression of this sentiment to Washington. It must be telegraphed—

I am reading now from this circular letter dated April 24, 1916, last Monday. It says, "It is too late to mail"—

It must be telegraphed. We have prepared night letter telegrams that are ready to be signed by the voters. At the top of these sheets we asked that you hold these sheets until we gave you notice to telegraph them.

Let me read further:

We also most solemnly assure you that it is too late to mail an expression of this sentiment to Washington. It must be telegraphed. We have prepared night-letter telegrams that are ready to be signed by the voters. At the top of these sheets we asked that you hold these sheets until we gave you notice to telegraph them. Now we ask that you have the night letters signed as rapidly as is possible and that you send them from the telegraph offices without a moment's delay. Don't wait for any further word from us. Conditions are now even more serious and the messages should be sent at once. They should all be in Washington by Wednesday—

The flood of telegrams that came in yesterday was in response to the American Embargo Conference, sitting at Chicago, and directing the transmission of hundreds of thousands of telegrams all over the United States, identical in terms, and all prepared in advance and held subject to order as directed. I read further:

We beg that you will realize how grave we consider the situation to be when we assure you that we are to pay for all of the messages. All that we urge you to do is to get the telegrams signed and send them at once. Then send the bills to us and a check will be mailed to you immediately. We know what you have done in the past to help keep this country in a neutral position, and we know that at this the most critical time in the diplomatic negotiations you will not fail to act for us.

Now, just for a moment let us take up this expression:

We know what you have done in the past to help * * * us.

What does that indicate? It indicates that previous orders of this kind have gone out and have been duly executed by these same men who are now procuring the execution and sending of these telegrams.

We know what you have done in the past * * * the most critical time in the diplomatic negotiations.

Now, listen to this, Senators:

Only believe that our information is of the best and send the telegrams now. Please let us depend upon you in this crisis.

Thanking you for what we know you will do and repeating the assurance that we will pay for all expense incurred, we beg to remain,

Most earnestly, yours,

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE.

WHO PAYS THE BILLS?

Now, just note this phrase:

We know what you have done in the past to help keep this country in a neutral position, and we know that at this, the most critical time in the diplomatic negotiations, you will not fail to act for us.

Who is "us"? I want to say now that it should be determined, by an investigation of some kind, who is "us." Who pays for these telegrams? Who pays for this bureau? Who pays for the man they get to fetch and carry in every little hamlet in the country? Who is "us" who puts this foul stuff into the mouths, the hearts, and the hands of the President's fellow citizens? I want to know who "us" is. I want to know who is paying for the couple of hundred thousands of telegrams. If there is any proper tribunal, any proper department, any proper committee of any kind, let them find out who "us" is, and find out who is paying these bills, and find out how they are acting for "us"—American citizens employed to act for "us," as though there were some outside force wanted to be helped at the hands of American citizens.

I shall not stop to read these newspapers, but one of them says here:

"By noon to-day," said one of the officers, "50,000 telegrams will have been sent from Chicago, 25,000 from St. Louis, 20,000 from Cincinnati, 20,000 from Milwaukee, 15,000 from Detroit, 15,000 from Cleveland, and lesser amounts from smaller cities throughout the country."

Messages running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars are being sent out of Chicago from the embargo conference, expressly worded to give them the appearance of a spontaneous expression of public sentiment, when in fact they have been deliberately procured and have been lying in cold storage for a month or more.

WHY THIS PROPAGANDA?

There are some other things that I should like to know. I should like to know what this person means by saying "our information is of the best." The United States had sent its message to Germany. There was nothing more to be given out from Washington, from the White House, and here they say that this is "the gravest crisis in the history of all our negotiations," and that their "information is of the best." Are they already foretelling, I want to know, the reply that we are going to get to our note? Do they pretend to know what Germany is going to do in reply to our note? Why, what is the object, I ask, of sending these telegrams here after our message has been transmitted to Europe and before we have received a reply? What useful purpose is it going to serve?

If, as I said before, these letters were the spontaneous expression of hundreds of thousands of people who wanted to keep us out of war, would this Chicago headquarters cause their telegrams to come in at a time when the decision is hanging in the balance over in Berlin? Do they think for a moment that two hundred or three hundred thousand telegrams that have been sent here by citizens of the United States protesting, in effect, against our Government's action are going to persuade a foreign Government to yield to our rightful and just demands? Or are they better calculated, I want to ask, to strengthen another country in the belief that we, as Americans, recognize the justice of their claims and thus to give them timely advice that they need not yield to us, because, in the event that they do not yield to us, then we will yield to them?

I say I can not see what useful purpose these telegrams can serve at this time. I can see, perhaps, that they might have served a useful purpose if an unfavorable answer had been returned to the message of the President and when it was a question of war or peace, but the immediate question that is up now is not war or peace. The immediate question that is up now before us is whether Germany is going to yield or whether we are going to yield; and here we have two or three hundred thousand citizens of the United States, by procurement of a hostile agency, publicly expressing in effect the idea that we are in the wrong and that Germany is in the right. I want to ask whether they believe, when they sent those telegrams here, that they are going to be helpful to the country in keeping us out of war and in maintaining peace? Or is it perhaps the case that these procurers and some of the senders even wish or hope that the submarine warfare may be continued in order to compel us to yield to the universal sentiment for peace and let a foreign country go on with its shocking and horrifying work?

WHAT IS THIS EMBARGO CONFERENCE?

I should like to know how this organization was initiated, how it was and is being financed, and what powers or influences are back of it. Remember that the letter dated April 24, which I have read to you, declared that it was necessary to have these telegrams in the hands of Senators and Representatives by Wednesday. April 24 was Monday, and these telegrams were received here on Wednesday to the number of two or three hundred thousand. I am informed that these telegrams came from every nook and corner in the United States and arrived here on schedule time according to the directions on the top of the blank telegraphic forms.

In other words, the string was pulled in Chicago on Monday. The response came on Wednesday in the shape of hundreds of thousands of telegrams from every part of the United States. What organization in the United States can equal that record? Is it even possible for either of the great political parties or for the United States Government itself to equal it?

Now, Mr. President, this is no common, irresponsible organization, but one carefully and scientifically organized. There is more to this than the names of the insignificant men appearing on the letterhead; and so I say I want to know who is the builder of this organization, who or what is the moving spirit of it, and what is its sinister end.

I should like to have the roster of American citizens who are lending themselves to the execution of the ultimate design and purpose of this organization, and I should also like to have their names published in the press of the Nation so that we may know who they are.

These are among the thoughts that have occurred to me. No good can come of this publication of American differences; and I want to say, at least, as one Member of the Senate—and I hope I am expressing the unanimous sentiment—that this is no time to make a public exhibition of our differences to Germany. If we are sincere in our efforts to have peace we can only get it by keeping the respect, at least, of those with whom we are now negotiating. But if our citizens, either thoughtlessly or otherwise, are intent upon showing and disclosing to the European countries that they need not be afraid, that our notes mean nothing, if we mean to assure them in advance that we do not want even to hurt their feelings, what respect have they or will they continue to have for our notes? If they know that we are merely indulging in sending notes and that there is no force or strength back of that diplomacy backed and sustained by a united Nation, I wonder and I ask how do you expect to get any different results than a disagreement, and thus you bring about the very thing you are trying to avoid and to save us from? If you want a real crisis, all that is necessary is to inform those foreign countries with whom we are now negotiating that, no matter what they do or say they need have no fear; that we want peace; that we will talk and will not fight, no matter what the cause—in short, that they may work their will on us; that they are safe, no matter what they do!

A good many hundreds of our citizens have been sent to the bottom of the sea. Of course we have resented it and have protested against it, but many of our citizens thought that we should warn our people to keep off the sea. Here the other day a man was arrested with papers upon his person, it is reported, which indicate that he may be a party to the work that is going on, and immediately there is talk to the effect that Germany will break off relations with us because we arrested her man!

Part of the press of the United States and some of our citizens who had favored the warning of our own citizens thought Germany might have just cause for breaking diplomatic relations because of the arrest of a German subject. Is it more hazardous to put a citizen of a foreign country in jail than it is to send hundreds of American citizens down to the bottom of the sea?

I say that I want these letters and these telegrams referred to the appropriate committee. I should like to have a sample of each one put into the RECORD for the purpose of enabling other Members of Congress to compare theirs with these, in order to convince themselves of the fact that the protests came not from their people, but from an influence beyond their State.

I want to say now that my sole object in discussing the matter to-day is to call the attention of the country and the Senate to the things that are going on in this country. I for one can not look with complacency or tolerance on any movement that seeks to poison the people of this country against their own Government. This is no time for taking chances; and I for one think that this Government may well take notice of these movements that are going on, and follow them up to their poisonous sources. I do not believe that any respectable Government will want to admit that it is carrying on a propaganda in this country. If it is, however, this Government should stop it once and for all. This Government can not afford to suffer any foreign Government to incite or attempt to incite our people, and any such attempt, if attempt there is, should immediately and promptly be made an end of. I believe that this country should waste no time before trying to put its finger on the heart of this sinister activity.

We can only have one end eventually, no matter how many crises we may pass. We may pass this crisis, we may pass another crisis, and still another, and still a hundred more; but it must be plain to everybody that if this war continues for another year or two, and incidents like those of the past against our rights continue, it can lead only to one end. No person or influence or power can make our people continue indefinitely to endure it.

THE MAIN ISSUE.

We all want peace. I hope that as long as I am a Member of this body I may never have to vote for a declaration of war. I do not want to vote for any declaration of war. I want peace, and I know every other Senator in the Chamber wants peace. It is only a question of how you are going to keep it. How are you going to get it? Are you going to get it by permitting this kind of business to go on in this country, unrebuked and unpunished? Are you going to have peace by debating in an academic way who is doing us the most injury—the allies of Great Britain or the allies of Germany? Instead of considering the question of our rights as against Germany, the controversy seems to have shifted as to which of the two belligerents are doing us the greatest injury. Which of these combinations is doing its best to drive us into war; which of these countries is most—I will not say insolent—but most regardless of our rights; which one is trying to put the barb into us the deepest?

I say we have lost sight of the main issue and are engaging in academic discussions instead of digging out the main issue. And what is the main issue? At this time the main issue for our citizens is this: Are we right or are we wrong in our controversy with Germany, and are you with or are you against the United States? If we are right, can we afford to abandon the right and condone a wrong, or shall we admit that we are mistaken, even though we know we are right, and thus condone a wrong and repudiate our rights?

We must settle these things one at a time; and I want to take occasion in just a few words to state my position.

I am for the United States against Germany or Austria or Great Britain or Russia or France or Japan or Turkey or any other nation on the face of the earth when opposed to us; I do not care what they are or who they are. I want each and every nation to respect our rights, as we propose to respect theirs; and I will not conceal the fact that I was in hopes long ago that Germany would yield and recognize our rights, so that we might straightway and promptly turn our undivided attention to other flagrant violations of our rights on the part of other countries. I believe that Germany has been standing in her own light. I believe that in her refusal to bow and yield to the rightful demands of the United States she has in a way hindered and obstructed herself, because I believe there is a sentiment in this country which is that we shall play no favorites, but defend our rights, no matter how or by whom invaded. There is also a belief prevailing in this country that as long as the lives of our citizens are the issue that must be settled first; and then, I say, I believe there is a further sentiment in this country that when that is settled, and settled right, we should turn our attention to those who are wronging us in other ways, and make them see the right also.

That is the attitude that I want to take in this body, and the attitude that I think is the proper and just and right one. In this controversy that lies nearest to our right hand I believe it is absolutely necessary, in order to convince Germany that we mean business, that the country as one man should put themselves back of a President who has used his talents, his genius, his time, his energy, and all his other qualities of hand and heart with which Nature has so richly endowed him, to keep us out of war and preserve our honor. I say such a President as that deserves the support, in my humble opinion, of the humblest citizen in the land, as well as that of every Senator in this body.

NOT SENTIMENT OF NATION.

Now, I have said that these hundreds of thousands of telegrams might have the effect of encouraging Germany to maintain its position and put us in a position where we must yield or break off diplomatic relations. I want to remind, however, those whom it may concern that the expressions of these telegrams in the main are not the spontaneous utterances of our people, but as it clearly appears from what has already been said these are merely the repetition of some force, by some "us," seeking to hinder, delay, and obstruct the peaceful negotiations of this country with Germany. These are, therefore, not in the main the expression of the sentiment of the people whose names are attached to these telegrams except in so far as they reflect the universal desire on the part of our countrymen for peace, but a peace that must be consistent with honor and with American traditions of preserving American lives and American rights.

Let no foreign nation be deluded or deceived into the belief that American citizens will not support their American Government always. Let every foreign country be duly advised that if the time should come, which God forbid, when the American Government must take a stand which may involve a breach of diplomatic relations or involve us in even worse than that, that America as one man will leap to the defense of our flag, to the defense of our Government, to the defense of the lives of our citizens and of our sacred honor.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have received something over a hundred of the telegrams to which the Senator from Wisconsin has referred so feelingly. It had not occurred to me to take exception to the contents of the telegrams or to criticize the American citizens who sent them. My constituents in California have a perfect right to express their views to me upon any public question. I have never resented it at any time. So has any American citizen in any State of the Union the right to express his sentiments to me or any other Senator.

There is no question before the Senate now. This whole matter is in the hands of the executive department. That department is responsible for whatever may be done. Until it comes in proper course before Congress I myself have felt that it ought not to be agitated under the present conditions. I think the President of the United States should be left to determine what shall be done under existing conditions, and that the Congress of the United States should be free when any responsibility is cast upon it to deal with this matter independently and freely. I am, therefore, astonished that any Member of this body should make such a speech as we have just listened to.

Mr. President, this is a solemn occasion. Everyone who stops to think about it realizes that the situation is a delicate one and that something may happen at any time that would precipitate a most unfortunate conflict with one or the other of the belligerent nations. Certainly we, as representatives of the people of this Republic, should not aid by anything that we may say or do to agitate the public mind and bring about any such consequences.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have not felt it to be any part of my duty to bring these telegrams before the Senate. They come properly to me. I have no sense of criticism of the people who have sent them. It does not make any difference to me whether they have been sent voluntarily and without suggestion by any single citizen or whether they have been suggested by somebody else. I assume that whenever a citizen attaches his name to one of the telegrams he is expressing his own sentiments, no matter who suggests it to his mind.

I think, Mr. President, the conditions are such that a Senator might well be admonished, as the Senator from Wisconsin has admonished the people who sent these telegrams, that it is a good time to be silent until we are called upon to act and speak.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had not intended to say a word upon this subject, but, in view of the discussion to which we have listened, I simply desire to say this: I have received four or five hundred of these telegrams. Their character was such that it was evident to the merest tyro they were sent from some inspired source.

I am always glad to hear from my constituents on every subject that is attracting the attention of the public. I am particularly pleased to hear from them when I know that their messages contain their real sentiments and that they are not the mere conveyors of the sentiments or thoughts which may inspire the breast of some one who is actuated by some ulterior purpose.

Mr. President, I very much regret this campaign for this reason: The method which has been adopted casts a suspicion upon the motive of the man who started it. Evidently the telegrams themselves indicate a purpose of hostility against this Government. A campaign of this kind can not serve either the cause of truth or the cause of peace. It is for that reason that I regret that it has been started.

I do not care to occupy the attention of the Senate further in this matter, except to express my disapproval of the methods which have been adopted by those who are back of the movement.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will indulge me a moment in reply to the remark of the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to suggest that this subject might well be left until after the close of morning business?

Mr. HUSTING. I shall take only a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I shall not make any objection.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I merely wish to say in reply to the remark of the Senator from California, who admonishes me that my remarks may have been out of order, or, rather, not in place at this time, that, of course, as a younger Member of this body, I am glad many times to defer to the opinions of senior Members, but I do want to say further that the Senator from California has made remarks here in regard to this administration and this Government at other times that would have impelled me to admonish him if I considered it proper to admonish a Senator from another State, who, I take it, is primarily answerable for his conduct to his State and country.

I want to conclude by remarking that I have spoken at length this afternoon because I thought it high time to bring this movement out into the open air where it can best be treated, and that with all due deference to the senior Senator from California he will have to permit me as long as I am a Member of this body as the representative, in part, of a great State to exercise my own judgment as to the propriety of any action which I may take or of making any remarks which I choose to make within parliamentary limits.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present a telegram on the same subject referred to by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING]. I do not ask to have it read, but that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

MAYWOOD, ILL., April 24, 1916.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

If warlike rumors coming from Washington are true, will you let me reassure you that the great majority of your constituents stand for peace. Believe war now unnecessary and uncalled for, and will resent being participated into the European conflict.

CHARLES BROBERG,
1618 South Seventh Avenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. The telegram of itself is unobjectionable. It is the number and circumstances that are out of the ordinary.

If the Senate will indulge me for a few moments, I wish to say that I have on the same subject about 4,000 similar telegrams in my office. It is inexpedient to take much time this morning. The Senator from Wisconsin has gone into the matter at length, and to some degree he, as well as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], voices my sentiments.

These telegrams, under the conditions, I wish to say will not change in any manner my vote or my conduct in this body. The right of petition is a sacred one in a republican form of government and is respected by the Senate. This is evidenced by the time taken and the extreme liberality with which the Senate regards such communications.

But, Mr. President, the right of petition is always one that ought to present the volition as well as the initiative of the petitioner. In my judgment, the great number of telegrams that have come to certain Members of the Senate do not represent either the initiative or the volition of the person signing such petitions or telegrams. They indicate, in my opinion, so far as I can collect evidence on that subject, the activities of the American Embargo Conference, which seeks to close the neutral markets of our country against the belligerents in the European war.

I probably will not suit either side on pending controversies relating to our foreign affairs. I shall vote, Mr. President, against closing our markets to the purchase of war supplies by any belligerents that can enter our markets and arrange satisfactory terms of purchase with our people. I do that because I wish to defend the rights of my own country to purchase in the markets of the world if we unfortunately are at war. The defense of the right to sell to belligerents as a neutral nation constitutes the defense of our right to buy when we are belligerents in a neutral market wherever it may be deemed advantageous to us.

I do not agree with many of the matters in which this administration is called on to act, but I regard the American Embargo Conference, which I regard as the responsible author of these communications, as having misplaced its activities. Whatever I may do hereafter in voting upon peace or war or in sustaining or opposing the administration, if it should break off its diplomatic relations with foreign powers, will be decided when it is reached, if unhappily it must. On any existing ground at this time I am opposed to war and shall vote for peace.

I am an American and a neutral, and so being neutral I deplore the ex parte activities of those who are not neutral in arousing this flood of petitions. The excitement caused among our people by such procedure is harmful to our neutrality and our continued domestic peace.

I wish to say, Mr. President, in the few moments that I shall take, that these communications are, in my judgment, an abuse of the right of petition. They are thrusting upon this body those communications in a way that is intended to be a menace and not a legitimate argument, and whatever my views may be, and to some degree I sympathize upon other questions with these petitioners or with those who are active in the American Embargo Conference, I regard these numerous petitions as not only a perversion of the right of petition, but as an unworthy menace upon the liberty of action and of judgment of the Senate, and to that degree I regret its occurrence.

MIGRATORY BIRD REGULATIONS.

I wish to offer further, Mr. President, upon another matter, a petition presented to me by certain citizens of the State of Illinois relating to the United States Biological Survey relative to a revision of the migratory bird regulations for Illinois, and I wish to add in addition a few words. I am aware with what relief it falls upon the Senate like a blessed benediction. I did it designedly in order that the tension might be relieved.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just a moment, on the last petition I have presented.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to indulge the hope that we may proceed with the morning business in a very short time?

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I shall certainly take but a moment. The complaint of the petition is that the Biological Survey has interfered with the legitimate rights of a number of sportsmen in various rivers, either the Mississippi or the tributary rivers, and the complaint is upon that ground. They regard the bureau as having become somewhat ossified in its conduct and very dictatorial in its regulations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

ARMED MERCHANT SHIPS (S. DOC. NO. 420).

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have in my hand a statement issued by the State Department defining the attitude of the United States toward armed merchant ships in neutral ports and on the high seas. It was published in full in last night's Star. On account of the importance of the subject, I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asked to have printed as a document a moment ago the statement which was issued by the Department of State in relation to the question of armed merchantmen. I should like to ask that it be printed in the RECORD also. It is a statement from a department of the Government on a very important matter. While the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], from the Committee on Printing, usually objects to both these courses being taken, I am quite certain that it would be much more serviceable if printed in the RECORD than printed as a document, and I hope he will waive his objection to both being done in this instance.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I understood the request of the Senator from Minnesota was that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; that it be printed as a document. If I had had my way and could have made a suggestion to the Senator I would have asked him to request that it be printed in the RECORD, where it would have a much wider circulation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to defer his request until I confer with the Senator from Minnesota. I have no doubt he will agree to the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator from Minnesota asked that it might be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Utah takes the ground that the Committee on Printing will not allow or does not advocate the printing in both the RECORD and as a document.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Printing, and that matter has never been before the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state that the Joint Committee on Printing has time and again discussed the question as to whether matter should be printed in the RECORD and printed as a public document, and the position taken by the Joint Committee on Printing is that any particular article could be printed either in the RECORD or as a public document. If it is printed in the RECORD, it can be circulated exactly the same as a public document. It virtually becomes a public document, because it can be printed by itself or it can be taken as a part of the RECORD and sent through the mails in that way. That is the reason why the committee has taken this position. I believe it is the right one, and as long as I can object I am going to object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator that it seems to be purely a technical objection on his part, because anybody can read it into the RECORD, and it may as well be printed in the RECORD and not take up the time of the Senate to read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to printing it in the RECORD, I will say, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that course, but I want to have it printed also as a document.

Mr. LODGE. There is no reason why it should not be printed in both forms.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does a single objection bar the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To print in the RECORD?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume that a vote of the Senate could be taken on the question, but I hardly thought it was necessary to make a motion. I was simply asking the Senator from Utah to agree in this case that an important communication from the Department of State might be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, as far as the subject matter is concerned, to have it printed both ways, but I have been trying to be consistent in this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is very easy to settle the question. Is there objection to printing the statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Minnesota requests that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. NELSON. That has already been ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Chair was asking whether it should be printed in the RECORD, and that it was not going to be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We can settle that question. All in favor of printing the article as a public document will say aye, contrary no. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

A statement from the State Department defining the attitude of the United States toward armed merchant ships in neutral ports and on the high seas was made public to-day by the State Department by direction of President Wilson. It originally was prepared as a circular note to other powers, but it later was decided to issue it as a statement.

TEXT OF STATEMENT.

The statement is as follows:

"The status of an armed merchant vessel of a belligerent is to be considered from two points of view: First, from that of a neutral when the vessel enters its ports, and, second, from that of an enemy when the vessel is on the high seas.

"FIRST. AN ARMED MERCHANT VESSEL IN NEUTRAL PORTS.

"(1) It is necessary for a neutral government to determine the status of an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality which enters its jurisdiction in order that the Government may protect itself from responsibility for the destruction of life and property by permitting its ports to be used as bases of hostile operations by belligerent warships.

"(2) If the vessel carries a commission or orders issued by a belligerent government and directing it under penalty to conduct aggressive operations, or if it is conclusively shown to have conducted such operations, it should be regarded and treated as a warship.

"(3) If sufficient evidence is wanting, a neutral government, in order to safeguard itself from liability for failure to preserve its neutrality, may reasonably presume from the facts the status of an armed merchant vessel which frequents its waters. There is no settled rule of international law as to the sufficiency of evidence to establish such a presumption. As a result a neutral government must decide for itself the sufficiency of the evidence which it requires to determine the character of the vessel. For the guidance of its port officers and other officials a neutral government may therefore declare a standard of evidence, but such standard may be changed on account of the general conditions of naval warfare or modified on account of the circumstances of a particular case. These changes and modifications may be made at any time during the progress of the war, since the determination of the status of an armed merchant vessel in neutral waters may affect the liability of a neutral government.

"SECOND. AN ARMED MERCHANT VESSEL ON HIGH SEAS.

"(1) It is necessary for a belligerent warship to determine the status of an armed merchant vessel of an enemy encountered on the high seas, since the rights of life and property of belligerents and neutrals on board the vessel may be impaired if its status is that of an enemy warship.

"(2) The determination of warlike character must rest in no case upon presumption, but upon conclusive evidence, because the responsibility for the destruction of life and property depends on the actual facts of the case and can not be avoided or lessened by a standard of evidence which a belligerent may announce as creating a presumption of hostile character. On the other hand, to safeguard himself from possible liability for unwarranted destruction of life and property the belligerent should, in the absence of conclusive evidence, act on the presumption that an armed merchantman is of peaceful character.

"(3) A presumption based solely on the presence of an armament on a merchant vessel of an enemy is not a sufficient reason for a belligerent to declare it to be a warship and proceed to attack it without regard to the rights of the persons on board. Conclusive evidence of a purpose to use the armament for aggression is essential. Consequently an armament which a neutral government, seeking to perform its neutral duties, may presume to be intended for aggression might, in fact, on the high seas be used solely for protection. A neutral government has no opportunity to determine the purpose of an armament on a merchant vessel unless there is evidence in the ship's papers or other proof as to its previous use, so that the government is justified in substituting an arbitrary rule of presumption in arriving at the status of the merchant vessel. On the other hand, a belligerent warship can on the high seas test by actual experience the purpose of an armament on an enemy merchant vessel and so determine by direct evidence the status of the vessel.

"SUMMARY OF CONTENTIONS.

"The status of an armed merchant vessel as a warship in neutral waters may be determined, in the absence of documentary proof or conclusive evidence of previous aggressive conduct, by presumption derived from all the circumstances of the case.

"The status of such vessel as a warship on the high seas must be determined only upon conclusive evidence of aggressive purpose, in the absence of which it is to be presumed that the vessel has a private and peaceable character, and it should be so treated by an enemy warship.

"In brief, a neutral government may proceed upon the presumption that an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is armed for aggression, while a belligerent should proceed on the presumption that the vessel is armed for protection. Both of these presumptions may be overcome by evidence—the first by secondary or collateral evidence, since the fact to be established is negative in character; the second by primary and direct evidence, since the fact to be established is positive in character."

II.

The character of the evidence upon which the status of an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is to be determined when visiting neutral waters and when traversing the high seas having been stated, it is important to consider the rights and duties of neutrals and belligerents as affected by the status of armed merchant vessels in neutral ports and on the high seas.

"FIRST. THE RELATIONS OF BELLIGERENTS AND NEUTRALS AS AFFECTED BY THE STATUS OF ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS IN NEUTRAL PORTS.

"(1) It appears to be the established rule of international law that warships of a belligerent may enter neutral ports and accept limited hospitality there upon condition that they leave, as a rule, within 24 hours after their arrival.

"(2) Belligerent warships are also entitled to take on fuel once in three months in ports of a neutral country.

"(3) As a mode of enforcing these rules a neutral has the right to cause belligerent warships failing to comply with them, together with their officers and crews, to be interned during the remainder of the war.

"(4) Merchantmen of belligerent nationality, armed only for purposes of protection against the enemy, are entitled to enter and leave neutral ports without hindrance in the course of legitimate trade.

"(5) Armed merchantmen of belligerent nationality under a commission or orders of their government to use, under penalty, their armament for aggressive purposes, or merchantmen which, without such commission or orders, have used their armaments for aggressive purposes, are not entitled to the same hospitality in neutral ports as peaceable armed merchantmen.

"SECOND. THE RELATIONS OF BELLIGERENTS AND NEUTRALS AS AFFECTED BY THE STATUS OF ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS ON THE HIGH SEAS.

"(1) Innocent neutral property on the high seas can not legally be confiscated, but is subject to inspection by a belligerent. Resistance to inspection removes this immunity and subjects the property to condemnation by a prize court, which is charged with the preservation of the legal rights of the owners of neutral property.

"(2) Neutral property engaged in contraband trade, breach of blockade, or unneutral service obtains the character of enemy property and is subject to seizure by a belligerent and condemnation by a prize court.

"(3) When hostile and innocent property is mixed, as in the case of a neutral ship carrying a cargo which is entirely or partly contraband, this fact can only be determined by inspection. Such innocent property may be of uncertain character, as it has been frequently held that it is more or less contaminated by association with hostile property. For example, under the declaration of London (which, so far as the provisions covering this subject are concerned, has been adopted by all the belligerents) the presence of a cargo which in bulk or value consists of 50 per cent contraband articles impresses the ship with enemy character and subjects it to seizure and condemnation by a prize court.

"HAVE THE RIGHT TO ARM.

"(4) Enemy property, including ships and cargoes, is always subject to seizure and condemnation. Any enemy property taken by a belligerent on the high seas is a total loss to the owners. There is no redress in a prize court. The only means of avoiding loss is by flight or successful resistance. Enemy merchant ships have therefore the right to arm for the purpose of self-protection.

"(5) A belligerent warship is any vessel which, under commission or orders of its Government imposing penalties or entitling it to prize money, is armed for the purpose of seeking and capturing or destroying enemy property or hostile neutral property on the seas. The size of the vessel, strength of armament, and its defensive or offensive force are immaterial.

"(6) A belligerent warship has, incidental to the right of seizure, the right to visit and search all vessels on the high seas for the purpose of determining the hostile or innocent character of the vessels and their cargoes. If the hostile character of the property is known, however, the belligerent warship may seize the property without exercising the right of visit and search, which is solely for the purpose of obtaining knowledge as to the character of the property. The attacking vessel must display its colors before exercising belligerent rights.

"(7) When a belligerent warship meets a merchantman on the high seas which is known to be enemy owned and attempts to capture the vessel, the latter may exercise its right of self-protection either by flight or by resistance. The right to capture and the right to prevent capture are recognized as equally justifiable.

"RIGHT OF CAPTURE LIMITED.

"(8) The exercise of the right of capture is limited, nevertheless, by certain accepted rules of conduct based on the principles of humanity and regard for innocent property, even if there is definite knowledge that some of the property, cargo as well as the vessel, is of enemy character. As a consequence of these limitations, it has become the established practice for warships to give merchant vessels an opportunity to surrender or submit to visit and search before attempting to seize them by force. The observance of this rule of naval warfare tends to prevent the loss of life of noncombatants and the destruction of innocent neutral property which would result from sudden attack.

"(9) If, however, before a summons to surrender is given a merchantman of belligerent nationality, aware of the approach of an enemy warship, uses its armament to keep the enemy at a distance, or after it has been summoned to surrender it resists or flees, the warship may properly exercise force to compel surrender.

"(10) If the merchantman finally surrenders, the belligerent warship may release it or take it into custody. In the case of an enemy merchantman it may be sunk, but only if it is impossible to take it into port, and provided always that the persons on board are put in a place of safety. In the case of a neutral merchantman the right to sink it in any circumstance is doubtful.

"(11) A merchantman entitled to exercise the right of self-protection may do so when certain of attack by an enemy warship; otherwise the exercise of the right would be so restricted as to render it ineffectual. There is a distinct difference, however, between the exercise of the right of self-protection and the act of cruising the seas in an armed vessel for the purpose of attacking enemy naval vessels.

"WHEN THEY LOSE STATUS.

"(12) In the event that merchant ships of belligerent nationality are armed and under commission or orders to attack in all circumstances certain classes of enemy naval vessels for the purpose of destroying them, and are entitled to receive prize money for such service from their Government or are liable to a penalty for failure to obey the orders given, such merchant ships lose their status as peaceable merchant ships and are to a limited extent incorporated in the naval forces of their Government, even though it is not their sole occupation to conduct hostile operations.

"(13) A vessel engaged intermittently in commerce and under a commission or orders of its Government imposing a penalty, in pursuing and attacking enemy naval craft, possesses a status tainted with a hostile purpose which it can not throw aside or assume at will. It should, therefore, be considered as an armed public vessel and receive the treatment of a warship by an enemy and by neutrals. Any person taking passage on such a vessel can not expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship. A private vessel engaged in seeking enemy naval craft, without such a commission or orders from its Government, stands in a relation to the enemy similar to that of a civilian who fires upon the organized military forces of a belligerent, and is entitled to no more considerate treatment."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3069) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce,"' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved March 4, 1915, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 394) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3794) for the relief of Thomas S. Johnson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 393) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. For the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who is detained from the Senate, I report from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 4760) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel, and I submit a report (No. 400) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3618. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide the southeast quarter of section 18, township 46 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian (the same being that portion of the town site of Plummer, Benewah County, Idaho, not yet platted), into 5-acre tracts for sale, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 398); and

S. 4287. A bill to grant unsurveyed islands to the State of Minnesota for forestry purposes (Rept. No. 399).

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3617. A bill for the relief of Elizabeth Davis (Rept. No. 395); and

H. R. 7804. An act to authorize the issuance of patent to Oscar R. Howard, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 397).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) for the relief of Fred White, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 396) thereon.

G. B. DICKSON.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8067) to quiet the title to certain lands in the possession of G. B. Dickson, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 392) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill. My physical condition is such that I have been unable to be in the Senate for the last few days, and after to-day I expect to be absent for some time. I should like to have the bill disposed of before leaving the city. It is a private bill, and of no great importance, except to the claimant.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to that portion of land, the title of which is now in the United States of America, comprised in section 16, township 14 north, range 6 east, in the county of Craighead, State of Arkansas, to G. B. Dickson, the present occupant of the land, upon proof by him that there are no adverse claimants and that he has continuously occupied the land since January 1, 1882.

Mr. ROBINSON. If unanimous consent be given for the present consideration of the bill, I desire to offer an amendment which has been suggested, namely, after the word "land," in line 10, to insert the words "in person or by tenant." This is done to relieve the bill from the possibility of ambiguity. I do not think the amendment is necessary, but it has been thought to be so by others.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How will the bill read if amended as proposed by the Senator from Arkansas?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the language as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended as proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, the language will read:

And that he has continuously occupied the land in person or by tenant since January 1, 1882.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the rivers and harbors appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid portions of northern Montana, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. STERLING submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GLIMPSES OF OUR NATIONAL PARKS.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 180), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to cause to be printed 1,000 copies, for the use of each Senator, of National Park Service bulletin known as "Glimpses of our National Parks."

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday next, the 29th instant, following the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the pending Federal farm-loan bill.

GOOD ROADS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7617, commonly known as the good-roads bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], it seems to me, is an eminently sensible one. It has met with an opposition which is very illuminating in regard to the main purposes of this bill. The Senator from Ohio described the character of roads with which we are all extremely familiar—we can see them by going a very few miles from this Capitol—roads which are annually repaired by the town or the county or the neighborhood. The repairing consists in digging out in springtime the washings of the winter on either side, piling them up in the middle of the road, and putting the road in such condition that it is fairly open to travel for that locality during the summer and autumn seasons. The work has no permanent quality whatever; it does not mean the building of good roads in any sense by the production of something permanent, while the purpose of this bill ought to be the development of good highways and main traveled roads extending between different States; that is, it should have a national character, a real value to all the people of the United States, who have to pay the bill. But this bill is a proposition to get the United States to dump in a certain amount of money annually for the temporary improvement of some local road—very local—which has no part in the great system of highways throughout the country. It is exactly like expecting the United States to come into a town which is not very well off to spend money to remove the snow or the mud in the spring, or something of that kind. This kind of temporary work has no relation to the building of good roads, as properly understood.

The opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, as I have said, illustrates what I have felt from the beginning from an examination of this bill—that its primary purpose is the distribution of a large sum of money from the Treasury of the United States among deserving States and deserving voters.

I am as heartily in favor of good roads and of everything that can be done to develop good roads as anyone can possibly be. I have supported the development of good roads in my own State, and the State has done an immense work in building good roads. We have already resurfaced and put in splendid condition over half the roads in the State. For that very reason I dislike very much to see $75,000,000, a large sum of money even for this country, taken out of the United States Treasury and spent nominally on roads, with results so trifling, even if we assume that the money will be spent in the best possible way, that this great amount should be practically wasted.

Take this amount with which we are dealing and make some comparisons. The State of New York has spent $82,000,000 on its roads. It has a total road mileage of 80,000 miles, in round numbers, and by the expenditure of $82,000,000 it has improved, put in proper conditon, and made really good roads of 22,000 miles, 27 per cent of the roads of New York. To improve those roads alone within the boundaries of the State of New York, 22,000 miles in length, the State has spent $82,000,000, and we are asked to improve the roads of the United States with an expenditure of $75,000,000.

The roads of the United States, in round numbers, represent 2,227,000 miles, and if this money is spent upon them in the best possible way—and a large part of it will undoubtedly be wasted—it would not affect 1 per cent or one-tenth of 1 per cent of the roads in the United States; and yet it is an enormous sum of money to take out of the United States Treasury, especially at a time when we need the money of the United States for other and, to my mind, far more important purposes, and at a time when the expenditures in all directions are very heavy.

The $75,000,000 if spent in the best possible way, as I have said, will accomplish little or nothing so far as the roads of the United States as a whole are concerned; but, Mr. President, we begin by taking 15 per cent of the money, about $11,000,000, I presume, and expending it on another bureau, to build up another great administrative department here in Washington.

We are overridden with bureaus now. We are creating so many, and we have so many, that the practical administration of the country is passing rapidly into their hands. They control Congress. By that I mean, for instance—to give an example which I have used before, and which I will use again—we have five surveys going on in this country, in many cases duplicating the work. An effort was made some years ago to try to consolidate these surveys and save money to the country, but it was perfectly useless; the bureaus hopelessly beat those back of the effort, both in the Senate and in the other House, although we could get better work and save much money to the Government by organizing them purely on a business basis. This has been demonstrated here in regard to those surveys in past years, not once, but again and again. The late Senator from Colorado, Mr. Wolcott, a very brilliant Senator and a very brilliant man, devoted years to making a fight on the subject of the surveys, but gave it up in absolute despair because we were so controlled by the bureaus here in Washington.

We have at least three navies—I think four, perhaps; but certainly three. We have the Navy of the United States; we have the Coast and Geodetic Survey with a little navy; we have the Coast Guard Service with a little navy; and I think the Army has a little navy of its own. Attempts were made years ago, when I first came to Congress, to bring those naval forces under one head. It would, of course, have been infinitely better in administration, and it also would have strengthened our naval forces in time of war. Even then, as many years ago as that, the effort was hopelessly beaten by the bureaus.

Now, it is proposed to build up a new great bureau here to spend money on good roads. As a trifling beginning, $11,000,000, I believe, in five years is to be devoted to the purposes of administration—a mere nothing. Mr. President, if you inaugurate the system of appropriations provided by this bill, the fact that will impress the States and the people who receive it will be that the amount is so small that it does not really do any good; but you will have taught them to come to the United States Government for money to do the work which they ought to do themselves, and you will still further destroy the spirit of local self-government, the spirit of independence of the States in their own field of action. Appetite will grow by what it feeds upon, and out of this $75,000,000 which it is proposed to give to the States as a beginning will come annual appropriations which will make the worst river and harbor bill we ever had look wan and pale and slight and attenuated in comparison. It will reach such a point, when you once hold out to the people of the States that they can get money here in Washington, that they will come here with clamors, which can not be resisted, and this $75,000,000 will look like a trifle, a bagatelle; and yet $75,000,000 taken out of the Treasury is a huge sum of money to be added to the expenditures of the present time, some of which are vital.

Mr. President, the maintenance of a road is quite as important, if not more important, than the original building of the road. If you have a bad road and spend no money on it, you fail to get a good road, and save your money; that is all; but if you spend a good deal of money on a road and do not maintain it, you have lost an immense amount of money and still have a bad road. There is no sufficient provision in this bill for the maintenance of the roads. The clauses in regard to maintenance are slack, and it does not seem to me that those supporting this bill can possibly understand what the maintenance of a road means.

Of course it is sheer waste to spend money on a road, as is proposed by those who oppose the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, in digging out the spring washings and piling them into the middle of the road. That is not maintenance; that is temporary repair; but to keep the road really a good road, really a main traveled road, a national highway, it must be attended to constantly.

We have 8,000 miles of as good roads in Massachusetts as I have met with anywhere in the world. I have traveled on the beautiful roads of France and England and elsewhere, as well as in this country, and I know of no better roads than the State roads of my own State. They are extremely expensive to build. They cost $10,000 a mile, and if you double the width—as is the case in some places—$20,000 a mile. But the average running cost of the State roads is $10,000 a mile, built with tar, crushed stone, gravel, and so forth. Those roads cost $800,000 a year to maintain; that is, to keep the whole system up to the condition in which it was when first built involves an expenditure, on an average, of a thousand dollars a mile a year. I do not mean, of course, that a thousand dollars is spent on each of the 8,000 miles every year. The road will go for many years without needing repairs, and then you will have to spend two or three thousand dollars a mile on it; but, on an average, it costs a thousand dollars a mile a year to keep those roads in Massachusetts in proper order, and there is not any provision made in this bill sufficient to insure the maintenance of a road in the condition in which it will be when the Government money has been spent on it.

One last point, Mr. President, which I think is to be considered, but which is not likely to have much effect in the votes against the bill, because it represents only injustice to a minority.

It is always a pleasant thing to get something for nothing. There is no money so easy, so agreeable to spend as other people's money, and it is the money that is most surely wasted. Now, the State of Massachusetts—I will take my own State to illustrate—out of the last $25,000,000 to be expended under this bill will receive $380,000, and she will pay in taxes, based on the direct taxes levied by the Government, $1,400,000. Of that $25,000,000 the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Massachusetts, and I think New Jersey—those five States—will pay half. Now, that is pleasant for the other States, but it is extremely unjust to the States from which the money is taken. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] said the other day that New York was a rich State, and ought to pay for her own roads and pay for other people's roads because it is a rich State. That seems to me a strange doctrine, Mr. President. The framers of the Constitution of the United States took great pains to endeavor to make taxation as equal as possible, and the fact that one State has more money than another or is more prosperous than another is no reason why that State should pay the bills of the less prosperous States; but that is just what this bill does.

Let me take as an illustration the emergency-tax receipts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915. The total amount collected in the United States, in round numbers, was $52,000,000. Thirty-one million of the $52,000,000 was paid by Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. Twenty-one million of the $52,000,000 was paid by the other 40 States. Those are direct taxes, falling on articles of consumption in the form of stamp taxes. We have no complaint to make about paying those taxes if our consumption and our use of stamps justifies it; but when you go beyond that and make us pay also for roads in distant parts of the country, under a bill from which we get no real benefit, it seems to me that it is extreme injustice, and I do not believe that laws rooted in injustice can or ought to prevail in the United States.

The first year of this bill my State will receive $76,000 in order to improve its roads. Mr. President, the annual expenditure for roads of Massachusetts by the State—which is over two million—counties, and towns is $6,600,000, and we are keeping our roads up not only for our own benefit but for the benefit of the whole country. New England is the great point of travel all through the summer, and those roads are open to the world free of charge. We get a reward no doubt in the travelers who are attracted by the fine roads, but none the less we are paying $6,600,000 a year to build those roads. Now the United States comes along and offers to give us $76,000 as an installment of five-year payments, and at the end of five years we shall have received $1,100,000 and paid to the Government $2,800,000. I really do not see why that money should be taken from us, because we pay a larger share of taxes than 40 other States.

These figures are used merely to illustrate what I consider the inherent injustice of the bill. That, as I have said, will have, I suppose, little or no effect on the vote of the Senate, but I wish to enter them as my protest against an injustice. The most serious objection, however, to the bill is, to my mind, that it will in no way advance the cause which we all have at heart. It will be a prodigious waste of Government money, with no corresponding result.

It is not as if we could spend $75,000,000 in five years in building certain great trunk lines of road through the country in different directions, as in the old days of internal improvements, when they built the great Cumberland Road, I think it was, over the mountains. That was a national improvement, and gave the whole country a great artery of commerce, and all the States, whether they benefited by it directly or not, or whether they paid a larger share of money or not, were ready and willing to contribute their full part to the construction of the road. But this is a proposal to take the money paid by a few States—in its result, that is where it comes out—in the form of a huge sum of money from the National Treasury, and then scatter it about in small sums here and there, helping a bit of local road here and another bit there, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the value being only to the immediate locality, of no national value whatsoever. This huge sum is to be taken for that purpose.

I think I am justified in saying that the primary purpose of this bill is the distribution of money from the United States Treasury, to be distributed, no doubt, to deserving localities and deserving voters; but the result in good roads will be negligible. It will keep a good many people busy, I have no doubt; and, if I may return for a moment to what I said at the beginning, it will stimulate the appetite for appropriations which are for local purposes, the appropriations which go where the votes are lying thickest. Already they are a terrific drain on the United States. Now you are opening up another source of drain on the Treasury which will go beyond anything that ever has been undertaken. The river and harbor bill will be nothing to it. The public-buildings bill will be nothing to it. Before you get through with this business, the Panama Canal will look like a cheap enterprise; because, if the people in the various localities once see that they are getting money from the Treasury of the United States, the demand will come up to Congressmen and to Senators that they must have more and ever more money for roads, and they will all get together in order to get the money for the roads, for with the roads go votes; and the bill will assume proportions which will stagger even the wealth of the United States.

It is to my mind most dangerous legislation in that way. It is entering on these vast expenditures without any thought of the future, and with results in the direction at which the bill is supposed to aim which will be perfectly trivial. There is an idea abroad—all of us must have seen it in our correspondence and elsewhere—there is an idea abroad in many localities that you can take money out of the United States Treasury, and that it is like a conjurer picking silver dollars out of the air. Nobody has to pay it; that seems to be the idea. Our taxes are laid on the theory that they must not hurt anybody. We try to impose the taxes where the votes are fewest, which makes a clumsy, ill-balanced, bad system, without any regard for the laws of economy or sound taxation; and our expenditures, as I have said, are based on the exactly opposite doctrine of spending the money where the votes are lying thickest.

I am no crazy economist. I never have been. I always have believed in liberal but intelligent Government expenditures. But we are now plunging into a course of expenditure, apart from those which we must make for the defense, the protection, and the government of the country, which are colossal, outrunning anything that ever has been dreamed of before. I think some of these expenditures for the present time at least can well wait; but I believe this bill is unsound economically, I believe it will do no good to the roads, and I believe it is going to end in a frightful waste of the money of the United States, which is all taken out of the pockets of the people sooner or later. You can not devise a tax that does not end by being distributed among all the people of the country, and the money which you are spending from the United States Treasury will all come out of the people. It will seem to the States that get $3 for one that they are profiting at the expense of the States that are getting $1 for three; but the net result will be a tremendous drain on the Treasury of the United States, and there is nothing in this bill that can ever justify the expenditure. You never will get out of this bill and out of an expenditure of $75,000,000 any result except a trivial one, although the draft on the Treasury is so huge.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is now within two minutes of 2 o'clock, when this bill must be laid aside. I simply want to say to the Senate that I shall not ask the Senate to consider this bill during the morning hour to-morrow or next day, in order that we may have a little time for the calendar and other matters; but I hope that on Monday the Senate will resume the consideration of this bill and make some disposition of it as soon as possible.

I desire to ask, Mr. President, for a reprint of the bill, including, of course, the amendments which have been agreed to by the Senate, in order that we may have that before us when we next consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator will have the amendments printed either in brackets or in italics, so that they can be distinguished?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I should like to have that done.

Mr. POMERENE. May I suggest also that that order may include the pending amendments—the proposed amendments—so that they may be before the Senators?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The suggestion I made was that the reprint should include the amendments that have been adopted. The Senator's amendment is printed, and is here on everybody's desk.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill, of course, could be so printed as to indicate those which had been adopted and those which were proposed and pending.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator's amendment is the only one that is pending.

Mr. POMERENE. Is it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should not like to include that in the bill which we are printing to show the amendments that have been agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will let me make a suggestion, the amendments which have been adopted could be put in italics, and if the Senator wants his amendment to appear in the print, it could then be incorporated in brackets.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Really, I do not see any necessity for including that in a reprint of the bill to show the amendments, when the amendment has not been adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. My only object was this, that while this amendment was being discussed a good many Senators were absent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is on every Senator's table, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope Senators have seen it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no doubt that they have read it. I would rather not have the reprint include amendments that have not been agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, all right.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the bill (H. R. 7617) "An act to promote agriculture * * * and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, etc.," be printed showing the bill as reported in italics; the part to be omitted in line type; new matter agreed to in small capitals; and the pending amendment in bold-face type.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to ask a question, and then I will yield. Has the unfinished business been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that there was an agreement that the Senate should go into executive session at 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is perfectly true. I was going to suggest that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate, and then I shall make the motion.

Mr. SMOOT. It comes up automatically at 2 o'clock.

RURAL CREDITS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the rural-credits bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate proceeds to the consideration of executive business. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 28, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We wait upon Thee, our Father in heaven, with open minds and hearts for the inspiration of Thy spirit, that with clear vision, honest hearts, and patriotic devotion our sacred rights and hallowed traditions may be subserved.

We are confronted ever and anon by the civil, political, and religious rights of freemen; plutocracy and democracy are the opposing forces, each striving for supremacy. "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and mammon." Help us to serve Thee with all our mind, heart, and strength, under the spiritual leadership of the Prince of Men, who died for the liberty of all mankind. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES AND TRAVELERS UPON RAILROADS.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, there is reported from the Senate a bill in regard to a minimum fine for violations of the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads. That bill is on the Speaker's table. There is a House bill, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of the same purport.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the Senate bill?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not have the Senate bill number. The number of the House bill is 9132. We desire to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the main thing is to find the Senate bill, and it would be easier if you had the number.

Mr. DEWALT. I will defer it, then, until I can get the number.

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary, first, to secure unanimous consent, anyway, because the Senate bill came over here before the House bill was put on the calendar. The Senate bill is No. 3769, an act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907. Is that it?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes, sir; that is it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3769 and consider it now.

Mr. MANN. The House bill that the gentleman refers to was reported to the House only yesterday. I would like to have a chance to look over it. I hope the gentleman will postpone his request until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not object.

Mr. DEWALT. I withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker, at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HEATON, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SMITH of Texas, for two days, on account of illness.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, we can sometimes best understand the purpose of legislation if we make a practical application of its expected results, and I hope you will pardon me for giving this little incident. There was a large cotton farmer in my district who raised home supplies. On one occasion he planted 20 acres in turnips, arranging with a commission house in Macon to ship and sell wherever he could find a market. When he was shipping his turnips he stopped at a store in a little city and saw several barrels of turnips. He asked the merchant where the turnips were grown, and learned that they came from Canada. He said to the merchant, "I have larger and better turnips than those. Let me send you some of mine so that you can sell Georgia turnips instead of Canadian, as you can afford to sell them cheaper by saving the freight charges from Canada here." The farmer sent these turnips over to the merchant. After an absence of 10 days, he stopped by the merchant's on his way home and saw what he thought was another lot of his turnips, and remarked, "I see you have ordered another lot of turnips from the farm." The merchant answered, "No; these are the same you sent over before leaving home. The people will come in and look at them, admiring them in every instance, but they always buy from the Canadian barrel."

The farmer commented on this fact to his commission merchant, telling him of his experience. The commission merchant advised "not to offer for sale direct from the farm. Ship all to me. I will repack, reship to your town, then they will sell there." This was done and the consumers were so delighted with the new variety of "Canadian" turnips that they bought them entirely, excluding altogether those from Canada. We see from this that the Biblical statement "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country and his own home" may be applied to so ordinary a thing as turnips.

I merely relate this incident to show the need of perfecting some method of organization which will enable the consumer and the producer to get together. Marketing and rural organization are among the foremost items in this bill, and I heartily indorse them, and trust that the great Department of Agriculture may be able to solve this important problem which now confronts the consumer as well as the producer, and every man, woman, and child is a consumer.

The farmers of the South have been criticized, and justly so, for relying on one money crop, namely, cotton. I assert that diversification would not be the exception but the rule if a market could be found for other products than cotton. The southern farmer has relied upon cotton from the fact that it has a ready market. It could be sold for six days in the week at any crossroads store until 1914, when the European war broke out, and when for the first time in history cotton was without a market. From the very fact that the southern farmer was dependent upon cotton as his only money crop this condition brought consternation, and almost bankruptcy, throughout the broad limits of the South. In 1915 the cotton acreage was reduced, less fertilizer was used, and a small crop was the result, bringing fairly good prices, which held up though the war was still in progress. In that year the farmers of the South diversified their crops more than any year during their history. Many farmers made quite a surplus of cereals and large amounts of meat. Many of them had a prosperous year, comparatively, but they had no way of disposing of this surplus crop so that they might enjoy the financial advantage which their satisfactory crops should have brought them. The Department of Agriculture has this great question to solve, and I am earnestly in favor of the proposed appropriation and such other appropriations as may be necessary to make their effort a success.

The fruit growers of Georgia for many years shipped their fruit regardless of supply and demand. The majority of this fruit was shipped to the city of New York with the result that the New York market was greatly overstocked. Their crops brought barely enough to pay the freight charges, and, in fact, in some instances did not bring enough. Fruit speculators would buy the fruit, place it in cold storage, then ship to other markets and sell at tremendous profits. The growers saw that the continuation of this plan meant ruin and they formed a fruit-growers' association, which now dictates the destination of every carload of fruit shipped by members of the association, frequently diverting a car in transit. The result is that the fruit growers of the South by this method have protected themselves and are reaping a profit from this great summer crop.

In May, 1913, Congress appropriated $50,000 for the purpose of acquiring and diffusing information connected with the marketing and distribution of farm products. This resulted in the establishment of the Office of Markets. Later the appropriation which was made for the investigation of cooperation among farmers was transferred to that office, the name of which was changed to the "Office of Markets and Rural Organizations." This office was created because of the recognized need for improvement in the processes of marketing and distributing the agricultural products of the country and for solving many vital problems inherent in life in our rural communities. The Department of Agriculture for years has devoted much time, thought, and work in teaching the farmers how to produce more and better crops; he must now be helped to market these to advantage, for it is of little use to increase the quantity and improve the quality if this can not be done.

I received a marked copy of the Farmers' Open Forum at my office which had an interesting article on better marketing methods, I wish to read only a few lines from this article:

This is the idea upon which the farmers of Maine have been working. They first organized local unions, having in mind the organization of a State central body. After eight of these small unions had been organized, a State-wide meeting was held and the representatives from these eight locals organized the Farmers' Union of Maine, which is the State central body. There are now 78 of these locals, all working independent of each other, but through the central body. This central body acts as the selling and buying agency for the locals. Twenty-two warehouses have been erected. There are 25 grain stores and 6 grocery stores. In addition, a wholesale grain house has been started, a distributing house in Boston and New York City, and they contemplate establishing a wholesale grocery store.

The farmers of Maine believe that it is just as important to buy right as it is to sell right. We find that we are able to save about $40 on a carload of grain. We save the farmers $2 per ton on commercial fertilizer, which meant a total saving of $400,000 to the farmers of the State.

This is the result of cooperation. Rural organization is an important factor in the great effort now being made to get the farmer back to the farm for it makes farming a successful business. In my opinion there should be county, district, or township units, with a central organization in each State, and the Office of Markets and Rural Organizations in Washington City the general or national head. By some such method all products for sale could be known and distributed directly from the producer to the consumer. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I was born on a farm just after the Civil War, when everyone was poor and when times were hard. I am, therefore, familiar with farming and farm life. My sympathies have always been with the farmer, and I have always looked at things from his viewpoint.

I represent in part a great agricultural State, and it is natural that I should take a deep interest in the consideration of this bill. I have been both gratified and instructed by the discussion of the various items in this measure during the past 10 days. I have frequently wished the past few days that many, if not all my constituents, could be present in the gallery and witness the very deep interest that Members of Congress take in the welfare of the farming class of this country. Many of them are not aware of what the Federal Government is doing to assist the farmer.

AMOUNT APPROPRIATED FOR AGRICULTURE.

This bill carries an appropriation of $24,501,093 in addition to a standing appropriation of about $6,000,000, so that in round numbers $30,000,000 is annually spent through the Department of Agriculture in aid of the farmers throughout the Union. In my judgment no money is better spent by the General Government.

The records show that about six and one-half million farmers live in the United States, and that about 45,000,000 people, including women and children, are dependent on them. The entire country is largely dependent upon them for prosperity. When the farmer's acres yield fair returns and the markets are good, the proceeds of his crops go into the channels of trade, and not only is the farmer and his family benefited, but the business of the entire community is stimulated. When his funds are plentiful the farmer beautifies and enlarges his home, builds a bigger and better barn, puts out an orchard, repairs his fences, spends more money for family conveniences and comforts, insists on better educational facilities for his children, and contributes liberally to the building of schools and churches in the community in which he lives. The money derived from the sale of abundant crops goes to the blacksmith, the carpenter, the laborer, the merchant, and into the banks of the community, so that everyone shares in his prosperity. The General Government should do everything it legitimately can through legislation to help this industry—the leading one of the country.

I am gratified to know that this bill is not sectional. Some of the appropriation bills which we are called upon to consider make large appropriations for certain localities. Every section of the country will be benefited by this bill.

I congratulate the House and the country upon the splendid committee which has spent days and weeks in preparing this measure, carefully examining every item going into it. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of every Member of the House and of the committee when I specially commend the chairman of the committee for the great work he has done in the interest of scientific and practical agriculture. From the discussion of the various items of the bill he has shown that he is in deep sympathy with the purposes of it and that he understands the reasons for the insertion of every item. In answering inquiries propounded in debate, he has always been courteous and considerate, and has deservedly won the confidence of both sides of the Chamber.

The Department of Agriculture was established in 1887. At first the appropriation for it was small, but the amount has been gradually increased from year to year.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The Bureau of Animal Industry is one of great importance to the entire country. The bill appropriates for this bureau the aggregate amount of $2,222,777. Of this sum, large amounts will be used for the detection, prevention, treatment, and cure of the various diseases of domestic animals and communicating the results to the people throughout the United States. The sum of $360,000 is carried in the bill for the investigation, control, and eradication of hog cholera. Few people know the immense loss caused by this disease. The records show that from January 1 to November 1, 1915, a period of 10 months, Oklahoma sustained a loss of $632,874 from it, and the entire United States shows the enormous loss of $75,000,000 caused by hog cholera the past year. Reports show that a serum has been found which when properly used in the vaccination of hogs prevents their taking the cholera. The Department of Agriculture is not only interested in finding the remedy, but by means of bulletins and articles in agricultural papers and through demonstrators the department is educating the farmers how to protect their hogs from this disease.

My home paper, just received, contains a local item showing the work of the Government agent in demonstrating to farmers how to use the serum in the vaccination of their hogs.

Other items under this head contain adequate appropriations for the investigation and study of diseases of every kind or character of horses, mules, and cattle.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Under this head there is appropriated the sum of $2,511,620, providing in detail for the study of every disease of plant life. Of this appropriation there will be used for the investigation of diseases of fruit trees the sum of $63,615, and the sum of $59,000 for the investigation of diseases of cotton, potatoes, truck crops, and forage crops. Special attention is given to the testing of seed samples, grasses, clover, alfalfa, lawn grass, or other seeds. Farmers are protected through this appropriation against adulterated seeds.

The bill carries an item of $252,540 for the purchase and congressional distribution of valuable seeds and plants. There is much discussion annually leveled against this item. Similar items have been carried in appropriation bills for a great number of years. In my opinion, the distribution of these seeds and plants serves a useful purpose. They stimulate the farmer's boy and girl, as well as their father and mother, to take extra pains in preparing beds and planting them. A package of seed does not cost much, and because of the special care taken with them I feel sure they serve a useful purpose in encouraging the boy and girl, as well as their parents, to more carefully study gardening.

I remember when a boy living across the Arkansas line in the Indian Territory when by some chance the name of my father was given the Department of Agriculture and he received a package of seed. Every member of the family took great pains in seeing that the seed bed was carefully prepared, enriched, and cultivated. Again, the sending of these seed, which cost the Government but little, serves to remind the people at home that their Member of Congress has them in mind and acts as a remembrance card from him. We do not prize an Easter card so much for its value or beauty as we do for the kindly remembrance of a friend.

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Under the heading of Bureau of Soils there is appropriated the sum of $328,735 for investigating the composition and productivity of soils and for ascertaining and determining the best possible sources of fertilizers, including potash and nitrates. In a new fertile State, like Oklahoma, not much attention has been paid in the past to enriching the soil. The allotment of the land has brought individual ownership and the people are beginning to study the best methods of improving it. Nothing should be permitted to go to waste about the barnyards, but everything conserved and properly distributed. The same land should not be planted to cotton and corn from year to year, but the crops should be rotated—planted to forage crops, sown to small grain, peas, alfalfa, and the grasses. Some soils need commercial fertilizers, and the Government, through the Department of Agriculture, is doing a great work in educating the farmers as to the things necessary to build up certain weak soils. The farmers are beginning to appreciate also that all soils are not adapted to raising the same crops, and that some land may be profitably planted to one crop, while a crop of another kind would prove a total failure on the same land. Hence the study of the different kinds of soil is of great value to the farmers.

Large appropriations are carried in the bill for the investigation of insects affecting cotton, including the boll weevil, and, in fact, the study of all insects which destroy the crops grown in the garden or field and the fruits in the orchard.

FARMERS' BULLETINS.

This bill not only appropriates money for the use of the Department of Agriculture to study and find out the remedies but items are carried appropriating adequate sums for the carrying of this information to the farmers. This is the point that I want to emphasize. The information would serve but little purpose if it were not turned to practical use. I want to do everything possible to press upon the attention of every farmer in the country the results of the investigation of agents of the department, published in bulletins carefully prepared upon practically every subject in which the people are interested. There is not a crop grown upon the farm, a vegetable planted in the garden, or a fruit grown in the orchard but what valuable information is collected regarding it. These bulletins also deal with every other subject in which the citizen is interested. Whether you live upon the farm or in the city, if you will take time to look over the list, many bulletins will be found in which you are interested, the reading of which will be of benefit.

I can not too strongly commend them to the people of my district, and in order to advise them of the benefits that may be derived from them, I have taken pains to invite their attention to the bulletins and supply, so far as I could, all requests for them.

FARM DEMONSTRATORS.

While very much valuable information is communicated to the farmers of the country through bulletins, the metropolitan press, and agricultural journals, I want to testify to the great work that is being done by the farm demonstrators throughout the country. The people of Oklahoma keenly appreciate the importance of their work. We have one of the best agricultural colleges in the United States, largely attended, and while comparatively new, Oklahoma having been admitted to statehood in 1907, we are beginning to feel the good effects of the great work being done at this college.

In addition we have six district agricultural schools, and by a provision of our constitution agriculture is taught in all the schools throughout the State, so that through the agricultural college, district colleges, normal schools, city schools, and rural schools scientific farming is being taught and practical information disseminated. Notwithstanding this great work I want to attest to the valuable work being done by the farm demonstrators, who go among the people upon their farms and bring the results of the study of agriculture in a practical way to the farmers themselves. They test the soils for the farmers, advise them what to plant upon this tract or upon that one, and give them information as to how best to cultivate farm crops, as well as to harvest and take care of them. They encourage them to produce more and better live stock and instruct them how to prevent and cure diseases. There has already been a great awakening among the farmers, particularly throughout the South and West, which in a few years will manifest itself in the general prosperity of the farming classes throughout the entire country.

BUREAU OF MARKETING.

This bill also contains an item making an appropriation for a bureau of marketing. The farmers not only need to be educated how to care for and improve their soils, making them yield more wheat, corn, cotton, potatoes, and other crops, they not only need to be encouraged to buy more live stock and improve the same, but they need the helpful, sympathetic assistance of the Government in securing to them the full value of everything raised or grown upon the farm. They need to be directed, so that they may come into direct communication with the consumers. The profits of the middlemen should go to the farmers themselves. The building of good roads will give them better and quicker transportation facilities. All transportation charges, whether upon the dirt road, the railroad, or upon the rivers, should be reduced to a minimum and saved to the producers. The parcel post, when enlarged and when rural routes are more generally established, will be of great benefit to the farmers.

In addition the farmer needs cheap money. I am confident that this Congress before adjourning will enact rural-credits legislation, which will afford a means whereby the farmers of the country can borrow cheap money with which to buy and improve their farms, improve their live stock, and, when their crops mature, enable them to hold the same until they obtain a favorable market.

To aid in some small way in accomplishing these results is my sole ambition in aspiring to a seat in this House. I have voted for every item in this appropriation bill which commends itself to me as being in the interest of the real farmers of the country. Everyone appreciates that the farmer himself, his good wife, and the farmer's boy and girl work longer hours than any other class of citizens. The entire country depends upon the farmer for subsistence. It is well that Congress give thoughtful consideration to his welfare and enact all legislation which will better his condition and bring, so far as legislation can, the comforts and conveniences of the town and city to farm life. By doing so we will increase the population of the rural communities and carry happiness, contentment, and prosperity to the great farming class. [Applause.]

For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and the purchasing of farm supplies, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distributing of farm and food products, $285,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a very important item, for a very important purpose. Will the gentleman from South Carolina indicate whether this appropriation has been increased over last year?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; this appropriation has been considerably increased. The total increase is $64,620.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In this paragraph?

Mr. LEVER. In this paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the next paragraph appropriating $136,600 new?

Mr. LEVER. That work is not entirely new, but the amount is considerably increased in that appropriation also. There is a new item on page 73.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am informed that the increase on the present item is about $47,000.

Mr. LEVER. The increase on the present item is $64,620. There are some transfers which make the difference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain why that increase is necessary?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman understands, of course, that the Office of Markets and Rural Engineering is one of the new services in the Department of Agriculture. It has been in operation now about three or four years. Heretofore the activities of that bureau have been in the nature of gathering together information on marketing and the distributing of farm products. Under the direction of the committee they have been going rather slowly, because we have felt that, since this was a new service, they ought to be careful to make no mistake. Now they have organized and developed to such an extent that they are able to extend their operations rather materially to other lines, and the increase here is for the purpose of extending those operations, mostly with respect to cooperative purchasing and marketing; marketing grains, marketing live stock and animal by-products; marketing seeds, hay, and dairy products, and investigation of marketing business practice.

The larger part of this increase will be used in extending the investigations and work of the department along these lines.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To what extent does the bureau help the farmers who raise farm products like tomatoes, potatoes, and so forth?

Mr. LEVER. The next item deals with that specifically.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is any of the sum of $285,000 provided for in this item used for the purpose of helping the farmers who raise truck and supply city markets?

Mr. LEVER. Some of the money appropriated under this paragraph has been so used, but the fund for that purpose in the present bill is carried in the next item of $136,600.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where is the most of the $285,000 used—at Washington, or in field work?

Mr. LEVER. It is pretty well divided between the work in Washington and field work. They have a great many agents in the country gathering information, which later will be analyzed and digested in Washington and made useful. Let me illustrate this work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would be glad if the gentleman will do so. This is one of the most important items in the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Let me illustrate this line of work under the present item, and I will take cotton, because I am more familiar with the marketing of cotton than that of any other product. Under this item the Office of Markets has been making surveys, 100 or more, of the practices and methods of marketing cotton in the various cotton markets in the South with a view to determine all of the economic factors that enter into the farmer's price, the price to the commission men, to the cotton merchants, and to the port of exportation or local mills of consumption in this country; to determine the various factors that enter into the final price; to determine whether or not the original producer is getting an equitable share of the price of the cotton.

I think it was in an Oklahoma city that it was discovered that on the local cotton market a bale of cotton of the highest grade sold for from $3 to $20 less than a bale of cotton of a less grade sold for on the same day in the same market. That is a tremendous economic waste to somebody. The farmer in that case is the burden bearer of that waste.

I think I can assert without hesitancy that on account of the system or lack of system in grading cotton in the South there is a loss to the farmer of from $5 to $10 on each bale of cotton produced. That, on a 15,000,000 bale crop, would amount, at $10 a bale, to $150,000,000. That is a tremendous economic loss. The farmer bears it. The purpose of the Office of Markets is to bring these striking facts to the attention of producers and to the attention of consumers with the view of interesting them in better methods of grading, handling, transportation, and distribution in general.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for five minutes more so that I may yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have some knowledge of the cotton business. We have about three classes of cotton graders—men who give to cotton the grade which finally fixes the price. We have the honest cotton grader, a man who really knows the difference between different grades. Then we have the competent and sometimes, I am sorry to say, dishonest grader who knows the grade but does not grade according to his knowledge. And finally we have the third class, which consists of the honest man but incompetent grader.

The dishonest grader who is competent dishonestly grades, and the farmer loses by that process. The honest but incompetent grader necessarily and naturally undergrades, according to his own judgment, in order to protect himself from his own ignorance. The result is, again the farmer loses. Now, the purpose of this work is to devise ways and means and methods by which we can bring these facts strongly to the people, with the view of improving the system.

In one place in Arkansas where these facts were brought to the attention of the farmers, the department, having sent one of its expert graders there, in four months developed the facts and so called them to the attention of the public that the farmers themselves organized into an association and hired an expert grader at $3,000 a year. When that happened the department withdrew their representative and sent him into some other community, there to demonstrate what it meant to have an efficient, competent, and honest grading of cotton. Another thing, it was brought to the attention of the committee, and I did not know anything about it, although I have been in the cotton business all my life, more or less, that a great deal of the cotton of this country—more than a million bales last season—is sold in the seed without ginning. The statement was made that it is absolutely impossible to grade cotton correctly in the seed, and it is estimated that on each bale of cotton sold in the seed and graded in the seed there is a loss of about $6 a bale to the man who sells it. The fact was further developed that in all the Southern States—South Carolina less than any other, for there only 23,000 bales were so sold—over a million bales during the last season were sold in the seed. If that is true, and there is a loss of $6 a bale by selling in the seed, it amounted to a loss of $6,000,000 to the cotton producers of the South. Now, that is because the producer does not know and has not been informed that it is a bad business practice to sell cotton in the seed.

It is the function of this appropriation in this item to gather together such facts, to get such information, and in turn to disseminate it for the use of the public. As I said at the outset, I refer to cotton only as an example. Under this item work is done on other farm products, including live stock, hay, grain, seed, dairy products, and so on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell how much of this $285,000 is expended for making these investigations for the marketing of cotton?

Mr. LEVER. I have that information here; yes. I have the information of what was expended in 1916, and the appropriation for 1917 would be relatively a little greater. For cotton, $23,300. I can give it all to the gentleman if he desires.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know about what proportion of the $285,000 would be expended for cotton investigations.

Mr. LEVER. Twenty-three thousand three hundred dollars, with the relative increase in this item.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will become of the rest of the money? Will that go for investigation of farm and food products generally?

Mr. LEVER. No; the balance of that appropriation would be used in making investigations of cooperative purchasing and marketing of farm products and other projects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For general farm products?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. That would be $24,100; and then a certain other amount, $54,220, would be used in making the marketing surveys of methods and costs of marketing; marketing grades and standards would take up $12,400; city marketing and distribution would be $12,000; transportation and storage investigations, $12,000; miscellaneous problems in marketing and cooperation, $30,800; marketing by parcel post and express, investigation thereof, $15,280; marketing live stock, meats, and animal by-products, $23,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will take the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to yield to me a little of his time.

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on line 10, in the second paragraph from the one we are now considering, page 72, provision is made for another appropriation of $48,000 for investigation and demonstration of standards relating to cotton, tares, and so forth. All the way through the representatives of the cotton States are taking care of the interests of the cotton planter on the floor of the House. There may be no objection to that, because it is natural that the men coming from the cotton States will take care of their own. I do not blame them for that; but in view of the explanation which is made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] as to the conditions that prevail with respect to cotton, and in view of the fact that we appropriate for investigating the cotton market, for making censuses of cotton, for looking after the cotton planter from the time the seed goes into the ground until the cotton is taken out of the boll—in view of all these things, it seems to me that if we are to appropriate sums like $285,000, including the sum in the paragraph following for $136,000, some attention should be given to some of the other products that arise from the farm. If the eastern farmer does not understand this situation——

Mr. LEVER. Oh, the gentleman knows that these investigations cover every possible farm product.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am pleased to be informed of that; but I am calling the attention of the committee, without in any way reflecting upon the earnestness of the Representatives of the cotton States to look after their own, to the fact that all over the country in the farming districts there are droughts, there are periods of distress, there are times when cyclones sweep the grain fields, there are times when there are gluts in the market, there are times when other farmers suffer losses, who ought also to have the benefit of information, advice, and assistance from the Government, if other sections of the country have it. I say if the eastern farmer or the western farmer or the northern farmer or the southern farmer does not understand what is being done in certain lines on certain farms or on certain plantations it is his own fault; and if it happens, as it did, when there was distress in the cotton fields a year ago, that the farmers of New Jersey ran up against a complete glut in the potato market or were unable to sell tomatoes, which they have to throw into the rivers, they ought also to be considered.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, the very next item takes care of that. We are furnishing the most comprehensive information for the first time in the history of the Government in that line, even making use of the telegraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say that that is the purpose of the next paragraph?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely. It is to take care of the perishable products—tomatoes, cantaloupes, peaches, strawberries, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I renew all of the remarks that I made respecting the assiduity of our friends from the cotton States, and hail this first glimpse of information with respect to those farmers in other sections of the country who may sometimes suffer from weather or market conditions, just as they do in the cotton fields. If it is true that the succeeding item carries $136,600 for helping the tomato raiser, the potato raiser, or the truck raiser in States where farming is conducted in more congested areas, and where the product is more perishable than it is on the great cotton plantations, I shall be pleased.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I just want to ask the gentleman a short question. Now that you are going to have the potato raiser and the tomato raiser fixed, as well as the cotton raiser and the wheat raiser, what are you going to do with the balance of us?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, we will take care of all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think every farmer ought to be treated alike. We have taken excellent care of the tobacco and the cotton farmer and it is time that the man who raises farm produce and truck have a chance.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I note from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that the tomato man has raised a new issue. Seeing the abuse in the expenditure of money for dredging rivers in the East, he proceeds to fill them up with the local tomatoes and then make the raid on the Treasury to dredge them out. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has criticized the opposition to the rivers and harbors with unsparing tongue in both prose and rhyme. He has at least uncovered one reason for dredging his Delaware. That is to remove the tomato deposit.

I opposed the river and harbor bill, first, because it called for $39,608,410 appropriations at a time when we did not have that amount of free legal-tender money in the National Treasury. Second, while I favor reasonable appropriations for public improvements which are capable of standing on their own merits, I do not favor increasing the floating indebtedness or resorting to bonded indebtedness of the Government for that purpose. Roundly speaking, we have a deficit of $50,000,000 for the present fiscal year and a much greater one for the last fiscal year. Third, I opposed a large portion of the proposed appropriations because it is to be used in fitting up harbors for the landing of large amounts of foreign goods, especially farm products, the foreign importer not being charged even a cent to keep up the harbor repairs, say nothing about contributing to the support of the Government or protecting American industries. Fourth, a large part of the appropriations are for canals which parallel the ocean and at no great distance therefrom. If a double water track were desired, why not parallel the shore line out a little farther in the sea, the path being already made and would need no dredging. Fifth, much of the appropriations are for obliterated creeks in the Carolinas, streams of doubt in the Gulf States, and lost rivers in Texas. Again, there are mountain streams in the Rockies which ought to be insured against forest fires, instead of being expensively dredged, and again there are dry canyons in the far West which are flushed only by summer's dews and the melting frosts of autumn. These last are capable of navigation by airships only, and yet the appropriations are provided for. In many of these cases the appropriations are defensible on a basis not of their merits but on the sole ground that each is the part of a house of cards, and is no less meritorious than many of the rest. [Applause.]

I was very much interested, Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this market office and the appropriation to be made for its maintenance. I desire to talk about the cattle-feeding industry. It was discussed by a number in general debate when this bill came up for consideration, especially by my colleagues from Nebraska, STEPHENS and REAVIS.

I speak of this subject with some degree of personal knowledge. For a number of years I have been engaged, until within the last three, rather extensively in the business. It was stated on the floor of the House by one Member and agreed to by others that the cattle-feeding and meat-producing industry in this country was in a very bad way. Further, that the cattle feeders were losing money. As a general proposition, it was the conclusion of the speakers that there has, in the last few years, been an elimination of competition at the great central markets where fat cattle are sold for slaughter. The second proposition is that during the last year thousands of American feeders have become bankrupt. Now, I am not certain about the latter fact, but I accept the statements made as being correct for the purpose of this discussion.

Now, these conditions are not unexpected, because during the last five years the trend of legislation here in reference to the cattle and meat industry had its purpose to bring about this precise condition. For five years there has been an incessant clamor for a reduction of prices of cattle meat products. Beginning with the reciprocity measure passed by this House in 1911 and followed by the farmers' free-list bill, which, as passed by this House, admitted meats and cereals free into this country, and ending in the Underwood tariff law, which placed live stock and meats on the free list, the one purpose has been, as I have on several occasions expressed upon this floor, to reduce the profits of the cattle and meat industry.

There may have been some on this floor and in the country who believed that when this reduction of profits came it would not fall upon the farmer and the cattle feeder. But anyone who understood the business and understood the power of the packers knew that if there was to be any loss it would not fall on the packer, but would fall upon the cattle feeders and the farmers. Now, then, it has fallen, as stated by a number of gentlemen. Personally I expected that it would. Frequently upon the floor of this House I warned those who were interested in cattle feeding throughout the country that the placing of meats and live stock upon the free list would create a condition in which the farmer would be at a disadvantage; and that is where we now find him. It is a case of distinct confession from the Democratic side of the House that what we on this side warned the country would follow their legislation has actually come to pass.

In the first place, when by the imposition of a good, strong duty at our ports there were some cattle imported and very little meats, every man who had a herd of cattle or a flock of mutton sheep could fairly estimate the consuming power of the American people and the productive power of the American farmer and cattleman.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; briefly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does the gentleman believe that the price paid for food cattle or hogs is controlled by the law of supply and demand?

Mr. SLOAN. I understand that that is the large rule in all markets. But some people have a good deal to do with the control of supply and demand. That is to say, if our dealings in cattle and meats were confined practically to the United States—that is, one-fifteenth of the population of the world—and the outside practically kept from mingling largely with our business, then, of course, we could know more certainly the demand and the sources of our supply, and we could govern ourselves accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] for his request.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] to have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 45 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SLOAN. For just one question. What is it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The other day when your colleague from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] was talking upon this subject he made quite a remarkable speech, and, as I understood him, he made the statement that the removal of the tariff on meat had not made any difference whatever in the price. If that is so, what has been accomplished by the removal of it?

Mr. SLOAN. Of course, the expressed purpose of removing the tariff on cattle and meats was to cause a lowering of price; because if that was not the case there has been absolutely no reason for throwing away $20,000,000 of revenue. That would have been the amount of duties paid on the imported cattle, beef, and veal since the Underwood tariff law passed if the Payne law duties had been collected. I assume if it was not for the purpose of affecting the price they would not be in favor of further depleting our Treasury. That will answer the gentleman's inquiry as to what was accomplished.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to proceed, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska refuses to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. The value, if any, of this law is a matter of information. It seems to be a means of "first aid to the injured," after the industry has been assailed, a sort of a crutch to be used where a bungling surgeon has sawed off the wrong leg. A man who has a carload of cattle must now consider not only the consumptive power of the 100,000,000 of American people, and the productive power of the few million people who are interested directly or indirectly in the production of meat, but he must know about the production of cattle and meats in every part of the globe. The packers have their systems of information complete. The small cattle feeder can not afford that. The freeing of meats and cattle therefore gave the great packers a distinct advantage. The ordinary American can through various governmental and public reports inform himself as to the United States, but he has not means of world information which free meat makes necessary.

Free listing cattle and meat has broadened the problem of the meat producer. I say, in an entirely nonpartisan way, if it has so broadened the problem of the meat and cattle producer, then it is proper that we should have an appropriation of this character, so that the new and different methods of communication concerning markets, information concerning markets, the distribution of cattle, the importation of meats, and all that may become known regularly to those whose problem it is to buy, feed, and market the cattle.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BOOHER. Just for one question.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman tell the committee whether beef on foot to-day brings a higher price than it did two years ago?

Mr. SLOAN. I understand that beef on the foot to-day commands a fair price. I have not compared it with the price of two years ago.

Mr. BOOHER. That was not the question. Is not beef higher to-day on foot per hundredweight than it was two or three or four years ago?

Mr. SLOAN. I can not state just what it has been. The complaint has not been as to the price of beef to-day or last week or last month. I understand it is temporarily satisfactory. The complaint has been as to the price of beef during the months of October, December, and January. Following and based upon that period complaints have been made.

Mr. BOOHER. There was a slump during those months in the past, and then the price got back higher than it was before the slump.

Mr. SLOAN. The price is now back to a satisfactory level, and I want to explain why it is so.

Mr. BOOHER. Is not the main problem of the cattle feeder the high price of stock cattle?

Mr. SLOAN. I want to be frank with the gentleman from Missouri, who comes from a district having a great market. That, I understand, is one of the large sources of loss—the high price of feeders. It was one of the reasons which prompted me to advise my friends last fall against extending their cattle feeding.

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. And the reason for it has been this: Heretofore the American feeder has been in the habit of buying his feeders based upon the number of cattle produced in the United States, but now he is up against the number of cattle that are produced and may or may not come across our border entirely unhampered by tariff restrictions.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman permit just one more question?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Can the gentleman tell this committee how many stock cattle have been imported into the United States in one year since the passage of the Underwood bill; and if so, whether it is greater now, since the passage of the Underwood bill, than it was under the Dingley Act or the Payne bill? I mean stock cattle.

Mr. SLOAN. The increases have been stock cattle, and those fattened and ready for slaughter. The precise figures of what were stock cattle and what were not I can not state; they are not readily obtainable. But in the first two years after the passage of the Underwood law there were imported into this country 1,321,293 head of cattle, whereas in the two years preceding that the number was only 853,298. It was stated on the floor of the House, in discussing this question, that the importations of cattle for the last period of a year or a few months had been very small.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman just let me ask him one more question on that?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Notwithstanding that importation of cattle, stock cattle are higher, and have been for the last two years, than ever before, have they not?

Mr. SLOAN. Farmers have paid too highly for their stock cattle. That is one argument in favor of this appropriation, and I stand for it. A great many feeders, forecasting the market for their products, did not take into account the heavy importation of veal and beef which the packers, now owning so heavily in the Argentine, can ship in or withhold at their convenience.

Mr. BOOHER. Notwithstanding this large increase of importation, stock cattle have been higher than they ever were before in the history of the country.

Mr. SLOAN. During the period of two and one-half years since the passage of the Underwood law stock cattle have been at times very high. They have fluctuated with other cattle. The feeder has not in buying them considered sufficiently the changed conditions which free trade has caused.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that at times they have been very low; that is, last October, November, and December? Is it not a fact that the price of stock cattle was then lower than it was the year before?

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again there?

Mr. HAUGEN. And is it not a fact that——

Mr. SLOAN. I can not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to call attention to what it has been for the last several months, at a period when it was stated that we have not been importing cattle in large numbers. For the months of August, September, October, and November, the period for the importation of cattle, which most largely contributed to the slump in the price of cattle for the late fall and early winter, we imported into this country 252,348 head of cattle.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I can not yield until I get these figures stated. Then, if I have time, I shall be pleased to yield. That is a larger importation of cattle for those four months than was ever made in a corresponding period in the history of the United States. For the months of October, November, and December of the year 1915, and the month of January, 1916, we imported 200,976 head of cattle, of the value of $7,370,000. In the same months we imported 49,804,643 pounds of beef and veal, of the value of $4,000,000.

Now, these figures to me demonstrate the fact that you introduce into cattle feeding and into meat production the large world factor which ordinarily is not communicated to the ordinary farmer or feeder, he having been used to considering the consumptive and productive power of this country alone. Now, if the Department of Agriculture can in any way further enlighten the men who are in this business, and whose business is important, I am very much in favor of the appropriation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a very brief question?

Mr. SLOAN. If it is very brief; yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman believe that the acquisition and diffusion among the people of the United States of useful information on the subject of marketing and distributing farm products and the purchasing of farm supplies will have a tendency to raise or lower the price of cattle on the hoof?

Mr. SLOAN. I feel that the gentleman from Ohio did not live up to his pledge of making the question real brief.

Mr. GOOD. The word "brief" was used in the sense of a lawyer's brief. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I made it as brief as possible, if the gentleman will excuse me, in order to obtain the enlightenment.

Mr. SLOAN. Well, the gentleman's sort of brevity would not be considered characteristic of the better class of wit. [Laughter.]

The diffusion of this information will, to some extent, inform the cattle feeder so that he may more advisedly buy his feeders and suggest when he may dispose of his finished product.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] on what he considers to be the cause of the unsatisfactory market for live stock. In my opinion, gentlemen of the committee, he has not even touched on the real trouble. The gentleman refused to yield for my question, which was his perfect right. I wanted to ask him if he thought that the packing combine of this country had anything to do with the fixing of prices.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield for a reply, as a matter of fairness? I yielded to him, but I could not yield too often.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. If that was the gentleman's question, I had already answered it, because it was stated on the floor, as I said, that the packers in the great centers had eliminated competition, and I accepted that statement as correct, and the packers do that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then I understand the gentleman to admit that the packers do have a great and material influence on the prices?

Mr. SLOAN. I not only admit it, I assert it. [Applause.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am gratified at that. Now, Mr. Chairman, what my friend has said about high prices for thin cattle, what we call stockers and feeders, is in a great degree true. That is, if he has said, as I understand he has, or at least intimated, that the price of thin cattle has been too high in proportion to the price paid for fat stock cattle in particular by the packers, that is true. But the laws of supply and demand have not been permitted to work out in a normal way. I want to cite a specific instance regarding the hog market. On October 20 and October 21, 1915, there was a violent fluctuation downward of $1.25 a hundred pounds. Some power manipulates the market. There are five big packing concerns in this country that control at least 68 per cent of the beef, mutton, and pork, and they fix the market price they pay and set the price to the consuming public also. Hearings have been held and are now in progress on a resolution to look into the whole economic proposition of supply and demand from the time the animal is born until it goes to the consumer. It has been shown by cattlemen from all over the country that the complaint of the feeders of live stock, who have been the losers, has not been a complaint against the tariff or a complaint against the stock breeders, but their complaint is almost entirely against the packer. [Applause.]

Mr. CLINE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLINE. It has been stated by the ranking member of the committee that prices were lower in October, November, and December, 1915, and in January following than they had been at any other time. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that the entire market was demoralized by the foot-and-mouth disease, and prices declined as much as $2 a hundred in the central markets of the United States, and if that condition was not taken advantage of by the packers themselves to pound the price down and squeeze the price of the producer and advance the price to the consumer?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is no question that the foot-and-mouth disease did have considerable to do with the demoralization of the market last fall, and the packers never overlook an opportunity to squeeze the producer and the consumer. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, we have here an illustration of the effort of some of our friends on the other side of the Chamber to attribute to the tariff all the ills that this country is heir to. Now, this is the situation. The feeders of the United States come to the Committee on Agriculture and tell it that prices are not satisfactory; that they are losing money. The Committee on Agriculture engages in an investigation looking to the discovery of the cause of this condition. That item is now under consideration. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] in his discussion of this matter wants the country to understand that the reason why the farmers and the feeders are not getting satisfactory prices is because of the Underwood tariff bill. That is the whole burden of his argument. The gentleman from Nebraska knows that there never was a time when meat was higher, and that the trouble is that between the man who has the stock to sell and the man who must buy the meat there is too much profit for the packers. The man who puts his grain and feed into beef cattle and hogs does not get a fair return for what he is putting into them, and yet the price of beef and pork would justify that return. There is no difficulty here with regard to the tariff. The tariff has not been effective during the European war. The tariff has not beaten down the price of stockers, has it? The tariff has not beaten down the price of beef, has it? No. The trouble is between the stocker and the beef—the great packing concerns of this country have been standing there squeezing both the man who feeds and the people who consume. [Applause.] The Committee on Agriculture, honestly undertaking in a constructive way to discover the difficulty and to meet it, recommends appropriations in this bill to be used for this purpose, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] wants the country to understand that the Committee on Agriculture are not on the right trail; that it is the Underwood tariff law. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] says he admitted—I did not hear his admission in his original statement, though I do not question that he made it—he did admit under questioning that the packing concerns are getting too much; but when he stood before this House and made his argument it was for the deliberate purpose of making the country believe that it was the Underwood tariff bill that was responsible. He made the deliberate effort to distract attention from the packing concerns, that are throttling the feeders of cattle and the men who eat meat products in this country by pointing the finger of accusation at the Underwood tariff bill. That is a fair sample of Republican statesmanship. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has asked the question, Did the tariff affect the price of cattle? I believe it is safe to say that up to the outbreak of the war the tariff did affect the price of cattle.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Affect it up or down?

Mr. HAUGEN. Down.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will make my statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman. As the gentleman remembers, the Underwood bill was passed for the purpose of reducing prices to the consumer in conformity with the declaration in the platform of the Democratic Party to aid the consumer in buying at a lower price. In order to carry out the Democratic policy the President sent Dr. Melvin to South America to make it easier for them to export cattle to this country, and to provide for regulations making it possible for the people of South America to export beef cattle to America. They got along swimmingly, and the live-stock producers of this country were on the highway to bankruptcy. But war broke out and the program was interfered with. As a result the shipments were then diverted from the United States to the war zone, and since that time the price of stock here has been fairly satisfactory.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does not the gentleman realize that during the time of the diversion of shipments, in 1915, that the live-stock market of the United States was in a most demoralized condition, more so than it ever had been?

Mr. HAUGEN. It was just as I have stated. The Underwood bill was in force, which encouraged shipments from South America exactly the same as was done in the shipment of grain. The gentleman will remember that corn costing 40 cents in Argentina was worth 80 cents a bushel in Chicago, but it was laid down here on the coast from Argentina for 50 cents a bushel. Corn finally moved along up to Chicago, with 10 cents freight added, and the price of corn went down owing to the importations from South America. Exactly the same thing happened with reference to Argentine beef. It could be laid down here at a much lower price than beef was selling for here at the time; hence a considerable amount of South American beef was sold, but the war interfered with the shipments. As a result the shipments were diverted from the United States to the war zone. With the present conditions, of course the tariff law does not affect this country or any other.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let me see if I understand the gentleman's statement. It is that because of the diversion of shipments of beef from Argentina the prices which had prevailed in 1915 became better?

Mr. HAUGEN. After the war started; certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Because of the diversion of the shipments from Argentina; is that the gentleman's argument?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; to other countries, because of the increased demand for beef on account of the war.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS. Does the gentleman state that the price of cattle is satisfactory, and does he mean fat cattle?

Mr. HAUGEN. The price is not satisfactory, but the dissatisfaction coming from feeders and cattlemen to-day is not because of the tariff act. The dissatisfaction comes from the manipulation of prices by the packers. [Applause.] We might as well be honest about this. The gentleman has referred to the foot-and-mouth disease. What happened? As the gentleman knows, the cattle coming from the quarantine districts were sent to the restricted districts, which the packers took advantage of to the extent of $2 to $2.50 a hundred. [Applause.]

The unfortunate thing is that many believe that Government officials are in a large degree responsible, not only in their failure to promptly stamp out the foot-and-mouth disease, but for prolonged quarantines and restricted districts, which largely accounts for the widespread opposition throughout the country to the department and which has evidently provoked so much discussion on the foot-and-mouth item.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to inject any politics into this discussion. The facts, however, ought to be clearly stated. I deny that cattle feeders in the United States are not making money under present conditions, and I do not believe that the big packers control prices of fat cattle in the sense that there is no effective competition among buyers at the yards. I arrive at these conclusions by my own experience as a cattle feeder and one who ships his cattle to Chicago and sells them year after year in that market. I do not always make money on a bunch of cattle; neither do I enjoy such pleasant experience in any other branch of my farming operations. I have had an experience covering more than a quarter of a century in handling feeding cattle in a modest way, and during that period, taken as a whole, the business has paid a satisfactory profit. This fact is conclusive proof to me that there is an open market for cattle and that it is possible to engage in this industry with confidence as to the financial returns.

The past two years have been unsatisfactory to the American stockman because of the prevalence of the foot-and-mouth disease. The quarantine measures which it was absolutely necessary to enforce worked hardships in many instances and demoralized the legitimate industry to a considerable degree. No discussion of this period will be fair which fails to make allowance for this abnormal disturbance. I fed cattle during this period and can speak from personal experience, but I am glad to say that even under such circumstances it was entirely possible to continue feeding and make a satisfactory profit.

In September, 1914, as I now recall it—perhaps in October of that year and shortly before the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease—I gave an order for 100 feeding cattle. This order was filled by Clay, Robinson & Co., in the Chicago yard, at an average price of $7.70 per 100 pounds. I did not go in person to the yards to select these cattle and did not even place a price limit on the order. It may seem strange to those who talk so glibly about the Cattle Trust controlling prices that an Indiana farmer would trust his agents at Chicago to purchase cattle on their own judgment as to quality and price. I know of no more reliable men in the business world than the commission men who buy and sell cattle at these great markets. I have been buying feeding cattle since 1890, and the price in 1914 was the highest I have ever paid for feeding cattle. To those who wish to consult tariff schedules in order to determine the price of cattle I may say that in 1890 I recall purchasing good feeding cattle from my own neighbors at an average price of $2.55 per hundred pounds.

These cattle were fed on the farm under the personal supervision of my nephew, Mr. Harry A. Moss, of Center Point, Ind. We began buying corn from our neighbors, paying 60 cents per bushel at the cribs in the fall of 1914, and gradually raising the price until we gave 74 cents per bushel for corn delivered at the feed lot in August, 1915. These prices were likewise the highest we have ever paid for corn, if the average for an entire year be taken. In the face of such a record, it sounds rather strange to hear an elaborate argument as to the disastrous effects of the Underwood tariff law on the price of farm products.

The first shipment of these cattle was made in July, 1915, to Chicago. It will be recalled that owing to the quarantine measures then in force Chicago was a closed market. Cattle could be shipped to that market only for immediate slaughter. These conditions gave the packers a monopoly of that market during the continuance of such restrictions. If it be the policy of the packers to rob farmers, they failed to avail themselves of the opportunity when our cattle were exposed for sale. The cattle sold for $10 per hundred pounds, and made a satisfactory profit. This sale was made by the same commission men who purchased the cattle as feeders; and again I did not go to the market. Here, then, is an example under the most extreme conditions which can exist. A contagious disease breaks out among cattle, and all markets are subjected to the restrictions of a rigid quarantine. No competition to packers is possible under existing conditions; and yet cattle are sold at prices which made it possible to clear a satisfactory profit on feeding stock purchased at extremely high prices and fed costly feed stuffs.

The next shipment of these cattle was made in November, 1915, and the price realized was $10.35 per hundred pounds. I am perfectly willing to put in the RECORD the cost items of the feeding of these cattle—what it cost to buy them in Chicago, freight, taxes, the price of the food they ate, and the selling price in Chicago—thereby conclusively showing that they realized a satisfactory profit.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish the gentleman would put those facts in the RECORD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Yes; to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman take issue with the feeders of the country? They say that they are feeding at a loss.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I am presenting the exact facts of one cattle feeder who did not lose money. I can not take issue with some imaginary gentlemen as to the results in their own business. If cattle feeders are generally losing money, and if they did lose money during the season of 1915, it is largely their own fault. I know of no business which demands higher skill than the feeding of cattle. It is a business which consumes large volumes of capital, and in which the profits largely depend upon the finish which is placed upon the cattle in the feed lots. There never has been a year that some men did not lose money feeding cattle and probably never will be one. The conditions never were more favorable to the cattle feeder than they are now. I have been feeding cattle since 1890. In that year we purchased cattle from our neighbors as low as $2.55 per 100 pounds; and, as I say, in 1914 I paid $7.70 a hundred.

The profit on any given lot of cattle depends upon many factors, chief among which are the cost price of feeders, the price of feed, the rate of gain, and the final selling price of the finished cattle. I have known cattle to lose money to their owner where every condition was favorable except the rate of gain. That is to say, a bunch of cattle may be purchased at a fair price; they may be fed at a fair cost; they may be shipped to a market where the ruling price for well-finished beeves of a good quality is satisfactory; and yet if the cattle have not done well in the feed lot the transaction may easily be a losing one for the owner of the cattle. I wish it were possible to establish conditions which would make all men skillful in all their undertakings. I wish it were possible to banish all failures on the farm and among farm operations, and if these ideal conditions shall be established, then I will advise all men to engage in the business of feeding cattle. Until then, however, only those who know the business of buying, feeding, and of selling cattle will be able to make profits, escape losses, and avoid controversies with an imaginary Cattle Trust at every market center.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] believes that there is a Cattle Trust and that prices are arbitrarily fixed at the great market centers. I shall not attempt to discuss how the price level is fixed. I do not know, for instance, all the elements which controls the price of other articles on the daily markets. I have referred particularly to the first shipment of cattle in July which were sold to the packers because Chicago was then a closed market. It so happened that our second lot was exposed for sale immediately that the quarantine was raised so as to permit the shipping of live cattle from Chicago to the eastern cities. Now, what happened? These cattle were sold to shippers and were slaughtered in eastern cities because these buyers were willing to pay a higher price than the packers for the quality of cattle I had on the market that day. There was not only theoretical competition but there was active competition. There was effective competition.

Now, who set the price on the lot of cattle? I had the pleasure of being present when the sale was negotiated. Before the cattle had been exposed for sale, the commission man, the man who represented my interests and who was paid by me—the firm who has sold cattle for me for a quarter of a century—looked over the bunch and I asked him his opinion as to their value. "What will those cattle bring on to-day's market?" was the question I put to him. In reply he said, "Mr. Moss, I think we will make a top out of the bunch; I think I can get $10.40 a hundred," and in less than an hour he sold them for $10.35 a hundred. In other words, he guessed within 5 cents of what the cattle did sell for. Does that instance bear out the assertion that the packers control the price and fix the price levels? These cattle did sell for the extreme top that day. I was proud that I got the top of the market, because I had been trying to achieve that for 20 years. There is a great deal to this question of cattle feeding. It is one that requires experience; it requires money; it requires brains; and, finally, it requires good judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about the cattle-feeding business. I have a brother who is one of the best-known farmers in the West. I said to him once, "Why in the world do you not feed cattle?" "Because," said he, "I have got too much sense. A man who makes money feeding cattle must know that business from the bottom up, and I do not." That is the trouble with two-thirds of the cattle feeders.

Mr. Chairman, there is no business in the world that is done on so small a margin of profit as the packing business by the beef packers of the country. That is the reason they have the business. Last year Swift & Co. did a business of over $400,000,000. That is more business, by a large amount, than the Government of the United States did through the Post Office Department, with a post office in every hamlet and city in the land. I do not now recall what the total profit was, but it was not a very large amount of profit to be made on a business of over $400,000,000. I have no doubt the packers, who are human beings, very often do not pay as high a price as the seller would like to have them pay, but it is to the interest of the packers to continue their business, and hence it is to the interest of the packers to encourage the men who raise cattle by letting them make a profit. It is not to their interest to destroy the feeding business. The packers are doing more now to encourage the production of live stock in the country than we are, and we are doing something. I have heard gentleman after gentleman on the floor of the House abuse the packers because—well, I suppose to do so is popular in their districts; but what they say is based largely upon misinformation. I do not hold the packers out as angels any more than I hold the feeders out as angels, and I am not going to take more time, except to repeat that there is no large or small business in this country conducted on so small a margin of profit as is the packing business by the big packers.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to project myself into this tariff discussion, although I think it is true that the Underwood tariff law prior to the war in Europe did affect the price of cattle adversely, as it affected the price of corn adversely. We had before the Committee on Agriculture experts in the handling of corn—men who were specialists in the handling of corn—who testified that the reduction in the tariff on corn did result in a reduction in the price paid to the producer of corn in this country.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose particularly to address myself to one phase of the work done under the appropriation which we are now discussing, and that is the proposition of marketing business practice. One of the difficulties with which the farmer is confronted in selling his grain or cattle is that he has no standard method, in fact no method at all, by which he can determine, as the manufacturer determines it, the cost of the different elements which enter into the production of the animal or the agricultural product. This bureau is undertaking to establish a method by which the farmer can determine the elements of cost in the production of any agricultural product which he produces. Doubtless many farmers are figuring these costs now, but the great bulk of the farmers are not figuring them. They have no way of determining whether the price they get represents a reasonable profit on the investment or not, and this is one of the great difficulties with which we are constantly confronted in our efforts to deal with the great problem of marketing. This office is designed to investigate this question and work out a system of cost accounting which can be applied by the farmer. This service goes much further than that. It has made an investigation into the methods of accounting in the country elevator, and has worked out a uniform system which has been adopted by more than 450 elevators in the country. The adoption of this system results in better service to the farmer, in his getting more nearly the value of his grain, the value of his product. This service is also investigating the commission business. It has established a uniform system of accounting in this business, a system which enables the shipper, the seller, who sells grain or delivers grain to the commission house on commission, to know absolutely that he is getting his part of the price paid by the purchaser. It enables the commission man to go back over his books and establish a large number of facts which are of interest and of value to him in determining whether he is running his business upon a profitable basis. This work, it seems to me, is of inestimable value not only to the farmer but to the man engaged directly in these several businesses. It ought to be continued. It will be continued under this appropriation and extended into other fields which enter into or have to do with the marketing of agricultural products.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. ANDERSON was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] will understand the force of my discussion of this matter. I do not say that the packers do not largely combine and thereby control prices. That has been a matter of discussion in this House for four or five years. Those who have said that we should take the duties off cattle and meats were met by our direct statement on the floor of the House here that they would thereby place the whole matter within the control of the packers throughout the country. What is complained of now is simply what has been prophesied by us on this side of the House for five years. I want to read what the Association of Cattle Feeders of Nebraska have concluded upon this:

Whereas the placing of live stock and meats on the free list has resulted in increasing the control of the large slaughterers over the prices paid for live stock in the country, and when normal conditions are restored it is likely there will be large importations of foreign meats, which will greatly depreciate prices in our home market.

My contention has always been that if the duties were removed the grip of the packers, which was pretty strong some years ago, would be made absolute. It seems from the speeches made here to be absolute now. For that reason during the last two or three years, when consulted by cattle feeders in my district, and especially last year, I have advised them it was not a good time to go into the cattle-feeding business or to increase their investment. For that reason, believing, as I did, in the doctrine which I have talked on the floor of this House during the five years I have been a Member, I have during the last three years suspended the cattle-feeding business, because I believed it would not be profitable.

The changed condition of affairs has tightened the grip of the great packers, just as the Nebraska cattle feeders have contended, and it being so tightened and we having to compete with the world for the home market, the greatest and best market of the world, the best meat-eating community in the world, not knowing about world production or world markets, we are at a disadvantage. For these reasons I am in favor, as I said before, of this appropriation, that it may to some extent alleviate the condition of these men engaged in this important industry. But this can only be palliative. The real treatment will be given when a protective tariff will be restored on cattle, beef, and veal, as well as other farm products now placed by the Underwood law on the free list.

But that is referred to the broad forum of the American electorate, the determination of which from recent events leaves little room for doubt. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. SLOAN to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I usually agree with my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] when we are discussing agricultural matters, and I am indeed glad that this discussion, which has lasted now for 40 minutes, has been had here to-day. The gentleman started out with the proposition that the tariff was the cause of all the trouble, but at last, after this discussion, he has seen the light and now acknowledges that the packers of the country are in absolute control of the live-stock market. [Applause.]

The live-stock product of the country is the largest single product that comes from the farm, amounting to over $5,000,000,000 annually. Here is another peculiar situation: The bulk of the meat-eating population of the country is located in the eastern part of the United States, while the meat-producing population of the country lies west of the Mississippi River, hence the great centers through which the meat products go to market are necessarily in the Middle West. We have in this country to-day about 35 or 36 great central live-stock markets. I say, and I say it without fear of successful contradiction, that in each and every one of those central markets the great packing concerns are in absolute control of the markets, fix prices, and regulate them at will. Why, they tell me that if you go to market with a load of stock you will stand around there in the morning until 10 o'clock, till finally a representative of one packing concern will come down to your pen, look over your cattle, and make you a bid on them, and you can get one bid and only one bid, and that, too, from only one concern, and you are forced to take what you are offered. If, perchance, a shipper has his cattle at Kansas City, he decides that he can not get enough for them, he concludes that he will ship them on to Chicago. He reships his cattle to Chicago, but news of his reshipment with a full description of the cattle has gone on to Chicago long before he ever gets there, and the bid that he receives on the cattle in Chicago is less than that which he received on those cattle the day before at the Kansas City market.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I will.

Mr. GOOD. What effort has been made by this administration to prosecute this illegal combination of which you are talking?

Mr. RUBEY. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, called a meeting at Chicago last fall, and there were at that meeting representatives of every department of the live-stock industry—producers, consumers, packers, including the railroad people, who carry the live stock to market—in fact, every possible interest that has to do with the production and marketing of the live stock of the country was there represented.

Mr. GOOD. Except the Department of Justice, and that seemed to be asleep.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will answer the gentleman's question, if he will permit.

Mr. RUBEY. I will say further to the gentleman that we have a resolution introduced into this House and now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary. Extensive hearings have been held, and are being held, for the purpose of referring this whole matter to the Trades Commission, in order that it may be thoroughly investigated by that body, that proper steps may be taken to correct this great evil.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RUBEY. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Three years ago, before the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the gentleman who is now at the head of this Trade Commission appeared and ridiculed the former administration for its attempt to dissolve the Meat Trust, and said, "Wait until we get at it, and we will dissolve it." You have not brought a single suit.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman tell me how long that commission has been in existence?

Mr. GOOD. He was in the Department of Justice at that time.

Mr. RUBEY. How long has the Trade Commission been in existence?

Mr. GOOD. It had not been created at the time he testified. He was going to dissolve the Meat Trust through the Department of Justice.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables, $136,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I believe this item provides for a new activity of the Government for work that has never heretofore been done by the Agricultural Department or any other department on such an extensive scale that is proposed under this pending paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, his statement, qualified by "on not so extensive a scale," is correct; but during the last year, under another item of this bill, between $30,000 and $40,000 was spent in doing this character of work. But this is the first time it has been set out in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not question but that the Agricultural Committee appropriated funds under general appropriations for this character of work last year, but never before has it been directly authorized by Congress. I wish to call the attention of this committee to the extreme to which we are proposing to go if we adopt this proposition as carried in this bill. It is proposed to have highly paid experts here in Washington who are acquainted with market conditions on the strawberry crop, the peach crop, the cantaloupe crop, and the tomato crop, and send out to the shipping centers of the country daily telegraphic reports as to the number of carloads of these perishable commodities that have been assigned to the respective markets of the country. This gentleman, Mr. Sherman, came before the committee. He was formerly connected with the Civil Service Commission and apparently has a hobby which he desires to have adopted by the Government. When asked on more than one occasion in the hearings as to what the total cost of this experiment would be, he dodged the question, but stated that we could get along in some way this coming year in experimental work with $136,600.

If you will read the testimony, which covers some 20 pages or more, you can not escape the conclusion that if this policy is carried out to a logical extreme it will involve the Government ultimately in an expenditure of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, or maybe $5,000,000.

The question before the committee is whether this information will have any value whatever to the producers or to the consuming public of the country. I claim that this method of obtaining information by telegraph from all parts of the country daily, having it forwarded here to the department headquarters and then send it out to the respective market centers, is a function not for the Government but a function for the business concerns involved, and that that information can be obtained without this extravagant expenditure by those producers and by those commission merchants from the daily press. The growers of strawberries in the country tributary to the district that I have the honor to represent know exactly the market conditions prevailing in the Chicago and Milwaukee markets to which they send their supplies. It is not necessary for them to be advised daily by telegraphic reports from the department here at Washington. The peach growers of Maryland and Delaware know the market conditions as to peaches in the Philadelphia and New York markets daily from the Philadelphia and New York newspapers without having this expensive adjunct established here in a department of the Government.

Reading the hearings you can only come to one conclusion, and that is that this is more for the interests of the commission merchants than for the interests of the producers. True, there is testimony presented that the work of the past year has been of value to those shippers. Of course it has been of value. Of course these private shippers will receive information free from the Government if the Government wishes to furnish it; but the question is whether it is a proper governmental function. Here with respect to the cotton crop and with respect to the tobacco crop, through our census officials, we are furnishing to the producer quarterly and monthly returns as to those products for the benefit of the producers; but here you propose by telegraph—the expensive agency of the telegraph—to furnish daily reports to the commission merchants for their own private gain, to the end that they may know whether a number of cars en route from the various shipping centers have been dispatched to some other center, so that they may know just the quantity of supplies that may be en route on the day before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, it is doubtful if this item will cure the trouble that it seeks to reach. The matter of marketing perishable products is not a question of ascertaining the market price at the market the day the products are ready to be sent out. The trouble is in finding transportation facilities that are ready and fast. Tons of perishable products rot on the vines and in the fields every year within a few miles of people who are anxious and able to buy them but who have not the opportunity, because the transportation facilities are not provided.

I have recently given this matter much consideration. A very large section of country in the district that I have the honor to represent grows berries and other perishable products. We are within easy reach of a splendid market. Our berries, our tomatoes, our peaches, in large measure, waste, because of their perishable nature, for want of a way to reach the market where the people really want them. I doubt very seriously if this $136,000 would result in a dollar's benefit to the producers of perishable products.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission and State railroad commissions will require the railroads to put fast trains on out of the producing districts during the season in which perishable products are produced, reaching the market at a marketable hour, something worth while will be done for the producers and consumers of these perishable farm products. The prices are generally very well understood.

There is another thing in addition to reaching the market. The producer, the farmer, the truckman, is very largely at the mercy of the commission merchant at the market end of the line.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it true that the market is steadied often now by the destruction of the products?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. If I had time I would go into that. But I have no doubt that some commission merchants to whom I have just referred let shipments waste rather than sell them at fair prices to consumers and that other merchants might put upon the market in this way similar products which are sold to a few at a high price, and the result is an absolute loss to the producer of similar products wasted.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the gentleman that I have seen the Chicago River running red with strawberries at a time when they were selling at the rate of two boxes for a quarter. I do not know whether that is still the practice, but I have also seen the Chicago River running full of peaches in order to steady the market.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have seen berries and vegetables of all kinds rot upon the ground on which they were grown because there was no way by which they could be gotten to market and because the producer was afraid to send them to the commission merchants on account of the manner in which they had been treated on other occasions by the commission merchants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a limit set upon the debate, if I may, pending the decision by the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we go on with this debate for a few minutes. Then we can try to reach an agreement. I think there are a number of Members who desire to be heard. I would like to have a few minutes myself.

Mr. LEVER. In a matter of this importance, I think it is always better to know what the limit of time is.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we had better go on, and later we may reach an agreement.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest we close debate in 45 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we could save time by going along, say, for 20 minutes, and then we could see.

Mr. LEVER. I do think it would be a waste of time, if the point of order is to be sustained. I do not, however, think the item is subject to a point of order myself.

Mr. HELGESEN. I do not think they will make the point of order if they understand the situation.

Mr. MANN. I was in hopes I might persuade the gentleman not to make a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Very well, we will jog along.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the farmer and the fruit grower and the truck grower are first interested in producing a crop. After the crop is produced and ready to go on the market the farmer is then interested as to where he can send his product to market to the best advantage to himself.

There are certain elements that enter into this matter. Transportation is one of them and a proper place to sell that product when it gets to market, wherever that may be. Many times, as has been said here, the farmer, the fruit grower, and the truck grower sends his produce to a market and finds that the market is full and that there is no demand that gives him any remuneration for what he has put upon the market. Many times the price of this produce by the time it reaches the consumer has been doubled or trebled in value, and the consumer gets no advantage in price as a result. He is compelled to pay this high price, but the producer does not get it. It has been shown, I think, by men who have made a particular study of this subject that in many instances a product for which the producer received $1 costs probably four times as much by the time it reaches the consumer. One great difficulty is that these products pass through so many hands, and each one must make a profit, and so the consumer pays a high price, of which the producer does not get any part. We hear a great deal of talk about going back to the farm. Many have lectured and written in favor of keeping the boy on the farm; yet unless we can show the boy on the farm that he is going to get something out of the prosperity of the country, it is no use to talk about keeping him there. He is not on the farm for fun. Working on the farm is not a funny business, as any man knows who has ever tried it.

I believe this Bureau of Markets is one of the best things that has ever been established in the Agricultural Department. I do not know as to this particular proposition whether it will be of so much benefit or not, but it seems to me that with a production of more than $8,000,000,000 a year upon the farms of this country we can afford an appropriation of $136,000, or whatever amount may be necessary, to give the farmer the information as to the conditions of markets throughout the land, and I believe it will prove of benefit to him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would it not be more profitable to the producer and also to the consumer if the condition of the market were sent out to the producer?

Mr. FOSTER. Why, certainly; there is no question about that. Many times the producers of strawberries—a very perishable product—send them to Chicago or some other market, and by the time they get there the market is glutted, so that the strawberries will not pay the transportation charges. We raise a good many strawberries in southern Illinois, and they go largely on the Chicago market, possibly because it is more convenient to us than any other market. Many times I have heard men say that they have sent these strawberries to the market and they have had the commission man return them a bill for charges. I heard this story down there, that a man sent some produce to the market, and the commission man sent him a bill for transportation to Chicago. All the man could do was to say, "I will send you some more produce to pay the charges that you have incurred for me." [Laughter.] That is a deplorable condition, and there is no use to talk about keeping boys on the farm in this country as long as that condition continues.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has said that only $136,600 is appropriated for this purpose; but if he will look at the item preceding he will find that we have already appropriated $285,000 for acquiring and diffusing useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products, and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I know that. I am speaking particularly of this amount, on which the point of order was reserved. We talk about increasing the production of this country and increasing the remuneration of the farmer, and yet only about 2 per cent of the appropriations of this Government are for agriculture, while we pay large amounts for other things that possibly would not do the good that is done for the farmer. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I could not qualify as a market expert. I am not certain but that I might possibly, by a stretch of imagination, be able to qualify as a legislative expert.

A few years ago the proposition was made to provide for information concerning the marketing of certain farm products. A bill was introduced in the House and a bill was introduced in the Senate. I am not sure now just what became of those bills. My recollection is that the Senate passed its bill. I am not sure.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. This item in this appropriation bill is really——

Mr. MANN. I will come to that. My recollection still is that the Senate passed its bill. I may be mistaken about it. I know that I made a very careful canvass of the matter in the House and Senate and discovered that, in my opinion, there was more than a two-thirds majority in both bodies, which would pass the bill.

That bill provided for very large machinery to begin with, practically for the furnishing of all kinds of information to everybody who had anything to sell. I thought it was not wise to do it all at once, and that it would be better to have a provision in the Agricultural appropriation bill, where we could go at it somewhat gradually, where we would have better control over it. I believe the Senate inserted in the Agricultural bill, or perhaps we did—the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] can inform me—an appropriation in reference to marketing, and the appropriation was finally agreed upon.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that the Agricultural Committee reported out an appropriation of $50,000, which was agreed to in the House and Senate also.

Mr. MANN. That is correct. That was reported as a sort of compromise between those who were opposed to anything of the sort and those who were in favor of the original bill. That, in my opinion, was the proper way to get at it. Now, so far this appropriation has been increased. Here is another proposed increase, not an exorbitant sum, not enough to furnish information to everybody who has everything to sell, and we have not reached the point yet where we can do that. It is still experimental. It is a good deal wiser to make it as an experimental proposition, to see what it amounts to, than it is to enact it into positive legislation and create a bureau by statute with such power that it must inevitably in a few years cost millions of dollars, whether it is worth anything or not—because we can not stop those things.

Now, here is a proposition to test out what is already being done, but to test it further. A few years ago a gentleman over here in the Bureau of Plant Industry—I forget his name; I believe he was at one time acting chief, but I am not sure of that—went out with the California Fruit Growers' Association. I suppose, although I do not know, that the California Fruit Growers' Association is now the most important association of the growers of farm or agricultural or horticultural products in the world.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the most efficient.

Mr. MANN. They have discovered, by the methods proposed to be used here, that they can market their products where there is a demand for them. A carload of oranges is started from southern California and does not know where it is going to land when it starts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

[By unanimous consent, the time was extended five minutes.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. This is a new item?

Mr. MANN. It is a new item in language, but the work is now being done.

Mr. FESS. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is whether he has in mind the specific good results that will follow from this?

Mr. LEVER. I think I can tell the gentleman at the proper time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio asks a very proper and interesting question. All last summer I used to notice in the Chicago papers—and I suppose it was published everywhere—a statement of the number of carloads of different kinds of fruit and vegetables that were sent to Chicago from different places. The same was true with reference to all other large markets. That information is provided throughout the country, so that a man raising watermelons in Georgia would know from day to day the number of carloads of watermelons on the way to Chicago and New York and Cincinnati or Baltimore, and in that way have some idea of whether the market at those places would be overcrowded.

Mr. FESS. Then the value would not be limited to the commission merchants?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the value is not to the commission merchant; the value is to the producer.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I suggest, in connection with the fruit growers of California, that that association has been so successful that it is enabled to employ Dr. Powell, who used to be in the Bureau of Plant Industry, at a salary of $12,000 a year, and their telegraph code costs $60,000 a year, and yet with those overhead expenses they make a large profit.

Mr. MANN. They make a large profit from a very small charge, and they are now engaged in the most interesting kind of work there is for an association of that kind, and that is advertising their products so that they may reach a larger consumption. You read every day—they have it all over the country—advertisements of "Sun-kissed oranges" and various other California products, paid for by this association out of a general fund that is a very small charge on what they sell. I remember when Dr. Powell went to the concern in California. I talked with him, and he told me he had an offer to go to this association and what he was going to try to do. The little knowledge I have on the subject—and I was interested in it from the start—shows me that he has accomplished a great deal more than he thought he could accomplish or than anybody else could accomplish.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman has referred to the movement of fruit. Is it not a fact that the railroad companies furnish the information of the movement of stock at their own expense and that this information is furnished by the department at Government expense?

Mr. MANN. No; that is not the fact. The railroads may have the information. Of course, the Department of Agriculture has to get it some way, partly from the railroads and partly from the merchants; but the Agricultural Department furnishes it to the people of the country. I dare say that the gentleman never learned a single thing in reference to such shipments from a railroad statement. If he did, he had to make inquiry for it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was referring to stock shipments.

Mr. MANN. The stockyard furnishes that information as to stock shipments, but they do not furnish the information as to where the shipments start from. All they furnish is the receipts of the shipments at the yard.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas indicate but one thing, and that is a very vague notion as to the kind of work being done and proposed to be done under this paragraph. Perhaps that is not at all singular, as the work is largely new. Gentlemen of the House are entitled to information as to its character and purpose. The information that is gathered by this service and given to shippers, associations, and commission men is not confined to prices. If prices are gathered at all, they are a very small incident of this service. The service, in the first place, makes a survey of the consuming capacity of the large centers of population.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not that covered in the preceding paragraph—the survey of the market and the information to producers of the best markets to which to send their perishable products?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It certainly is not in the paragraph under discussion.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it is. It was formerly done under the preceding paragraph, but it is now proposed to carry it under this paragraph. They make a survey of the consuming capacity of the great centers of population. It is a well-known fact that some cities consume a very much larger amount of strawberries per capita than other cities. This survey determines the normal consuming capacity of these large consuming centers with respect to certain perishable products.

Then it goes to the other end and determines the producing capacity of the producers of the country. It knows how much of any given product is available for shipment at any particular time. It ascertains how many cars of strawberries, peaches, or watermelons are started for consuming points upon any given day. Having previously given to the shipping center the information as to what the normal consumption of the city is, and knowing the amount of the product that is on its way to that city, the shipper is enabled to divert a part of the shipment to some other point, where there is no oversupply.

Naturally this information, to be of any value, must be obtained very quickly. It has to be obtained by telegraph and it is obtained by telegraph. Those who have seen this service applied testify that it is of inestimable value. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] told the House something with respect to what had been done by the California Fruit Growers' Association. This is one of the largest, perhaps the largest, association of its kind in the country, if not in the world. Because of its size it is able to perform this service for itself, but there are a vast number of small producing centers, and smaller associations, whose business is not of sufficient volume to enable them to carry on such a vast service as this is intended to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, these small associations can not perform this large service for themselves. If the Government does not perform it, nobody will perform it, and we will have what we have had heretofore, namely, the great consuming centers of the country flooded with a product at one time and absolutely without it at another. The market office is under the direction of a citizen of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, a graduate of the university of that State. I think it is one of the most efficient organizations in the entire Government. It is a new service, very largely in the experimental stage, but because it is a new service it has not been cramped by traditions, by obsolete methods which have been adhered to from year to year, from a time as to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. It has been able to apply to its own organization the system of efficiency which it is trying to get adopted by the various concerns in the country handling agricultural products. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] talks about the information with reference to stock shipments which appears in the newspapers from day to day. That information, of course, refers only to receipts, and naturally reaches the public only after it can be of no possible value to the man who is shipping stock. This service proposes to give the information in advance, so that the producer will know where to ship his produce and when to ship it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do not the local papers, so far as perishable truck is concerned, furnish that very information to-day? I know they do, so far as my home paper is concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, this is not a local proposition. This is a Nation-wide proposition, a proposition to correlate information from every section of the country and make it available to every producer in the country. The information that is contained in the local newspapers reaches only those persons in the immediate localities. These products are shipped, many of them, thousands of miles. It is not a local market problem. It is a national market problem, a problem that affects the whole country. It requires the gathering of information with respect to these products all over the country, and in that respect it is a service which no individual establishment, no matter how large, can duplicate upon the same scale as the Government, giving the same value to the shipper and the consumer alike.

Mr. LEVER. And the same impartial information?

Mr. ANDERSON. And the same impartial information. In other words, it is a Government service which stands between the producer and the consumer that can obtain and give the information in an impartial way, that is biased neither by the desire to sell dear nor to purchase cheap.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, my very good friend from Milwaukee, Mr. STAFFORD, is a very well-meaning man; but, coming from a large city, he is apt to take the same view of all these questions that men do who come from large cities—a local view—and they imagine anything that tends to benefit the farmer must necessarily injure the consumer. They can not understand that new conditions might be brought about that might benefit the producer and the consumer alike. Much as the great cities consume—and they do consume a great deal in the line of fruit—they do not begin to consume as much as the smaller towns, villages, and hamlets and the farmers of the North. I represent a district that can not raise any of these southern fruits. We have no interest in this item as producers, but we do have an interest in the item as consumers. We want them at a reasonable price; and we understand what the great cities do not seem to understand, that whenever there is any unnecessary waste it must result eventually in making the average price higher than it would have been if that waste had not been sustained, and whenever there is a carload or a trainload dumped it must increase the price eventually, although it may ruin a few and very frequently many producers. It is not in the interest of the commission men at all. The commission men get their commission regardless of whether it is sold at a high or a low price; but whenever the southern fruit flows into the great central markets in such quantities as to overstock those markets the price goes down to a point where the producer does not get enough to pay for the cost of production, and it discourages him, even though it does not break him financially, and he will not ship any more. He does not know the fact that whereas Chicago, Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and Kansas City may be overstocked, there are very many other much better markets where they could get a profit; and the idea is to furnish the information to the producers of the southern fruit so that they may know that certain markets are glutted and that therefore he should not ship to those markets, but to ship to the distributors in Minnesota and the northern regions of the country where people want that fruit and where they are willing to pay a reasonable price.

It is the only possible way that the small producer can ever get the information that he needs and must have if he is going to remain in the business and get more than the cost of production. We have a great many instances of that. I remember that about a year ago a man told me he had a friend who was a commission man in Boston. He was raising onions down South, and he appealed to his friend in Boston to let him know when to ship those onions, and he got a letter saying he believed that now was a good time to ship, but, unfortunately, a great many others had received the same information, and the market was flooded. So the commission man wired him afterwards not to ship. It was too late. The result was that the onions sold for less than the freight, and he had to pay $12 on top of giving his onions away, because they did not pay for the freight. Now, if information had been available, if he could have shipped those onions to a place where the people would have taken them at a reasonable price, it would have been to his advantage.

And so it is on all lines of southern fruit. The South is different from the Pacific coast. The orange industry is in the hands of a compact organization that has capital enough to carry on a private marketing organization, but the small southern producer can not do it, and the only way he can get the information, if he is to have it at all, is from a Government source.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin will not make the point of order against this item, but if he does, I hope that it will not be sustained. Of all the work of the Department of Agriculture, I believe the work of the Bureau of Markets will prove to be of the greatest value, and in this bureau there is no work of greater importance than that provided for in this item appropriating $136,600 for collecting and distributing by telegraph and mail, information as to the supply, commercial movement, and market prices of fruits and vegetables. One can hardly appreciate the value of this work unless he is familiar with the manner in which the farmers have heretofore marketed their fruits and vegetables. In a part of the district I have the honor to represent the growing of fruits and vegetables is quite an industry. Asparagus, cucumbers, cantaloupes, watermelons, lettuce, and other fruits and vegetables are grown and shipped to northern markets for sale. The farmer who invests his money and labor in producing cantaloupes, for instance, has heretofore sold them by shipping them to some commission merchant in one of the great cities of the East, without any knowledge as to the number of cars arriving in the city that day or the number of cars en route for that market. As a result it has often happened that while there was a demand for cantaloupes in many markets, some one market would have a surplus and this perishable fruit be thrown away. It has been an injury to the consumer because the waste of carloads of cantaloupes in one market simply means a shortage in another city, and consequently higher prices in that city. At the same time it has been a serious injury to the producer who in return for his cantaloupes has received from the commission merchant nothing more than a request to remit to cover the freight.

The work provided for in this item was commenced last year. It was impossible for the bureau to extend it to all fruits and all vegetables the first season, but strawberries, onions, tomatoes, and one or two others were covered, and this year the work will be extended to cover asparagus, cantaloupes, and other crops. Agents of the department are sent to the great markets and by telegraph they inform the bureau daily of the prices prevailing in those markets and of the supply available. Arrangements have been made with the railroads to furnish to the bureau every night the number of cars of cantaloupes, for instance, that are en route for New York. The producer in South Carolina can arrange with the Bureau of Markets to have sent to him daily a telegram informing him of the number of cars of cantaloupes in New York that day, the prices prevailing, the number of cars en route, and with this information he can reach an intelligent conclusion as to whether or not he will ship a car to that market. Cars from the South Atlantic States are consigned to Potomac yards here at Washington, and if the information from the bureau causes the producer to conclude that it would be wise not to ship to New York he can, by telegraph order to Potomac yards, have his car diverted to Philadelphia, Boston, or some other market.

As the gentleman from Illinois has stated, this work is only in the experimental stage. It is growing, and if it is to be of the greatest service to both producer and consumer it must finally become a great clearing house of information. My own opinion is that at the conclusion of the season for shipping cantaloupes, for instance, a bulletin should be prepared showing the number of carloads of cantaloupes arriving at the large markets each day and the price prevailing that day. This information could be easily secured, and if furnished to the producer would be of great value to him the following season. When he receives a telegram from the bureau that 20 cars of cantaloupes have arrived at New York and 20 more are on the way he is still in doubt, because he does not know the consuming capacity of the market. But if he has a record of the condition existing in that market the preceding season on that very day that information will be a chart by which he can be guided in shipping his cantaloupes.

Mr. GOOD. Must he have that information by telegraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was interested in what the gentleman said about the crop reporting or the dissemination of information by bulletins. Now, that is done at considerable expense to the Government, and it always contains this same information largely that the gentleman is talking about, but it comes too late. Would it not be better to send a telegram than to use this money for this late information, so that they can take advantage of the information the gentleman is now talking about?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman did not understand me. The bureau could prepare a record of the number of cars of cantaloupes received at New York on June 1, 2, or 3 of this year and at the conclusion of the season could prepare a bulletin setting forth this information, together with a record of the prices prevailing in that market each day. That bulletin could be prepared at any time in the fall and forwarded to producers, and next season when the producer was ready to ship he could consult this record and know exactly how many cars were consumed in that market last year; he could telegraph to the bureau and find out how many were en route for New York and then decide whether or not he should ship there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very true, but this market produce is perishable stuff, and would it not be better to have the information just at the time the crop is produced?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is absolutely essential to secure by telegraph the information as to the condition of the markets at the time the producer is ready to ship.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I quite agree with the gentleman in the position he takes on this matter, but I wanted to get his idea and ascertain if he did not agree with me.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if in his section of the country there are not fruit growers' associations, so that one man will not have to bear this expense alone, but that the whole association, including a group of farmers in a settlement, might get all this information at their joint expense.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is a very pertinent question. The producers are slow to organize; it is difficult to convince them of the benefit of it. However, progress is being made, there is a State organization of asparagus growers just organized this year, and in Beaufort County, in my district, there is an organization of producers engaged in producing lettuce, potatoes, cabbages, and other truck. They have a competent secretary and, of course, he can secure telegraphic information from the bureau if he wishes to, and communicate it to the members of the association. Where there is no association, however, the producer has up to this time had no means of securing this information, and that is the reason why I believe this item of such great value. I think it would be well for the department to consider using the county demonstration agents at points where the producers are not yet organized. If the producers agree to bear the expense of the daily telegram to the agent from the bureau, when he received it in the morning he could use the telephone to communicate it to interested producers. Of course this work is in its infancy, but I think it exceedingly fortunate that Mr. Brand, who is in charge of it, has had the good judgment to proceed cautiously. Having read the hearings before the committee, I am satisfied they have made great progress. It is no easy task to organize a new bureau, secure competent assistants, and map out the work. He is laying a solid foundation for this bureau, which is destined to become one of the largest in the Department of Agriculture and render great service to the producers of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am a practical farmer, not too proud to get down on my knees and get after the bugs that my colleague and friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has said are so dangerous to vegetation and the human race. [Laughter.]

Something has been said about the transportation of products. I live within 20 miles of the city of Philadelphia, and the road to that city is as smooth as this floor. There are plenty of trucks to transport my products, and within three hours after they are harvested they are placed on the markets. But when they arrive there it is difficult to find purchasers. Therefore it is not transportation but demand that worries the farmers of my district.

This item in the bill, amounting to $136,000, to notify the farmers, I feel, is of no practical assistance. In my section there are a great many people growing pears. Occasionally letters are received from Pittsburgh stating that there is a great demand for pears there. Then the growers send their crop to Pittsburgh, only to find a weak market.

So it will be in all sections of the country and for all growers of products. I am speaking for my constituents and for myself when I say I do not believe in this appropriation, and I think it is of no value to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if anyone will read the hearings he will find that the purpose of the Bureau of Markets is to do away with the middleman.

Gentlemen, possibly the middleman is not entitled to consideration. It may be that the beautiful towns and hamlets throughout this country have no rightful place on the map. Possibly they should be wiped off the map. I do not believe this should be. This question is now up to the committee. If you believe in eliminating them, then give this Bureau of Markets every encouragement that you can. The idea here, evidently, is to transport the products from the farm to the kitchen. If you go direct from the farm to the kitchen, you eliminate the middleman and merchant in the small town and the merchant in the city, who have largely built up and inhabit the towns. I have lived in small towns. I have contributed to their support. I still believe that they are entitled to some consideration.

How is this to be accomplished? By way of parcel post? Yes; the express companies pay railroads, on the average, 73 cents a hundred, or less than three-fourths of a cent a pound for hauling express. The railroads get from Uncle Sam an average of $4.60 for every 100 pounds you divert. You thereby throw nearly $4 extra on every 100 pounds to them and add that much to the receipts of the railroad companies.

If it is to aid the railroads, if they can not take care of themselves, very well; let us encourage this appropriation. However, I have always believed that the railroad companies are capable of taking care of themselves. I have no quarrel with them. They are like the packing houses; they are human; they take all that they can get.

What next? The claim is, it is to enlighten these so-called "ignorant farmers." It is to inform the farmers as to the rates from one given point to some other point. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], a member of the committee, raised this question: "I shipped my automobile, I paid one rate, and was called upon to pay in addition." Asked what remedy he had to suggest, he said: "We supply information, but we do not make rates." Why, gentleman, is it not a fact that every railroad company is required to post their schedule of rates in every office? A farmer can go to the nearest freight office and procure all that information, as he in fact does; but the department now contends that the farmer is not capable of comprehending the schedule, and therefore information should be furnished by it.

A word as to the merchant: I believe that the merchant, the distributor, is as necessary as transportation and the producer. This talk about "from the farm to the kitchen" is, in a large degree, a political bunkum to catch votes and in the interest of transportation companies. For instance, much has been said about potatoes. The dealer who it is proposed to eliminate, the merchant who helps to build and support the town, its schools, churches, parks, and streets, buys in carload lots and pays, say a cent a pound for potatoes and 25 cents per hundred freight. He sells in small quantities, in many instances not to exceed 10 pounds. Suppose he charges a profit of 75 cents a hundred. This makes the cost to the consumer 2 cents per pound or 20 cents for 10 pounds. On the other hand, if the consumer follows the advice to buy direct from the farmer and places an order for a certain number of pounds of potatoes to be forwarded from time to time, say, in 10-pound shipments by parcel post, he pays 10 cents to the farmer for the potatoes, the same as the merchant paid for the carload lot. If the shipment is within the first zone of 50 miles, he pays 14 cents postage; if in the third zone and over 150 miles, he pays 24 cents postage. I believe that it is fair to assume that no consumer will pay 24 or 34 cents for 10 pounds of potatoes that can be delivered at his door on short notice at 20 cents. What is true as to potatoes is true in many other instances. It is also true that many products can be shipped to advantage. At times butter and eggs can be shipped to an advantage, but with our slow parcel-post service few take chances on shipping perishable products. Even if money could be thus saved to the consumer with the present rate paid to railroad companies carrying parcel post, the rate charged and the deficit incurred, it hardly seems fair to encourage a greater deficit and take money out of the Public Treasury to make it up. We might as well be honest about it. The whole scheme is to encourage shipments by express and parcel post at a higher rate than the freight rate now paid, and thus increase the receipts of the railroad companies. Cooperation and organization should be encouraged. We have it throughout the country. In my section of the country we have cooperative creamery companies, insurance companies, elevator companies, and various other cooperative associations. They serve a good purpose and are generally ably and successfully operated, and are worthy of credit and commendation, but in order to encourage and assist them it is not necessary to employ and send out experts on transportation rates to tell the farmer or the elevator man the rate from his station to his shipping point when the information is available or can be had by stepping into the freight office; nor is it necessary for the department to telegraph market reports from Washington at Government expense when that information is already furnished over the wire and through the daily press; nor is it necessary to employ inexperienced business men to advise business or commission men where and how to conduct their business, or the elevator men how to keep books, or numerous other things which are proposed under this item.

In this connection I desire to say a word as to appropriations based upon statements and credit hitherto taken for increase in yield, which were evidently not well taken. As stated by Mr. Spillman, Chief of Office of Markets, hitherto eloquence has been wasted in an effort to increase the yield, and from now on the farmers are to be told how to grow less, and thus the solemn pledge made to the consumer in the Democratic platform, pledging a reduction in the cost of living is to be repudiated. In the paragraph under consideration, and in a number of others, it is proposed to appropriate money for the payment of high salaries and expenses of employees in the department, averaging from $2,500 to $5,000, as stated by Mr. Spillman, "to visit among farmers and gather up their experience." Why not employ an experienced, intelligent, practical, and substantial farmer at the outset? Why employ those who know nothing about farming to go into the country "to visit and gather up their experience?" What is the situation? People are employed to go into the fields, to advise and educate farmers, to tell them what to do—information to be given to the farmer by employees who know little about farming or the work assigned to them. Second, as stated, another employee is sent to visit among farmers and to gather up their experience, so that if he acquires the necessary knowledge of farming he may be sent out to instruct and educate other employees in the field so that they may intelligently perform the work assigned to them—that is, to tell the farmer what to do. As a result we have half a dozen men, each drawing salary and expenses from $2,500 to $5,000, endeavoring to do the work that one practical and experienced farmer could do much better because of his experience and knowledge. Why this waste of money? Why tax the farmer with all these high salaries and expense when, according to Mr. Spillman's statement, the farmer is receiving annually a net average of $142 cash and $260 worth of food, rent, and fuel for his year's work, which includes the services of his family, averaging 4.6 people? Why not employ a competent man at the outset, as was contemplated and understood would be done when the item was first inserted in the bill? Certainly many practical, experienced, intelligent, and successful farmers could be employed to do the work, thus not only eliminating hundreds of thousands of dollars from this bill, but at the same time have the work done in a more efficient and comprehensive manner by giving the farmer practical and valuable information, not in one but in all the bureaus of the department.

Scientists have their place and should be given encouragement. Everyone employed in the department, so far as I know, is worthy and deserving. When it comes to treating bugs and the diseases of plants and soil, scientists become necessary and are in their place, but when it comes to practical farming very few of them, if any, have practical knowledge, and are out of place in undertaking to give advice, because of their lack of knowledge and experience. Much of the money thus expended is a waste. A business man in need of a manager for his business does not advertise for a scientist. He employs one with training, experience, and capacity for that particular line of work. If in court he employs a lawyer, not a preacher. For spiritual advice he goes to the preacher, not the lawyer. The farmer, if he needs a farm hand or manager, employs one with proper training and experience to feed his stock and till the soil. So, instead of paying salaries and giving joy rides to inexperienced people the department should employ men and women equipped and prepared to do the work assigned them. If you will read the hearings you will find that people are sent out to teach how to shock, stack, thrash, and market grain. If that is to be continued, why send one unable to tell a shock or stack of grain from a muskrat mound. Why not send one who can tell one from the other and who knows how to set the shock and how to stack the grain? Why send one to tell when to swat the roosters, another how to drive and round-up cattle, another how and when to plant potatoes, another how and when to plant corn, another how to build granaries and fences? Why not send one who by his experience and knowledge knows and is capable of advising as to all, who knows through experience when and how to fertilize the soil, when and how to rotate crops, how to produce large crops and leave the soil better than before, how to make a good farmer out of a poor one, how and what kind of fence and barn to build, when and how to plow deep, when to exterminate weeds, how to select and plant seed corn, how to house and swill hogs, and a thousand other things of which he has knowledge, attained in the school of experience—in short, how to intelligently and advantageously apply industry and enterprise.

Yes, instead of sending out circulars and gathering and publishing so-called information, resulting in discrediting the dairy industry—though unintentional—rather send one to aid in improving conditions where improvements are necessary. If the department will employ an intelligent, experienced, and successful farmer to go out, he would do as is being done by farmers' organizations, by farmers, by dairy journals, and all friends of the dairy. Preach the importance of not only a clean dairy, but a clean kitchen, a clean cupboard, a clean conscience, and neat housekeeping.

As previously stated, so far extravagant and unfounded claims made by or for the department have not increased the yields. So far no one in or out of the department has been able to point out any material assistance rendered the farmer by the department along that line. Claims are made, it is true, as, for instance, in the discovery of alfalfa. Yes, the department discovered alfalfa nearly a hundred years after Jefferson did. So far neither the department, party platform pledges, stump speeches, nor eulogies printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD have materially increased the yield. As that is the case, it occurs to me that the time has come for some one to offer a few observations and, in view of the solemn duty imposed upon me as ranking member of the minority in the committee by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], to carefully scrutinize and criticize unwarranted expenditures, or share in the responsibility, I venture to take the floor and have in a feeble way pointed out a few of the many apparently unwise appropriations carried in this bill and offer a few suggestions, not so much with the view of criticizing the department or of holding it responsible for all of the errors made, as Congress must share with it in the responsibility, for it holds the purse string and has the power of directing how the money shall be used. I repeat what I have often said, that in the department we have, I believe, the ablest corps of scientists in the world, all pursuing their duty with enthusiasm, and because of their enthusiasm and skill we admire and respect them, but they allow themselves to be carried away and overestimate their capacity for doing that in which they lack experience and training. Like all others, they are not infallible; hence we have inefficiency, duplication, and a waste of money in certain lines. Therefore, I believe that it is up to Congress to do its part, to do as suggested by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina—scrutinize, criticize, exercise its power in directing how money shall be expended, inquire as to results attained, and if money appropriated has been wisely expended. Furthermore, if the best interests of agriculture are to be subserved legislative action should be substituted for eulogies and party platform pledges. Instead of declaring in favor of rural credits it should be enacted into law; instead of reporting bills providing for $10,000 salaries under the title of "rural credits" funds should be made available to the people in rural districts on reasonable terms and at a reasonable rate of interest; instead of talking about bonded warehouses and grain inspection the bills reported should be passed; instead of disposing of the forest-grazing and water-right privilege on 160,000,000 acres of public land at any price obtainable, at an annual loss of $2,500,000, besides timber and privileges given away and money expended for improvements, thus keeping the price of lumber up to the consumer, investigation should be made with a view of dealing with the matter in a more economical and advantageous manner. As everybody knows, the suggestion has been made by some that if Uncle Sam's 160,000,000 acres of forest was opened so that everyone could help themselves free of charge or leave it to rot, Uncle Sam would be more than $3,000,000 ahead each year, besides the corresponding decrease in the price of lumber to the consumer. That, of course, is not going to be done, nor should it be done; but it seems to me that a wiser and more prudent way of handling the matter should be found.

I desire to emphasize that instead of employing and sending out seven and one-half hour men and women to visit among farmers to gather up their experience and tell them who to elect as Senators and Members of Congress in planting and harvesting time, and talking shorter hours and more pay while Congress is in session, we had better send men accustomed, willing, and equipped to work much of the time from sunrise to sundown, to talk good common sense, and give practical advice, instead of bookkeepers, doctors, and experts on rates, as is being done.

Mr. Chairman, another matter. I am getting sick and tired of these insinuations. Not one day goes by but the intelligence of the people in the country is questioned. I have sat here for 17 years. We have appropriated $207,000,000 in the last 10 years on the pretense that it is to educate these so-called "ignorant farmers"; that this appropriation is for the purpose of enlightening and benefiting the farmer. Why, I would suggest to you that you may eliminate this appropriation and every item in this bill, and yet the farmer would get along better than the people who are benefited and who are drawing the salaries.

I believe that every Member of this House takes a just and pardonable pride in the fact that we are living in this age of marvelous expansion, that we are moving forward at such a mighty pace, and that we rank amongst the most intelligent and practical people on the face of God's footstool; I believe it is a man's duty—I care not what his political affiliations, creed, or occupation may be—rather than to legislate to furnish soft berths in the public crib, and to give joy rides to many of the 16,000 people employed by the department, we should strive to benefit the weak, to uplift the distressed, to help humanity, to give honest and heartfelt consideration of every useful agency in securing full benefit from our natural resources, for the development of every mechanical appliance, for the skill and genius of American labor, and to see to it that nobody is discriminated against, but that each and every one is given adequate protection against any invasion of his rights on the part of unscrupulous and dishonest interests in order that we may have the fullest development of every worthy and legitimate enterprise. But we can not do that by unwarranted attacks day after day. We can not help the farmer by declarations in party platforms. We can not assist the farmer by eulogizing him here in the House and tax him for unnecessary expenditures. We can not assist the farmer by making liberal appropriations for fat salaries. If we are going to benefit him, do something for him. If you are interested read the testimony here; you will find that many of the appropriations are not in the interest of the farmer, but that they are in the interest of the commission man and in the interest of the railroads and employees, all worthy, though many unnecessary. If you will read the hearings you will find that we are paying fat salaries for what—to aid the railroad companies. Have they said a good word for the farmer? No; they eulogize the railroad companies, speak of the great favors received from them, and draw salaries from Uncle Sam under the pretense that they are working in the interest of Mr. Farmer.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is most remarkable, indeed, when we take into consideration the fact that for 16 years he has been a member of the Committee on Agriculture. I had thought that one of the things that might be written of the gentleman when he shall have passed over the river and is resting in the shade of the trees is that he had some part—and was proud of it—in the development, establishment, and promotion of this great Department of Agriculture of the Government of the United States, which is the greatest agricultural university in all the civilized world. [Applause.] Now, at the end of 16 years, after having contributed his ability, his energy, his broad experience, and his good, common horse sense, as we call it in my country, to the upbuilding of this great instrumentality of education, the Department of Agriculture, I am surprised to find him ready to-day to tear down the temple to whose construction he has contributed so much.

I think it may be said in truth that there is no country in the civilized world which has gathered together under one management so many men of such a high degree of expertness and scientific information as have been gathered together under the present Secretary of Agriculture and his immediate predecessor, the Hon. James Wilson, who comes from the State of the gentleman who has just spoken. [Applause.] If the gentleman's argument is sound at all, it would be the duty of the people to close the doors of every schoolhouse in the land, to tear down the pillars that support every college, to dynamite every university, and to tear from its foundations every educational institution under the Stars and Stripes.

This Department of Agriculture is intended, under its organic act, to gather information and diffuse it to the people of the United States on the subject of agriculture, in the most comprehensive meaning of that word. I have been on the Committee on Agriculture for 13 years. I do not believe it is egotistical for me to say that I have contributed some small part in the expansion and extension of the activities of the Department of Agriculture. Thank God as I stand here to-day I am not ashamed of what I have done. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the particular item under consideration is but the culmination of a long agitation for what the producers of this country regard as a duty that this Government owes to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Since 1862, when the Morrill Act was passed establishing land-grant colleges, followed later by the passage of the Hatch Act, and then later by the Adams Act and the second Morrill Act, and then by the agricultural-extension act of 1914, we have been appropriating money to teach the farmer how to produce more things and how to produce them economically. We have spent in the neighborhood of $200,000,000 in that line of governmental activity. In my judgment the money has been wisely expended. It has brought back to the people dividends a hundredfold, and no man need be ashamed of his part in that work in this Congress. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, the producers of this country and the Committee on Agriculture, agreeing with them, rightly assert that it is not fair, it is not just, it is almost criminal for the Government to appropriate its money and expend it to teach the farmers how to produce things unless we take the next logical step and appropriate money to teach them how economically and wisely to sell that which they produce. [Applause.] But Congress after Congress ignored that great basic, fundamental fact in the economy of agriculture, until in 1914 there was inserted in the Agricultural bill this item—

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products, and for the employment of persons and means necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000.

That was in the appropriation act of 1914. That was the beginning of the present Office of Markets and Rural Organization. That item was reported from the Committee on Agriculture without a dissenting voice. It was accepted by this House without a dissenting vote or a question. It was accepted by the Senate of the United States without a dissenting voice or a vote of protest, and it is upon that broad language that we are building up the instrumentalities through which we hope to bring closer together the producers of agricultural products and the consumers thereof. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I trust that members of the committee will pardon me, if I say that I, together with the president of the State Farmers' Union of South Carolina—an extremely progressive farmer—wrote the exact language as it appeared in the act of 1914, and I am not ashamed of my baby, by a long shot. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. Was it not in 1913 that we made the first appropriation for this work?

Mr. LEVER. It may have been. I may have been in error about the date.

Mr. BUTLER. It may be interesting to a man like me, representing a large agricultural district, if the gentleman will tell us what progress we have made, how the farmer is going to reach the mouth of the consumer and get rid of the middleman; and how much we have done, and how soon it will reach Chester County, Pa., where I live.

Mr. LEVER. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes in order that he may answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. When the first proposition for the Bureau of Markets was brought to Congress it was proposed in sundry bills to expend fifteen, twenty-five, fifty million dollars; to go out without information, without the facts, without the necessary investigation, and plank down on the country, as it were, a market blanket which must be just so wide and just so long and so constructed that we could neither draw it up nor expand it with the growth of the country. The item in this bill to which I have referred, and the growth of the bureau so far, was a compromise proposition, broader in its terms, more effective in its practical operations, in my judgment, than if we had adopted any of the original suggestions. Now, what has been done? I said this morning to the committee in the matter of the cotton market that it had been found that in certain sections of the country the highest grade of cotton was selling on the same market on the same day in the same State anywhere from $3 to $20 a bale lower than cotton of a lower grade was being sold for on that market on that day. I said further that the investigation of the department had so strikingly brought these facts to the attention of the producers that the community organized itself and employed a $3,000 expert in cotton grading to protect them against such discrepancies in the future.

Now, what is true in reference to cotton I have no doubt is true in the sale of practically every farm product in this country; through lack of standardization, through lack of proper grading, through lack of proper methods of business, through lack of proper marketing, both the producer and the consumer are paying a heavy economic waste cost.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know whether or not this bureau has considered the advisability of raising the price of milk in Pennsylvania and also the price of corn and wheat and oats? Is it a fact that when the producer produces he has to take his products where they are consumed?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true; and the purpose of the office is to find out the places where the price is the highest and to find out the channel through which the producer may get the largest profit out of that which he produces.

Mr. BUTLER. First, to discover where the price is the greatest, and, second, the avenue by which the product may be conveyed?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to vote for this provision. We usually have had that information from the newspapers, and to my recollection we have had it for 50 years.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. How does your committee propose to get this information to the farmers throughout the country?

Mr. LEVER. It is the purpose to station the experts in the field, gather the information, and at the request of the individual telegraph that information to the individual or to other parties who may make use of it. It is my own thought, however, that this work is going to grow up more largely through the organization of cooperating selling societies than any direct contact with the individual. My hope is that it may grow up in that way. While the actual work now being done is important, in my humble judgment the greatest work of the Office of Markets, after all, is coming as the result of organization of the farmers to do cooperative selling and cooperative buying, in order to get the benefit of this system.

Mr. BUTLER. This subject is not new. It has been talked of ever since I was a boy, but I am pleased to know that the gentleman is of the opinion that it is being developed. I am going to turn all the successful agriculturists of my county over to this bureau within a week.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will do so, and he will find it a very efficient office. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may seem ungracious for me to ask to limit debate, after consuming so much time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has raised a point of order. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he makes the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the illuminating discussion that has just been given to the committee by the practical farmers of the House who are acquainted with the practical conditions of the market, and particularly the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON], I feel constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this item can not be justified under the warrant of existing law. Certainly it can not come within the general authority of the organic act creating the department. That language is very broad and expansive. The authority there stated, that there shall be established a Department of Agriculture, whose object shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, can not be construed as warranting this character of employment of departmental activities. That phraseology must be construed in connection with the entire act to determine what was the purpose in the mind of Congress in framing that act. You must construe the act entire. I direct the attention of the chairman in limiting that general provision and authority to the more specific definition as found in section 3, which says:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and preserve in his department all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and scientific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office by the collection of statistics and by any other appropriate means within his power.

If the Chair is going to hold that that language is warrant for this new machinery of the department's activities of going into the business of a clearing house to determine where carloads of perishable fruits or perishable truck happen to be located, then we would be warranted in having on this appropriation bill authorization for the establishment of an agricultural university in this city.

It would be warrant for the collection and distribution of statistics relating to cotton, tobacco, of every character of agricultural produce, which the Chair knows has been accomplished not by writing into the Agricultural appropriation bill any authorization such as this, but by distinct, definitive acts. Certainly the Chair can not rely on this general language, which has a specific purpose only of obtaining information of a character that is already in existence, of educational value that could be compiled and distributed in the way of bulletins, which is specifically set forth in section 3. Perhaps the chairman of the committee will lay emphasis upon two other provisions directly relating to this Bureau of Markets that have been passed since the organic act. I have examined this question somewhat, Mr. Chairman, else I would not seek to discuss it so much at length. I want to give to the chairman all that I have at hand. In the compilation of legislation enacted on appropriation acts from 1879 to 1915, as compiled by the Committee on Appropriations, I find on page 323 the only provision which is referred to in the index relating to marketing, and the language is as follows, found in Statutes at Large, volume 37, page 295:

Farm products, investigation and marketing of.
And that the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to secure from the various branches of the department having authority to investigate such matters reports relative to systems of marketing farm products, cooperative or otherwise, in practice in various sections of the country, and of the demand for such products in various trade centers, and shall make such recommendations to Congress relative to further investigations of these questions and the dissemination of such information as he may deem necessary.

That limits the authority of the Department of Agriculture to those agencies and branches of the department now in existence having authority to investigate such reports. Certainly that provision is not warrant for this extraneous matter of an entirely new scope of work for the department.

Then we come to the authorization referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] in the appropriation act of 1914, on which he bases his claim that this is in order. It is found on page 440 of 38 Statutes at Large, under the title "Office of markets":

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distribution of farm products and for the employment of persons and means necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere there is hereby appropriated the sum of $200,000.

That is not a permanent authorization. That is merely appropriation law that expired with the termination of that appropriation act. There is no language in that paragraph which signifies any permanency whatsoever, but even if it did, there is nothing in the language to support this amendment even if it could be possibly construed to be permanent law. There is nothing that goes to the extent that they can obtain this information along the lines indicated in this paragraph relating to the supply, to the commercial movement, and disposition and market prices of goods. Where can the chairman find in the acts I have referred to any authority in the Agricultural Department to-day or at any time in the past that gives warrant to inquire as to the movement of trains loaded with perishable goods? If the Chair is going to the extreme of saying that the general law gives warrant for this piece of legislation, then the Agricultural Committee can bring in any and all kinds of legislation, and I respectfully contend that at no time in the past has any such construction been given to that organic act, either by a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole or by Congress, in legislating definitively on the respective measures increasing the authority of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will call the attention of the Chair to what has been the universal practice of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole dealing with the Agricultural appropriation bill. I think the Chair recognizes that all Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole have been, from custom or for some other reason, more liberal in the application of the rules of the House with respect to this appropriation bill than to any other which is considered by the House. I think the attitude of Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole in that regard is justified for two reasons: First, the tremendous problems involved, but more important than that in this case the broad language of the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture. Many times I have called that language to the attention of the Chair, and I desire again to do so at this time:

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word—

What is agriculture? What is farming? Does farming consist of the mere production of things out of the ground? Does farming consist of the mere gathering of things that have been grown out of the ground? Is that agriculture? That is the old-fashioned view of agriculture; but there is no student of agricultural economics to-day who is worthy of the name who does not include in the definition of agriculture the matter of production, the matter of harvesting, the matter of distribution, and the matter of market prices and methods.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] for a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman contend that the construction he now says shall be given to the word "agriculture" was the accepted construction in the year 1862, when the organic act was established?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, the gentleman is living 50 years behind the times. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; the gentleman is speaking 60 years ahead of a statute that was passed 60 years ago.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know how the Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole construed this act in 1862, and it does not make any difference to me how they construed it. What I am interested in doing now is to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole in recent years have given to this bill a more liberal construction of the rule than they have applied to any other bill that comes before the House.

Mr. GOOD. If what the gentleman says is a correct statement of law, then the things for which this $136,600 may be expended could be secured under the appropriation that just precedes it.

Mr. LEVER. There is no question about it. Last year they were secured under that language.

Mr. GOOD. Then certainly it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I do not catch the gentleman's reasoning at all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me go on. I wish the Chair to keep in mind now the definition of agriculture as it is known to-day by agricultural scientists and experts and farmers themselves; that it involves not only the matter of producing things, but the matter of prices, methods of marketing and distributing, and the like of that.

Now, I want to call the Chair's attention also to section 526 of the Revised Statutes, where the duties of the Commissioner of Agriculture are set out. Among those duties is this:

He shall procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture—

Agriculture in its most comprehensive term, as found in section 520—which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence—and by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power.

What does that mean? If the Department of Agriculture wishes to do so, it can gather this information through books, through correspondence, through scientific experiments. And then the wise legislator who wrote that language added this broadening term—or by any other appropriate means.

But that is not all. I call the Chair's attention to this language under the act of August 10, 1912, and also in the act of 1913. I will read it to the Chair. It was begun in the act of 1911. It says:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to continue investigations on the cost of food supplies at the farm and to the consumer and to disseminate the results of such investigations in whatever manner he may deem best.

And then in the succeeding act that authority is continued, and there has been no repeal of that item in the appropriation act of 1911. And what is it to-day? To investigate, as it were, the cost of living, the distributing of food supplies. And how? By any means that may suggest itself to the Secretary of Agriculture.

And, Mr. Chairman, that is my case. When the original language creating the office was under consideration my recollection is that a point of order was lodged against that; and, if my recollection is not entirely awry this evening, the present occupant of the chair overruled the point of order; and the language now under consideration, it seems to me, is certainly no broader than the original language either of the act creating the Department of Agriculture or of the language in the bill under which we are operating the Office of Markets and Rural Organization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

It appears to the present occupant of the chair that different appropriating committees are sometimes inclined to exceed their authority under existing law, and, of course, the only means at the disposal of the House or the committee to prevent that is by the use of the point of order. But in this case—and in saying that the Chair does not want to be understood as criticizing the committees, because we all know how we importune the different appropriating committees to put propositions in which ought not to be in the bill, so far as their right to be in there under existing law is concerned—but in this case the Agricultural Department stands somewhat alone, so far as its activities are concerned. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] spoke of the Agricultural Department being a "clearing house," provided that these various paragraphs should be held in order. To the mind of the present occupant of the chair the Agricultural Department is peculiarly a "clearing house." That is just exactly what it is.

The provision that I have before me here is section 520 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads in part as follows:

That there shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word—unquestionably making that department peculiarly a "clearing house" for information. Again, section 526 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall procure and preserve all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and practical and scientific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office, by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair permit an interruption just there?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair will notice that refers to collection of information by books or correspondence, not by telegraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It says:

Or by any other appropriate means within his power.

Mr. STAFFORD. That refers to statistics.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, he gets his statistics by means of information which he receives from the different means employed.

Then, in the act of August 10, 1912, there is this provision:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to continue investigations on the cost of food supplies at the farm and to the consumer, and to disseminate the results of such investigations in whatever manner he may deem best.

That is a very broad authority and direction—in fact, a command—on the Secretary of Agriculture to gather and disseminate certain information.

Now, the paragraph under consideration reads:

For collecting and distributing—

The two very things that the Department of Agriculture is authorized to do—by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables.

It appears to the Chair that this paragraph is clearly covered by the authority given in the different sections of the law which I have read.

Now, some Member raises the question as to the words "commercial movement." It occurred to the Chair some time ago that perhaps those words might be subject to a point of order. But this also occurs to the Chair: The language used there, of course, has reference to any information that he can obtain and disseminate in regard to the products of the farm and garden in transit which is connected with or is the link between the actual production and the actual marketing to the consumer, and is therefore only a part of the whole, and so the Chair believes that the provision of this paragraph is covered by existing law, and the point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] moves to strike out the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 72, by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 3 and ending with line 6, reading as follows: "For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables, $136,600."

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 25 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 30 minutes, Mr. Chairman. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will get his time on the next paragraph, and we can get through with this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I am going away, and I am simply asking for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. On that statement, Mr. Chairman, let us make it 40 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Five minutes will do. The matter I wish to speak of has reference to a later section of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair for his own guidance would like to know among whom this time is to be distributed?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] five minutes, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] five minutes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] five minutes, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] five minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] five minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] five minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] five minutes. How much does that make? I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desires to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will make 35 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Make it 45 minutes. The Chair will control the time. I wish to reserve 5 minutes for myself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will give way to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. He would like to go ahead.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take my time with a discussion in reference to the foot-and-mouth disease. I desire to discuss the responsibility for the spread of that disease, which resulted from lack of proper measures in time to arrest such spread.

I have no desire to express any criticism of the Department of Agriculture in this connection, but I do desire to present a reply to an absolutely unfair, unjust, and untrue criticism coming from that department with reference to State officials of Michigan, and I think I can best present the cause of the officials of my State by reading a letter from Dr. Dunphy, the State veterinarian, in which he presents the facts of the case in an absolutely conclusive way, showing that if there is to be any criticism for lack of proper measures early it should be addressed to the Department of Agriculture rather than to the State of Michigan. I will read an open letter addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture from Dr. Dunphy, issued some time in December. I read:

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE HON. D. F. HOUSTON, SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Hon. D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I notice in your report of December 1, 1915, you make the following statements in regard to the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Michigan, and as these statements are misleading in some respects, I deem it a duty to myself and the public, especially citizens of the State of Michigan, to call your attention to these statements.

On page 15 of this report, referring to the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in 1914, you state as follows: "After visiting the locality the State veterinarian consulted an assistant veterinary inspector." Now, sir, this gentleman (as your department is well aware) was a full-fledged inspector of your department, and had been in the service of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 14 years in different capacities; began in Chicago about 15 years ago and had gradually worked up as tagger, stock inspector, meat inspector, until at the time that he was called to this outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease he was acting chief of your department in this State. This gentleman had been in the meat inspector's department, and for six years prior to 1914 he had been an antemortem inspector, which is one of the best positions to develop a man in regard to the diseases of live stock of almost any position in connection with the bureau. He had been through the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in 1908, and assured me, at the time that I called him over the telephone, of this fact. He again assured myself and the local veterinarians at Niles on September 3 that he had been through the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in 1908, and was familiar with the disease, which statement is substantiated by affidavits from Dr. Graham and Dr. Clemo, the local veterinarians at Niles, filed in our office.

Now, honorable sir, if you look into the files of your department you will find that this inspector informed you by letter that the State veterinarian of Michigan reported the matter as very suspicious of foot-and-mouth disease, but that he (the inspector) found that it was necrotic stomatitis. He also sent specimens from the feet and mouths of these animals, that I helped him to secure, to your laboratory for investigation, and referring to this matter, a report was sent from your department to your Detroit office and was forwarded to us, which read as follows:

"Referring to the specimens from cattle at Niles which were forwarded to the Pathological Division, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for examination, you are respectfully advised that a report by the Chief of the Pathological Division has been received at this office, which states that the examination of the samples and the description of the lesions presented by the affected animals indicate very clearly that the condition is mycotic stomatitis, the symptoms of which, both upon the lips and extremities, bear considerable resemblance to those of foot-and-mouth disease."

Now, sir, you will observe by this report that your laboratory at Washington was very positive in this matter, and, as you are well aware, mycotic stomatitis is a noncontagious disease. As this report reached my office when I was confined to my bed by an accident, it was immediately forwarded to the local veterinarians at Niles. This report, coming as it did from the highest pathological authority on animal diseases in the entire country, was not questioned by either the local veterinarians, myself, or the live-stock owners. We took it for granted that the disease was just what your department reported it to be, a noncontagious disease, and it was allowed to run riot in the community.

While I was still confined to my room a report reached me that the disease was spreading, and as soon as I could travel I proceeded to Niles in company with Dr. Hallman, our pathologist, on September 26. At this time several other herds that had not previously been reported were found, and in nearly all cases the lesions had healed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. If it is possible, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for five minutes more, and that that time shall not be taken out of the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The former Chairman of this committee gave the present occupant of the chair a list, and the time is distributed.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask to be allowed five minutes, not to conflict with the agreement. I have taken no time on this bill heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I read further:

As we had suspicion that this was not simply a noncontagious disease, we decided to inoculate a calf with material that had been obtained from some of the diseased animals. This calf was placed in my own barn that had not been used for animals for a year or more, and the pathologist injected some material that he had obtained from Niles into the mucous membrane of the upper lip. This animal showed the disease in the mouth in four days, but no foot lesions; but the lesions in the mouth were sufficient to satisfy us that the disease was infectious. This experiment was also reported to your department at Washington by the chief of the department at Detroit, stating that Drs. Dunphy and Hallman had inoculated a calf at East Lansing, and that the calf had shown an elevation of temperature, excessive drooling from the mouth, and erosions on the tongue. There must have still remained an element of doubt on the part of your department at Washington, for I understand one of your chief experts went to the bureau experiment station in Maryland and inoculated some calves with material that had been sent him from the cattle at Niles by the chief of the department at Detroit.

Now, sir, I take the liberty to state to you plainly, had not your own department made a fatal mistake in stating in the most positive manner that this disease was mycotic stomatitis, the disease might have been confined to one county in Michigan and one in Indiana. Please bear in mind that this mischievous report that was sent out from your own laboratory in Washington, couched, as it was, in the most positive terms, was the cause of the spread of foot-and-mouth disease in this country. I wish to emphasize the following facts: First, that the Federal man from your department in Michigan stated in his letter to the department in Washington that the State veterinarian of Michigan informed him that the disease, as it appeared at Niles, was very suspicious of foot-and-mouth disease, and in the face of this fact you state on page 17 of your report that the first information giving ground for suspicion that foot-and-mouth disease might be present came to your office on October 10, although his report was sent from Detroit about September 4. I call your attention particularly to these dates. On the 4th of September a letter was written you from Detroit stating that the State veterinarian of Michigan was suspicious that the disease was foot-and-mouth disease, and you make the statement in your report, on page 17, that the first ground you had for suspicion of foot-and-mouth disease was on October 10. Again, on page 15 of your report, you state that the gentleman I called from your Michigan department was an assistant inspector on the meat-inspection force of the Bureau of Animal Industry at Detroit, while your department is well aware that he was one of your experienced men, that had been a tagger, a stock inspector, meat inspector, and had reached a point where he was acting for a time as inspector in charge, and had been connected with your department for 14 years; further, that I took the precaution to inquire of this man before he came to Niles if he was familiar with foot-and-mouth disease, and was assured that he was. Now, the question is: Why should these misleading statements be placed in an official report? The only object I can see on your part would be to lead the public to believe that this man was simply an amateur and place the greater responsibility for any mistakes that had occurred on the State veterinarian of Michigan. I ask you plainly, would it not have been in better form for you first to rid your own department of the incompetents before attacking in an insidious manner the ability of the State veterinarian?

Now, sir, I have affidavits from the local veterinarians at Niles showing that this gentleman took issue with me at once in regard to the diagnosis of the disease, and referred it to your Pathological Laboratory at Washington, and a true copy of the report on this matter you have already seen in this letter. I contend that this mischievous report, couched, as it was, in the most positive terms, was the cause of the great spread of foot-and-mouth disease in this country.

I wish to call your attention, further, to the fact that the expert that you sent to Michigan took the same precautions that I had taken at East Lansing, to inoculate a calf and produce the disease before you were convinced at Washington that the disease existed, simply because you did not get the same results immediately at your own experiment station. Another fact that I wish to impress upon the minds of the public is this: That the Live Stock Sanitary Commission and State veterinarian of Michigan placed a quarantine on live stock coming into this State from the Chicago Stock Yards on October 30, while your own quarantine was only issued to become effective October 31; and in this one day that intervened hundreds of cattle went out of the stock yards at Chicago into different States.

Further, you had been informed by the chief of your department at Detroit that Drs. Hallman and Dunphy, the State pathologist and State veterinarian, had adopted these same measures to determine whether the disease was infectious or not that your own experts adopted a week later.

Now, my dear sir, I can not understand why a gentleman occupying a high and honorable position could be cowardly enough to publish this report in a manner that would reflect on the reputation of a State official to cover the ignorant mistakes of his own department, as this mistake of your own department, written, as it was, in the most plain and positive terms, cost the United States hundreds of thousands of dollars. Looking at it from this standpoint, would it not be well for you to clean house in your own department first before you begin to throw out those covert criticisms of the actions of veterinarians not connected with your own department?

I do not believe that the gentleman that was acting chief of your department in Michigan at the time was to blame for not being able to diagnose this disease as it first developed in the State, as neither the symptoms nor lesions were plain in the animals which he and myself examined, and I further believe that this gentleman, as well as myself, had perfect faith in your great Pathological Department at Washington.

I can assure you, sir, that the statements I make in this letter are substantiated by either affidavits from the local veterinarians or reports under the signature of your own department, and I am writing this that the public may have a fair and true understanding of the conditions as they really existed.

Allow me to say in conclusion, that you have a number of gentlemen in your department whom I admire as professional men and respect as gentlemen, but somewhere in your mighty army of so-called experts you must have some incompetents, whose fatal mistakes have been very costly to the live-stock interests of the country.

I beg to remain, honorable sir,

Very respectfully, yours, GEORGE W. DUNPHY,
State Veterinarian of Michigan.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, as the paragraph of the Agricultural bill before us relates to "timely information" concerning the "commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits," I would like to have the Clerk read a letter which I have received from Mr. H. F. Davidson, of Hood River, Oreg., the agent of the northwestern shippers in New York. Mr. Davidson is an apple grower also. He has been representing the growers for a number of years. He came to Washington a few weeks ago to secure permission of the British embassy to ship apples to Denmark. His request was refused. Afterwards, on April 12, he wrote to me concerning his troubles. I would like to have the Clerk read that letter, which I submitted to the Department of State, and also a letter from the Department of State in reply thereto. They contain "timely information" about the "commercial movement and disposition" of apples.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[H. F. Davidson, shippers' representative, domestic and foreign markets.]

NEW YORK, April 12, 1916.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Congressman, Second District Oregon,
Room 404, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: Referring to our conversation yesterday regarding difficulties imposed by the British authorities with reference to shipments of fresh apples to Denmark during the past season, beg to advise you that we made shipments via the Scandinavian Line steamships to Copenhagen for the holiday trade on orders from Mr. Th. Olesen, our Copenhagen representative, on the S. S. Oscar II November 11, 1915; S. S. United States November 13, 1915; S. S. Hellig Olav November 18, 1915; S. S. Frederick VII December 3, 1915, or thereabout, to the amount of 20 carloads, which were landed at Copenhagen, but were held by the British Government officials until after the time for supplying the holiday trade was passed and then released to our representative, Mr. Th. Olesen, to whom the fruit was shipped, and we thereby sustained a heavy loss, which we have not been able up to this time to definitely ascertain the amount of, as the sale and settlements were delayed and we have not yet received full settlements for all of these apples.

Recently we received orders for 15 cars of fresh apples, of which 2 cars each were intended for Joseph Stam, Peter Meiniche, A. Anderson, and Valdemar Anderson, and 7 cars for Th. Olesen, and we engaged steamship space for 5 cars on each of the following ships of the Scandinavian Line to Copenhagen, which is the address of each of the above-named customers: S. S. Oscar II, to sail April 6; S. S. Frederick VIII, to sail April 16; S. S. Hellig Olav, to sail April 27. The shipment of five cars for the S. S. Oscar II went as scheduled, but before the two last shipments moved and while the lot on the Oscar II is on the way we are advised that the British authorities have issued an order that no shipments of fresh apples will be permitted to be delivered to Denmark.

Having one shipment out in the ocean and two more in storage here in New York at heavy expense for the fruit, freight and other necessary expenses will force on us another heavy loss.

Kindly advise us as promptly as possible what can be done to relieve this disastrous condition, as fresh apples have not been considered contraband of war and this fruit is all intended for consumption in Denmark, and the purchasers have expressed their willingness to give proper bonds guaranteeing that none of the fruit would be permitted to go into Germany or any country which is an enemy of Great Britain.

Inasmuch as apples are a perishable product and the season for moving them such great distances safely will soon pass, it is highly important that extremely prompt action be had in order to save the fruit from perishing before delivery can be accomplished.

Trusting that relief can be had through your offices and those of your colleagues from this unfortunate, and, we believe, unwarranted situation, I am,

Yours, truly,

H. F. DAVIDSON,
Representing over 3,000 Fruit Growers in the Pacific Northwest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have time enough to read the letter written by the State Department in response to Mr. Davidson's letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been limited to 40 minutes, and the present occupant of the Chair has been given a list of names for recognition, which exhausts the time.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have more time, notwithstanding the previous agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] have further time, not to be taken out of the time already allotted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, the letter which I received from the State Department in response to Mr. Davidson's communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 15, 1916.

The Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives.

SIR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 13, 1916, inclosing a letter from Mr. H. F. Davidson, dated April 12, in regard to the shipment of apples to Denmark.

I have taken up this matter unofficially with the British Embassy, which states that they have received a number of applications for "letters of assurance" with reference to the shipment of apples to Scandinavia.

A number of these "letters of assurance" have been issued, but some have been refused in view of the fact that foodstuffs are conditional contraband, and the large quantities of apples going forward to Scandinavia convince Great Britain that certain of these shipments are intended for reexportation to Germany.

The embassy, however, informs me that it is sending a special cablegram to the foreign office in an endeavor to ascertain whether it may not be possible to permit all these consignments of apples to go forward to Scandinavia.

The embassy promised to let me know as soon as they are in receipt of a reply from the foreign office, and as soon as I obtain any additional information from them I will again communicate with you.

This Government recognizes the right of American firms to ship goods, whether contraband or not, to neutral consignees in neutral countries. The department, however, is informed that steamship companies are refusing to accept various consignments of goods even though destined for neutral countries, and there is no power in this department to require them to alter their decision. This Government has had no part in the arrangement announced by the embassy in the public press in reference to the issuance of "letters of assurance" to American firms wishing to make shipments of goods to Scandinavia.

The whole subject of interference with neutral trade and the circumstances which have induced steamship companies to assume their present attitude are being given the careful consideration of the department.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES A. HOLDER,
Foreign Trade Adviser.

In this letter it will be seen that the Department of State informs me that it has taken up the matter unofficially with the British Embassy, and that the embassy has wired to the foreign office to ascertain whether or not it could obtain permission for these apples to be shipped to Denmark. That was on the 15th of April, and since that time no word has been received by the Department of State about the subject, although I have twice by phone called up the department to inquire about the matter. Now, I am one of those who believe that these matters properly rest within the domain of vigorous diplomacy, but not within the domain of the complaisant and perfunctory diplomacy that has heretofore characterized our negotiations relating to interference with our trade with neutral countries. [Applause.] Mr. Davidson has been compelled to hawk about on the streets of New York 10 carloads of apples which the British Government has refused to grant him authority to send to Denmark.

Mr. COX. Absolutely to a neutral country.

Mr. SINNOTT. Absolutely to a neutral country, and where the consignees are willing to put up any kind of a bond that those apples will not reach German territory. Must we submit our next apple crop, our next wheat crop, to this imposition? I say, Mr. Chairman, it is time that this complaisant and perfunctory diplomacy ceases, and that in regard to interference with our shipments to neutral countries we would welcome in this House as vigorous and trenchant a message as we heard a few days ago relative to submarine warfare. [Applause.] I am willing to leave these things in the hands of diplomacy; but when diplomacy fails, I think it is time that this House give serious consideration to a bill looking toward an embargo upon munitions of war. In that way this Congress may accomplish what diplomacy has failed to accomplish—respect for our trade with neutrals. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I expect to offer an amendment to this paragraph which will provide that a part of this $136,600 shall be expended for inquiring into the cost of transportation by rail or water and the cost of storage. The paragraph reads:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits and vegetables.

The amount of money to be expended is $136,600. If the intention of it is to eliminate the middle man, we should inquire into the rates of transportation and the charges and expenses for cold storage. One of the real differences of opinion between the producer and the consumer, such as the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] referred to, arises from the fact that there is a distinct cost, due very largely to our separated conditions, which neither party to the transaction, the producer or the consumer, thoroughly understands.

It is difficult for the farmer who gets 17 cents a dozen for eggs in Iowa to understand why he does not get more of the 50 cents a dozen the consumer in my district has to pay. It is hard for the consumer to understand it also, but some one must erect a cold-storage warehouse and some one must build a railroad, and all that costs money and must be charged in. There are many other expenses that must be charged up to the middle man, and they must be accounted for as between the producer and consumer. Without the middle man it is idle to talk about selling the products of the Middle West to the people along the Atlantic seaboard. There must be a means of transportation and there must be a medium of storage and of safekeeping and preserving the product until the time for distribution comes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania? I do.

Mr. STEENERSON. How does the gentleman explain the fact, announced in the press, that the steamship lines plying from the Pacific to the Atlantic through the Panama Canal have now been abandoned because they can not compete with the transcontinental railroads?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is true, that ought to delight the gentleman from Minnesota; but I suppose it is due to the increased freights that ships are now reaping on account of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] should have made an uncalled-for and unwarranted attack on a member of his committee. I regret it not because the attack was directed at me but because it comes from a gentleman for whom I have the highest regard, and one who has always performed his duty with enthusiasm, industry, intelligence, and rectitude of purpose; and, so far as I know, he is dominated by noble and lofty ideals, hence I regret that the attacks should come from the distinguished gentleman. The gentleman takes great credit, and he deserves great credit, but when he takes credit for everything that has appeared in all appropriation bills, that includes items incorporated in the other branch of Congress, possibly a question mark should be added to his remarks. What seems unfair to me is that the gentleman should make an attack on a colleague of his committee for performing a solemn duty imposed by the leader of his own party, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. It will be remembered that the gentleman from North Carolina, at the opening of this session, served notice on the Republicans that unless every item of these bills was carefully scrutinized, and unless objections were made, Republicans would be held responsible for waste appropriations. I have not seen fit to criticize the gentleman because he finds it his duty to follow the estimates submitted by the department. It has not been my practice to criticize or question the motives of another Member who disagrees with me. I prefer to believe and give everybody credit of being as honest as I am. The gentleman is mistaken in his conclusion. I did not criticize the department, I merely stated certain facts in order to correct numerous misstatements. If I had had any desire to criticize, I say to the gentleman, there are many things to criticize; but errors are made, and anyone who will read the hearings, study the bill, and inform himself as to the operations of this department, and you may add every other department, will not have to search deep for errors.

But even that is not a criticism, as the poet says:

Errors like straws on the surface flow;
He who will search for pearls must dive below.

I take it that the gentleman will concede that applies to the department also. A distinguished statesman said not long ago, "If the departments would adopt business methods in administering Uncle Sam's affairs, $300,000,000 could be saved." The gentleman's party platform denounced Republican expenditures as "waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation." His party assumed control. It is now in control, which includes the Department of Agriculture. His party in its first two years of rule added $172,000,000 to the appropriations made and denounced as "waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation." Still the gentleman feels warranted in attacking another Member for merely calling attention to a few unnecessary and unwarranted expenditures. When I arose I, of course, knew what to expect and how unpopular it is to refer to waste expenditures, and how fruitless is an attempt to correct a few of the many impositions upon the taxpayer. But having read party platforms and stump speeches full of encouragement and promises to the farmer and the taxpayer, and having listened to the many insinuations hurled on this floor at the people so eloquently eulogized on the stump, but generally classed by the representatives of the department and on this floor as ignorant and as wards of the department, I confess that my patience was finally exhausted, and I took occasion to call to the attention of the House these facts, and took the privilege of expressing my sentiment as to what might be expected of a Member of this House.

As the chairman of the committee it is his duty to follow instructions as they come. That is the unfortunate thing under our form of government and the practice of this House. There is no way to get away from it. The gentleman might not be justified in supporting a number of these appropriations, but it becomes incumbent on him as another leader of this House belonging to that party, and as we know, if he will sit at the pie counter he must do the bidding. That is nothing new; I am not criticizing the present administration. It has been the practice in years gone by.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman if he can tell us, and he has been upon the committee a long time and his service to agriculture is undisputed, how many experts there are actually employed in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. On January 1, 1915, there were 16,233 employees on the roll. Add 162 increase and you have the number. There has been much said about the agricultural appropriations in the interest of the farmer. These 16,395 people also come in for their share.

Mr. COX. The most of them?

Mr. HAUGEN. The most of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how much of this appropriation would go for the employment of experts?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; there is no way of knowing how many experts would be employed, because experts are made every day. [Laughter.] They appoint people who never spent a day on the farm, and yet they are employed to go out broadcast through the country and instruct the farmer how to farm, and they are classed as expert farmers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have just passed an item appropriating $285,000, and now here is this item appropriating $136,000. Does the gentleman know how many men will be employed under these appropriations?

Mr. HAUGEN. As the gentleman knows, Congress has surrendered its right and power to fix salaries. Congress does not reserve the right that it has under the Constitution. We make lump-sum appropriations. We make them in the dark and the department appoints the people in any number it sees fit and fixes the salaries to suit its sweet will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The salaries are not specified, as in other bills?

Mr. HAUGEN. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this appropriation will not be stricken from the bill. I know of nothing on a small scale which involves greater economic loss than is occasioned by the destruction of fresh fruits and green vegetables. If we can so arrange through any method which may be perfected that the fresh fruit shall be consumed before it molds and decays and the green vegetables shall be consumed before they become too old or rot in the field or on the way we will have accomplished a most desirable purpose. This is an experimental work. No one knows just how much good can be accomplished, but it seems to me that it is worth while to make the experiment.

I have seen in the city of Chicago, within a distance of 8 or 10 miles, on South Water Street, which has the greatest market for fruits and vegetables in the world, field after field of vegetables rotting on the ground because it was not worth while to collect them and transport them by wagon down to the market, for the reason that people farther out in the country were sending great quantities of vegetables to South Water Street for which, owing to the glut of the market, they were receiving no return, and when in many other places there was a great demand for these vegetables at high prices.

I have seen in my limited experience great quantities of fruit sent to Chicago from places in Illinois where there was no return from the sale, when little towns between the place of production and the city of Chicago were clamoring for these fruits at reasonable prices. No one could tell except by collecting the information. The man who raises the fruit can not know of his own knowledge whether there is a glut in the Chicago market on a certain day or whether everybody is seeking to pour the fruit into the markets on that day.

A moment ago the gentleman said that the people around Philadelphia might send all their products to Pittsburgh and it would all go in on one day. It probably would not, but if the information could be had from day to day as to the state of the market at Pittsburgh they would know whether to send it there or not. If the information could be conveyed around the country without too great expense, so that the person who is raising or shipping these products quickly destroyed by time that they may know where there is a demand and where there is a glut in the market, we might save great quantities of fruits and vegetables, the result of hard labor and an investment of much money, which are now lost and absolutely destroyed. I think it is worth while to make the experiment and see if we can not find a way to save these things which are now lost and destroyed. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the proponent of this proposition is not content with indulging in experiments such as have been carried on for the past year, but before waiting to see whether they are efficacious he comes before the committee and agitates for an increase of appropriation of three or four times, without any information as to the ultimate cost that will be occasioned by this unheard-of experiment. If the Government is warranted in going into the field of business venture to determine the supply of commodities of a perishable character, then in a few years this Congress is going to be beset with a demand from the producers of staple commodities that it determine as to the quantity of those commodities that are on the rails and the warehouses throughout the country.

This committee brings in an appropriation bill aggregating $24,500,000, not taking into account the $6,000,000 on the permanent appropriation fund. Last year it was $22,000,000 and the year before $19,000,000, and yet the committee, that is supposed to be for economy, in this one item increases the appropriation by $200,000. This work was carried on last year in a small way under the appropriation in a previous item, and that item has been increased $64,000. Where is your much-vaunted economy, when you launch full force into an experimental field that you know nothing whatever about? Talk about economic distribution of perishable fruits. Why, if you are going to advise the producer as to the condition of the market, it will only tend to aggravate the glut in those respective markets. From time immemorial perishable fruit has congested in South Water Street, Chicago; in Philadelphia, and in New York. That will always be the condition there, because they are the great markets. I contend that anyone who knows anything about the subject knows that this information can be obtained from the newspapers and that it is furnished every day, and the growers of strawberries in the district adjoining that which I represent study those returns and send their products to the markets according to the price and the supply. And here this fanciful doctrinaire, the head of this division, who was formerly connected with the Civil Service Commission, and who is now the protagonist of this idea, wishes to establish headquarters in 25 or 30 leading markets of the country, having expensive men employed here at the department collecting this data daily as to the disposition of trainloads of fruit. If you can justify that as a governmental function, then you will be compelled to support a like investigation and daily report as to the quantity of eggs, the quantity of poultry, and the quantity of all kinds of products.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think it would be of very great advantage to the farmer if everyone should have a ticker service in his house, showing what apples are worth and what other things are selling for each day?

Mr. STAFFORD. That only emphasizes in hyperbole the ridiculousness of this proposition that the Government shall go into a business venture to investigate the production and consumption of these commodities. Those things have in times past been taken care of under the existing distribution forces of the country, and they will continue to be, and this is no time to launch into an extravagant and wasteful proposition.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I represent a district where the activities are largely agricultural, and I would not knowingly do anything that would injuriously affect the agricultural interests of the country; but when I recall that a Democratic House was elected six years ago on a platform of economy, a program of retrenchment, at a time when we were spending $13,000,000 a year under the Agricultural appropriation bill, and now realize that after six years of Democratic rule in this House that appropriation has been raised to about $30,000,000, it makes me stop and think.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman oppose that kind of a program—appropriation for agriculture?

Mr. GOOD. I oppose it unless you can show that some material good has resulted from the increase. The gentleman from South Carolina stated a few moments ago that we commenced this work of investigating the question of markets in 1914 and secured an appropriation of $50,000 for that purpose. Last year we appropriated for marketing this kind of crops $238,000 and this year it has jumped to $421,600. When are these increases to stop? Where has any beneficial result been obtained either for the farmer or for the consumer?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out that the orange growers of California have entered into a combination—illegal, if you please, and in restraint of trade—by which they have avoided this glutting of the market, and by so doing they have held up the price of oranges, and the poor laboring man who a few years ago might, when the market was flooded, be able to buy a dozen good oranges for 20 cents, now finds that under this combination he must pay 40 cents for a dozen of good oranges. That may be all right for the orange growers, but how about the poor consumer that you are also going to legislate for? You have not increased the price by this kind of legislation to the farmer of a single article, unless it be to the growers of oranges; but according to the Department of Commerce you have increased the cost of living to every man, woman, and child in the United States. I do not know where you expect to get off with this kind of legislation. You are piling up unnecessary taxes that the people of the United States must pay to furnish jobs for thousands and thousands of men, but you can not point to a single beneficial result to either the consumer or to the producer. I do not say that the Agricultural Department is a failure. It has done some very good work. It has made some good investigations; but until you bring some good results, why do you not keep the appropriation down within reasonable limits? I would not object to an appropriation of $238,000, the amount you had last year for the purpose, although it could well be questioned; but in order that you may pay the telegraph companies something, in order that you may sweeten them up, perhaps for election purposes, you are going to increase this appropriation for marketing $136,000. If we were to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or a similar amendment, striking out the telegraph item and inserting an amendment that we should disseminate this information by use of the bulletin of the Atlantic Deep Waterways Association, just as good a result would be accomplished.

Mr. LEVER. How much time is there remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would notify me when I have used three minutes.

This bill carries a total appropriation in round numbers of $24,500,000, and most of that we have already passed over. We have only 7 pages more out of 79 of this bill remaining to consider. The bulk of the large appropriations have been passed by this committee. The bulk of these appropriations, too, are used largely in the teaching of better methods of production.

The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], a member of the Appropriations Committee of this House, a committee that seems always, I am afraid, to look somewhat jealously on appropriations for agriculture, has permitted all of these other appropriations, involving millions of dollars, to pass by without one word of protest. [Applause.] And now when we come to the point in the bill where we appropriate the total sum of $541,000 to teach the farmer or to help the farmer how to better distribute that which he produces, the distinguished representative from the Appropriations Committee throws himself into 40 fits of economy. [Applause.]

I am for economy, too. I would not join in recommending this item if I did not believe it was a wise expenditure of public money, that would bring back to the people 100 per cent in dividends. But I do somewhat object, Mr. Chairman, to people getting their economical fits only upon the agricultural appropriation bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed three minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield a minute?

Mr. LEVER. I have but two minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not want to take it out of your time.

Mr. LEVER. I promised the gentleman from Indiana that I would yield to him.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, there is no other department in this Government doing a more beneficial work, and to a more important class of industry in this country, than the Agricultural Department is doing. [Applause.] And more especially in educating the farmer how he may increase the productiveness of the soil, how he may increase the quantity and variety of his crop, how he may find the best means of marketing it and supplying the hungry mouths all over the country. [Applause.] With 8,000,000 of people engaged in farming, who raise the products that feed more than 100,000,000 of people, the work of educating them how to increase and distribute their crops, how to market them, how to prepare them for market, as the Agricultural Department is now doing, is one of the most important functions of this Government. [Applause.] Every time that they educate the farmer in the way in which he is to prepare his products for market, better the crops, and better the quality of those going to the ultimate consumer for consumption, the more beneficial the work and the more profitable is the business to the farmer. This great work should be commended and encouraged from every possible standpoint by Congress in order that improved conditions may exist and the industry become more profitable. This department is extending and expanding its intelligent work year after year, and is rendering to the farmers valuable service which proves highly advantageous to them in many branches of the industry. The more the department cooperates with the farmer, the closer the relations, the more efficient the service is and the greater the benefits. We must not underestimate the value of the assistance or withhold some paltry sum which might cripple the industry or restrain its expansion. I fear in too many instances proper appreciation of this fact is not considered.

The marketing of crops is a most important feature of this great industry from the standpoint of both the producers and consumers, and more especially is this the case concerning perishable products. The market at one point may be glutted, and products wasted consigned to it, whilst at other markets there may be a scarcity. Hence if the producer can be advised of this fact, as here proposed, the producer can ship his products to a market where there is a demand, and sell them at a remunerative price. In this manner the interest of both producer and consumer are conserved to good advantage. It is a part of the function of this great department to serve the public to the best advantage, and in doing this it is performing a necessary and desirable purpose. It ought to be equipped so it can do it and if we afford the means for it to do so our work will be commended. Something has been said here about our inability to do so, because of a depleted Treasury, and we must economize. This great Government is not pauperized; it is abundantly able to incur and pay every necessary expense which will promote the welfare of its citizens and encourage its industries—help them. It has more available means to raise revenues than any country in the world, and its people are ready to respond in taxes for every useful and beneficial purpose for which they may be required. This is no place to use the pruning knife or to practice parsimony. We should encourage and assist this great industry and by this item it is proposed to render it a great service, and one that will be of great advantage to the whole people.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, having spoken twice briefly during this debate on the Agricultural bill, I would not again ask the attention of the committee but for the fact that some suggestions have been made which indicate a lack of understanding on the part of some Members of the vital problems of agriculture and their relationship to the public welfare.

One of the gentlemen who has spoken in opposition to the item in this bill providing for the giving of telegraphic information to the producers of perishable products asks why this information can not be supplied by bulletins or gotten from the trade papers. That gentleman is an active Member of the House, well versed in general governmental matters, and yet he asks this sort of question with regard to one of the great vital problems of modern life. I want to answer that question, and, incidentally, do a little missionary work for my constituents and for his constituents. The Federal Government conducts many investigations and issues many bulletins. The fact is the departments of this Government are "chucked" full of knowledge hidden away in publications. Much of this information is out of date before the people get it, and much of it never reaches them at all. What the man wants who has perishable products for sale is information right up to the minute with reference to the supply and demand for these products in the various markets of the country and the movement to these several markets from the areas of production. Bulletins and yesterday's news he does not need. He has a car of stuff on the road, for instance. In four hours maybe it will have passed the point where he can change its destination. He wants to know about the markets—not yesterday, but now—before the car passes that point. In this connection I want to call attention to the fact that he needs something more, a central distributing agency which will route the moving commodities to the several markets in proportion to their several demands. While no provision is made for that in this bill, it does propose a service which would materially aid cooperative organizations undertaking to do that.

Mr. Chairman, one of the unanswerable criticisms of the Agricultural Department is that the farmers, after they have followed the instruction of the Federal Government in producing, if successful in increasing the total yield receive less value therefor than if the yield had not been so great. This is largely due to the present methods of sale and distribution. These perishable products go out into the dark to seek an unknown purchaser. They may rot on a sidetrack or in a congested market. Nobody can forecast what will be the result of the farmer's gamble in trying to convert his products into money. The Agricultural Department is now undertaking to lessen the hazard by giving to producers telegraphic information which will enable them to direct their shipments so that they will have a better chance to send them to markets needing them and so that they may be kept out of glutted markets. That is the purpose of this item. As indicated before, I do not regard the service proposed to be rendered as adequate, but it is in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, another suggestion which I want to discuss was made by the gentleman next to the last one, I believe, who addressed the committee. He asks the question, What is the consumer getting out of this? Evidently he does not believe this legislation to be of beneficial concern to the consumer. I have listened very attentively to the debate on this Agricultural bill, and the general view seems to be that this legislation dealing with the problems of the farm is solely in the interest of the farmers and is a sort of distribution by the Federal Government to them as their share in the direct benefits dispensed by the Federal Government. The responsibility for this erroneous viewpoint rests, in some measure at least, upon certain of us in this House who represent agricultural constituencies. Our business is not to make our constituents think we are serving them. Our business is really to serve them. This "ranting" and defying, denouncing, and cavorting around does not get us anywhere. That is not the way these Members do here who really get results. Let us quit talking about the fact that we are fighting "old Rube" battles, and that sort of rot, and let us study, really study, these questions affecting the farm and demonstrate to the other classes that in our efforts in behalf of our farming constituents we are not trying to hurt anybody else, but are trying to promote the general interest. We can do it, because the facts are with us, and we can get results that way. That is the only way we can get them.

Mr. Chairman, an understanding of the problems of agriculture and their relationship to the general interest makes clear the fact that there is no conflict of interest between the men who produce and the men who consume the products of the farm. I am going to make that clear, because I want to have the problems of the farmer dealt with free from prejudice, free from class consideration, and upon the broad basis of the best interest of the country as a whole. I ask nothing for the farmers which the common welfare does not require. If I can demonstrate to you gentlemen who live in the cities that your interest and the interest of my constituent who lives in the country are identical, in so far as the removal of certain difficulties which hamper my constituents are concerned, I will have rendered a valuable service not only to my constituents but to your constituents as well. I want to lay down a few propositions which, if they can be sustained, removes all doubt as to the correctness of the statement that the constituents of you gentlemen who live in the cities are interested with my constituents who live in the country in bringing to the American farmers better economic conditions. I shall direct your attention to only one phase.

We have heard much during this discussion of the waste resulting from the present methods of sale and distribution, especially of perishable products. You gentlemen who represent city constituencies may have been impressed when you heard the statements with reference to this waste; that it is unfortunate that the farmers suffered such loss; but I doubt if you realized that your constituents have shared in that loss.

The first proposition which I lay down is this, and I hope I may have the careful attention of the Members who represent city constituencies: Waste is a burden upon agriculture which the consumers of agricultural products must bear. The consumer must eventually pay for the waste. I grant the consumer is not paying it all now. A few years ago he was not paying any considerable part of it. This is why: With the improvement of agricultural machinery, which began to assume its greatest proportion a comparatively short time ago, the producing power of the individual farmer was greatly enhanced. The lack of educational equipment on the part of the mass of men engaged in farming handicapped them in the change of their vocation. The total producing power in proportion to consumption created such sharp competition among producers for the markets then available that the loss could not be shifted to consumers. So, when the products of the individual farmer perished before reaching a market, the loss rested upon him and his family. There was, of course, a rapid movement from the farm during all this time, but also a rapid improvement in agricultural machinery which offset, in so far as production was concerned, the relative numerical decrease of producers. But during these years of industrial revolution, wrought largely by steam and electricity, some very far-reaching things almost unnoticed have been under process of development, the effect of which we are now feeling. The consuming population has increased by leaps and bounds in proportion to the producing population. The fertility of the soil has suffered, and the country boy and girl have very generally been given the benefits of such education as affords to them freedom of choice among the vocations of the country. On yesterday, as time is measured in a country's development, the equilibrium between country and town dwelling population could be more nearly maintained without equality of opportunity, because the lack of general education on the part of the country boy and girl handicapped them in choosing among the vocations. Many of them were held by ignorance to the business of their parents. But we have a situation now, under which a very large percentage of those engaged in farming are equipped to do other things. They will not farm unless farming be made as profitable as any other business to them. Yesterday men were compelled to farm. They knew how to do nothing else. To-day they have freedom of choice, and can only be induced to farm by the payment of as much profit, not gross profit, but net profit, as any other business would give. I want to emphasize that it is net profit they must have. There ought to be no question as to the soundness of that proposition. If it be sound, it follows inevitably that consumers must take care of all the burdens upon production and distribution. They must do this because the profit which they must give to the farmer is a net profit. In the price, therefore, of the products which finally reach the table of the constituents of you gentlemen who represent city districts you must pay for the value of the products which rot on the farms and in congested markets after they have been produced and all the other avoidable, as well as unavoidable, burdens of agriculture. You must pay the farmers for them in order that they may have this net profit, which will prevent them from changing their business.

Mr. Chairman, I shall digress at this point to say to my colleagues from the great cities that you are just as much interested in proper rural-credit legislation as are the people who live in the country, because, if agricultural products must be produced under an exorbitant interest rate, your constituents who live in the city must pay that interest rate in order to give to agriculture the net profit which I declare men who farm must have, or they will change their business. Your constituents must have food to live, and they can not afford to have the number of agricultural producers very much more reduced. Is not that a sound proposition? If you do much more reduce their numbers one of these times we will slip a cog in the machinery of production and you will not face the problem of the high cost of living merely, you will face the problem of getting something to keep yourselves alive. I know you are not paying all of this waste yet. You are not paying the entire interest charge yet, but this movement from the country to the city is not ended yet, either. Year by year you are paying more of it, and you will continue to pay more and more of it until you pay it every cent. This movement of population from the country to the city will not cease until you do pay every cent. That is fixed by immutable economic law. In this connection I want to make a prediction. The farmers of this country have been having meetings in community groups in State and in national assembly for the purpose of devising means of bringing to their business better economic conditions. The country at large has looked upon these efforts without any feeling of direct concern. The time is almost at hand when you people who live in the great cities will be having your meetings to deal with the very same problems which the farmers are now undertaking to deal with. You will be trying to devise a plan for getting to your tables those products which are rotting in the fields and on the sidetracks, because you will then know that you are having to pay for them, and you had just as well get the benefit of them. You will be trying to reduce the intervening charges.

Mr. Chairman, I am giving my support to this Bureau of Markets and Rural Organization not because I believe it to be adequate or that its activities indicate that those who have the determining of the scope of its activities have yet a clear, comprehensive view of what is necessary. I have spoken only of marketing perishable products. We need just as badly a system for the marketing of our grain, cotton, and live stock, but I shall not discuss that now. I am not trying to cover the whole ground. I have spoken with a very specific and definite purpose of replying in a general way to some criticisms and suggestions made during this debate and of trying to broaden the scope of direct interest in our great agricultural problems. To illustrate how far-reaching these matters are, a most interesting discussion of them could be developed from that standpoint of preparedness of which we hear so much now. Well-fed bodies are conducive to mental growth, moral development, and the higher sentiments of patriotism. Well-fed bodies not only fit men and make them willing in an emergency to defend their country but fit them for the commercial contests as well. The necessity for a nation's citizens to have sufficient wholesome food is an imperative national necessity, for a nation lives and acts only through its people. I have seen in my own State carloads of food decaying in the fields, because the price obtainable would not pay the expense of harvest and marketing, while at no great distance the prices charged for these products were prohibitive to the average family.

Waste of food, on one hand, because of lack of a marketing system, and loss of mental and physical stamina of the Nation's citizenship because of a lack of this food, are not only a national loss, they are a national disgrace. I shall not develop this thought further. I merely suggest these things as bearing upon the matters under consideration and to give another viewpoint of the vital and comprehensive importance of these matters which have been considered as only of concern to farmers. Another suggestion which I make in passing, aside from the increased producing power of a well fed and clothed workman over one not well fed and clothed, anything which would enable such a man to reduce the cost of his food and clothing would reduce the cost of manufacturing, for instance; for whatever be the manner of considering it, the cost of the operatives' food and clothing is one of the overhead charges which must be taken care of. The operative would, no doubt, share in the benefits of such a reduction. I shall not take the time to further develop this thought, either. There is a somewhat broader scope. The cheaper we can feed and clothe ourselves as a Nation, the less are the fixed charges upon the Nation's activities. The greater we can reduce these fixed charges, the greater will be our opportunities in the industrial contests of the world. In a consideration of these matters we had as well definitely understand that we can not reduce the farmer's profit, because he is quitting at the present profit. I am not making a plea for him. I am stating a self-evident fact. We must give him more profit to induce him to continue. There is no other way to keep him on the job. There is but one new place we can work, and that is in that far distance between the areas of production and of consumption. I am not fighting the middlemen. They are here because they are needed. If we develop a system in which they are not needed, they must go. My judgment is they will always be needed, but not in such relatively great numbers as now. There is too much waste and too many toll takers. But the excess will be eliminated naturally and without any disturbance, if we get a better system. We spend too much time trying to destroy and too little trying to construct. We do not seem to realize that if we build a better house than the present one we will probably not have to tear the old one down in order to have it vacated and the new one occupied. At least we ought to build the new before we demolish the old, even if it does have many defects.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to build a comprehensive marketing machine. I do not mean that the Government should go into the marketing business. It should do with regard to sale and distribution what it is doing with regard to production, and give the people of the Nation a chance to eliminate this waste. It can be done. In this connection I will put into the RECORD a short bill which embodies my ideas as to how it can be done:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to establish, at as early date as practicable, a farm-produce exchange, with such branches thereof as may be necessary, in order to afford a medium through which the economic and systematic sale and distribution of such products may be effected.

In the operation of such exchange the Secretary of Agriculture, as far as practicable, shall cooperate with the several States and the various agencies therein which may be utilized, and may formulate plans and regulations for exchange of service between them and such exchange.

It shall be the duty of each of the departments of the Government to furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such statistics and data as they may acquire which would be useful in the operation of such exchange, and to render such other service in the sale and distribution of farm products through such exchange as it would be practicable to render.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall keep advised as nearly as practicable as to the details of the quantity, quality, location, and price at which held, of agricultural products and the volume and location of demand in the United States and abroad, and the price at which such products may be sold, and shall make such information available to the producers and purchasers of such products, and shall endeavor to bring about such system in the sale and distribution of such products as shall eliminate the waste and extremes in prices resulting from the present lack of system therein.

Those desiring to offer products for sale through such exchange may do so by grade or by sample delivered to such exchange, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe, but all tenders of such products shall be for a definite quantity and quality: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to permit contracts for the sale of such products to be made upon a basis grade, with the option to deliver other grades in fulfillment of such contract: Provided, however, That no contracts shall be made through said exchange permitting a delivery within a wider range of grades than the ordinary user of such product dealt in uses in the general conduct of his business wherein such products are used, nor upon any other delivery value difference than the commercial difference between the basis grade and the grade or grades delivered.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require such deposits in money, bond, or other guaranty of compliance with the obligation to deliver according to tender or receive and pay according to offer as in his judgment may be necessary to insure compliance with the contracts made through such exchange.

All information furnished by such exchange shall not be at a higher cost than that necessary to defray the expenses of transmission.

No charges shall be made to individual producers or to producers' organizations for services rendered in effecting sales of products grown by them or by their members, as the case may be.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish such rules and regulations governing transactions through said exchange and the service rendered by said exchange as in his discretion may be deemed necessary.

This bill recognizes the necessity of lodging a large discretion with the Secretary of Agriculture, both as to details and as to time of installation. This would give us what we need, a machine which would make possible of utilization our present Government agencies and the private and organized constructive forces of the country. It would give us a basis for a personal rural-credit system in this country, but I shall not discuss that now. How long before we will do what is necessary I do not know, but I do know that upon all proper occasions I am going to press these matters upon the attention of Congress and of the country until it is done. I am not a crank on this subject. There are many other matters of great importance, but few, if any, of greater importance. I try to be an all-round Representative of my people. If I claim more time on these matters than on any others, it is because I have committed myself especially to them, and know more about them than I do about any other great matter claiming your attention. In other words, while endeavoring to care for my general legislative duties, I have cut this out as my job, and I am going to stay on it until it is finished. I am persuaded I could render no greater constructive service to my country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] moves to strike out the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is going to insist on that sort of thing I am going to insist that there shall be a quorum present, so that there shall be a full expression of judgment on the part of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw his request for a division?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The gentleman from Wisconsin looks so lonesome over there that I relent. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] withdraws his demand for a division. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and demonstration of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marking, compressing, and tare of cotton, $48,000: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $28,620 may be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades and classes of cotton in order to determine their spinning value and for demonstrating the results of such tests.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I made a request for unanimous consent a little while ago to extend and revise my remarks, and the question was not put. I wish to make it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto may close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of congratulating the committee on the retention of the paragraph by the rather close vote by which it was retained. [Laughter.]

I represent in part the State of New York, and there is no State in the Union that is more interested in that particular paragraph than is the State of New York, for we lead every other State in the Union in the production of orchard fruits, small fruits, and apples.

Mr. MANN. And the amount you eat.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; and the amount we eat, because we have the money to pay for it; and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we do pay for it, whereas other States may not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman carries the practice into the House.

Mr. BENNET. The practice of paying for things?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the habit of eating apples.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; Presbyterians, of whom I am one, have that habit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman's religion induces him to misunderstand me, I will say my purpose was to indicate that the gentleman from New York has been detected in the act of eating apples on the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I will admit that.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Did the gentleman hear the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] talking about some carloads of apples brought from Oregon to New York, where they had to hawk them around the streets in order to sell them? Is that a great hardship?

Mr. BENNET. There is no reason why Oregon should send any apples to New York anyway, when New York produces six times as many apples in value as the State of Oregon does. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. And better in flavor, too.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; they are better apples.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the New York greening as good an apple as the Albemarle pippin?

Mr. BENNET. All our apples are "pippins."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the gentleman from New York ever eaten any of the Oregon apples?

Mr. BENNET. Not consciously. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from New York will save his money he can afford to buy some. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I regret I can not join in the applause which greeted the gentleman's praise of the apples of New York. They may be better than the Oregon apples, but not better than the apples of Massachusetts. He will have to include the apples of Massachusetts before he can get me to accept his statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did the gentleman know before that Massachusetts had ever raised apples?

Mr. BENNET. I have heard of it raising other things than apples.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from New York forgets Ohio. Ohio is the place of Johnny Appleseed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I know about Ohio. In former times some Ohio people came to New York and got some apples, and got a man by the name of Johnny Something, and went back and planted some New York apples in the West and called them "Johnny Appleseed." That is the way they got them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? Does the gentleman know that the State of Iowa raises the prize apples of the country?

Mr. BENNET. Everybody will deny that. It can not be proved. [Laughter.] But I did not rise to talk about prize apples or anything of that sort. I rose to talk about volume, and I congratulate the committee that they had the breadth of mind and the clearness of vision to start this proceeding, which is of such great value to consuming States such as Massachusetts and South Carolina and the other Atlantic Coast States, where we are really embarrassed by the failure of our methods of distribution.

The gentlemen, I think, treated this item when it was before the House more or less facetiously; but if they lived in a city like New York, where it is so difficult to obtain the best of food at the lowest prices under any administration, they would realize what a debt of gratitude they ought to bear to the committee that has really made an effort to start something looking toward the better distribution of the small fruits.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Then the gentleman supported the prior paragraph on the theory that it would reduce the cost of fruit and vegetables?

Mr. MANN. No; that it would make a proper distribution of green things. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I did not support it because the gentleman from Illinois spoke for it. I supported it because it was right, and I presume the gentleman from Illinois supported it for the same reason.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, for the enlightenment of the gentleman from New York, I should like to call his attention to a matter that appears on page 6142 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the excellent remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY]. Evidently the gentleman from New York has not been reading this important document, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with his usual care. The gentleman from Arkansas quotes a statement from Mr. Yoakum relative to this matter:

The apple growers of Oregon based their marketing campaign upon special care and skill in packing. They succeeded so well that Oregon apples are found in the hotels and on the trains in the very heart of some of the finest apple lands in the country, in central New York, in Michigan, in the Ozark country of Arkansas and Missouri. In this instance marketing became a science as exact and as exacting as the business of selling steel billets or farm machinery or any other product of a carefully and accurately organized industry.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has spoken very eloquently of the apples that grow in that State, and I have no criticism to make of his remarks or of the apples of his State, except concerning the worms in them. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All the worms are provided for in previous paragraphs, are they not? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. They have been partially provided for. We will take care of the rest of them subsequently.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But you take care of the Oregon packing in this paragraph. New York has not gotten on to that yet.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield to me to allow me to read the comparative statistics of the two States?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, it is not the quantity of apples of which we boast; it is their quality. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BENNET. What there are of the apples in Oregon are good apples. I remember now that the gentleman from Oregon brought here several crates at one time and treated us all to them; and they were good apples.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nothing like them in the world.

Mr. BENNET. Some people said that was fortunate, but I do not think so. They are very good apples.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed for debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Let us read the next paragraph.

Mr. FESS. I am afraid the apple interest will be gone.

Mr. MANN. Not if the gentleman brings a barrel of them here—the interest will not be gone. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies of cooperation among farmers in the United States in matters of rural credits and of other forms of cooperation in rural communities; to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information growing out of these studies, in order to provide a basis for a broader utilization of results secured by the research, experimental, and demonstration work of the Department of Agriculture, agricultural colleges, and State experiment stations, $32,860.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Make it 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I hope somebody will give us some information about the status of the rural-credit proposition. I do not desire any time myself.

Mr. LEVER. Make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, in reading this paragraph my eye was caught by the words "rural credits," and I wondered just what the Secretary of Agriculture was going to do in the line of cooperation among the farmers of the United States in the matter of rural credits. Various farm publications, farm agitators, and politicians have been undertaking to teach the farmers that if they can only have rural credits they will not need to plant crops, but that crops will grow without planting, and not only will they grow without planting, but they can sell them without marketing them. They will not need any of this appropriation of $136,000 in the preceding paragraph. That will be absolutely unnecessary if they have rural credits. I should like to get some information from the chairman of the commitee as to whether the Department of Agriculture will enlighten the farmers as to just what rural credits mean, what they expect to get, and what it is all about, anyway. The Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I am a member, has reported a farm-mortage rural-credit bill, but in the present state of the agitation that bill or any bill that is any where near rational will prove a tremendous disappointment to such farmers as put their trust in the agitators.

Mr. LEVER. As I understand it, the Department of Agriculture under this item for the past two or three years has been making a very careful investigation of the farm-credit facilities of this country. As a member of the joint committee of the two Houses that prepared the rural-credits bill, I remember that the committee had before it Dr. Thompson of this office. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] knows him.

Mr. PLATT. He is a very able man.

Mr. LEVER. I regard him as a very able man.

Mr. PLATT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LEVER. I think the suggestions and facts and statistics furnished by that gentleman to the Joint Committee on Rural Credits—I have no doubt he also furnished the same to the Committee on Banking and Currency—would justify this appropriation if nothing else had been done under it. The department has recently issued a bulletin warning farmers against going into claptrap rural-credit associations which have begun to spring up here and there in different parts of the country. Very likely that bulletin in its results will be very beneficial and effective.

Mr. PLATT. Will the department probably inform the farmers that they do not need to have the United States Government loan them money at 1 per cent in order to live and furnish food for the rest of us?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has as good an idea of Dr. Thompson's views on that subject as I have, and also the views of the Secretary of Agriculture on the same subject.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman have any idea how much of this appropriation will be used for this purpose?

Mr. LEVER. About $24,270 for rural credits, rural insurance, and rural communication.

Mr. PLATT. That is a pretty large amount, and it ought to accomplish something.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman whether any other department of the Government is making inquiry into rural credits?

Mr. LEVER. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reading this and the next paragraph will convince most anyone that there may be something in the suggestion of a duplication of work. For instance, in the paragraph passed a moment ago for the investigation and demonstration of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for ginning, grading, stapling, baling, and so forth, $48,000, it would appear that we have already passed special legislation with respect to that. May not that be a duplication?

Mr. LEVER. There is no duplication. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the line of demarkation between many of these items is very narrow. The contact is very close, but there is no real duplication of the work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to rise again when the paragraph is read, so I will speak of it now. At the top of page 73 there is an item:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the several States in the employment of agents to acquire and diffuse useful information connected with the distribution and marketing of farm products through investigational, demonstrational, or extension methods, $20,000.

We have just appropriated $285,000 in one item and $136,600 in another item, and it would appear as if this $20,000 was for the same kind of work.

Mr. LEVER. Not at all; the item the gentleman has just called attention to proposes to employ agents, half of whose salaries shall be paid by the Federal Government and half by the State government in States in which market systems have been organized. It is for cooperative work and for the purpose of correlating the market activities of the Federal Government with the existing market activities of the State government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the prior appropriations will not be used for cooperative work?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely not.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the department send salesmen out to market the products of the farmer?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. What do they do?

Mr. LEVER. I am afraid the gentleman is making me repeat a story that I have told once or twice this morning.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the gentleman always speaks lucidly and gives much information.

Mr. LEVER. The purpose of the Bureau of Markets, including all the various items, is to develop the most economical system of marketing farm products in this country with the view of disseminating the information when collected.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman had a big farm and raised a lot of corn he would go to the Department of Agriculture and get the information of where he could find a buyer?

Mr. LEVER. No; the department has not advanced to that point yet.

Mr. MADDEN. To what point have they advanced?

Mr. LEVER. The information of the character suggested by the gentleman is furnished under the item above, on page 72, lines 3 to 6, with reference to perishable products.

Mr. MADDEN. Hay would not be a perishable product, and neither would corn.

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Hogs would be. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. No; these appropriations are with respect to vegetables and fruits.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the several States in the employment of agents to acquire and diffuse useful information connected with the distribution and marketing of farm products through investigational, demonstrational, or extension methods, $20,000.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina why, if he uses the alleged words "investigational" and "demonstrational," he does not also use "extensional"? I do not admit for a moment that there is such a word as "investigational" or "demonstrational," but, if they are words, then "extensional" is a word, and we ought to have harmony.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will offer an amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. MADDEN. I wonder whether the gentleman from New York raised the question of the proper way of spelling these words for the purpose of creating harmony or discord?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "investigational," "demonstrational," and insert in lieu thereof the words——

Mr. LEVER. The better way would be for the gentleman to move to strike out the word "extension" and insert in lieu thereof the word "extensional." [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman sure that his amendment would not strike out a few experts?

Mr. BENNET. If it did, I should not shed any tears.

Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in lines 4 and 5, by striking out the words "investigational" and "demonstrational" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Investigation, demonstration, or by extension methods."

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is worse yet. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 73, strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "investigational demonstrational, or extension methods" and insert in lieu thereof "investigation, demonstration, or by extension methods."

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the word "by," so that it will read "or extension methods."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Carolina has brought his dictionary down to date, while the gentleman from New York has not.

Mr. BENNET. The trouble is that there are not any such words.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not in the gentleman's dictionary.

Mr. LEVER. But the Committee on Agriculture can make words.

Mr. BENNET. Nor in the House dictionary.

Mr. MANN. That is a little old.

Mr. BENNET. If the House is satisfied with the language, the gentleman from New York is; but it does seem as if in a body such as this, which is assumed to be fairly up to date in education, we ought not to coin words.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question that the gentleman ought to speak to the amendment, and I would like also to have him make the distinction between "investigational" and "extensional."

Mr. FESS. I am speaking to the amendment. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he prefers the use of the word "investigational" to the word "investigation"?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly to the gentleman that I do not think I have any objection to that. I think the words mean the same, even though they do not look the same.

Mr. MANN. Why not say "investigation methods"?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has called my attention to the fact that you would be qualifying a noun with a noun.

Mr. FESS. A noun very often is used with an adjective meaning. We say "nomination convention." That is quite proper. Convention is a noun and nomination is made an adjective, but I should think the chairman of the committee would prefer the word "investigation" to the word "investigational."

Mr. LEVER. I would say very frankly to my friend from Ohio that the Committee on Agriculture believes it has among its membership one of the greatest grammarians in this body. I refer to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], and this passed his critical eye and I would not like to take any backwater on the proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Then I will ask the gentleman from Oregon whether he indorses the word "investigational"?

Mr. HAWLEY. In the relation to which those three words stand to the word "method" I think the three adjectives are properly used.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman prefers the use of the phrase "investigational method" to "investigation method"?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I do.

Mr. PLATT. Should we not also say "extensional"?

Mr. FESS. Then I will say that I regret that the committee chooses to use that sort of language and embody it into the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET) there were—ayes 18, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I understood debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto was closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I requested time on this amendment, and only one person has been recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Is the time exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can explain the situation. Some other gentleman took the time that the Chair expected the gentleman from Iowa to use.

Mr. MANN. The only gentlemen who spoke were the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] spoke.

Mr. MADDEN. But he used only about a minute.

Mr. LEVER. I reserved five minutes for myself, which I have not used.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oregon did not have the floor on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. He occupied it for a long time.

Mr. MANN. He answered a question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and he did not have the floor.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I have five minutes in my own right, and I will be very glad to have the gentleman from Iowa use two or three minutes of that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is not only new and exceptional language, but it is a new and probably exceptional provision. It is barely possible that it is a meritorious provision; I do not know, but I have been led to believe that a good many of these new provisions are inserted just to provide for new jobs. I was told the other day, and reliably informed, that seven persons from the Department of Agriculture hired two automobiles at Government expense and drove 20 miles to attend a meeting advertised by the Department of Agriculture to be held among the farmers for the purpose of gathering and disseminating information, and that not a farmer attended the meeting, not a woman attended, not a child attended, and those seven persons there at Government expense got up one after the other and delivered their addresses. If that is a sample of the way we are spending the money of the people of the United States, money that we do not have in the Treasury, it is high time to call a halt on some of these new propositions.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman mind telling where this was and when it was?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know when it was. They drove out from the city of Washington, and the gentleman can find the information.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can not find it with that kind of information.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does the gentleman believe that is true?

Mr. GOOD. I said the city of Washington. I want to correct that statement. It was from the city of New Orleans. Yes; I believe it to be true.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Why does not the gentleman have a little more information that he can give us?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the gentleman can get the information. The trouble is that gentlemen on that side do not want the information; you simply want the jobs, and you want to open an almost empty Treasury to pay for them; you want to tax the people of the United States for joy rides. That is what I am opposed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman tell us who told him?

Mr. GOOD. Of course I will not tell the gentleman. I will not betray a confidence in that way, but the gentleman can get all the information, and he will find it is correct. The gentleman is on the committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What was the date?

Mr. GOOD. I did not get the date. I got the number of persons, the number of automobiles, and the number of miles traveled, and the fact that not a soul attended but the paid experts of the department, and it then occurred to me I had gone into the matter as far as I ought to on a first inquiry. I will try again if you insist.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What year was this, anyhow?

Mr. GOOD. Just recently. I am referring to the present administration of the Agricultural Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses in connection with the lines of investigation, experiment, and demonstration conducted in the Office of Markets and Rural Organization, $19,500.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 16 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 16 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is recognized.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Oregon, who seems to be the expert on style in the Committee on Agriculture, if, in line with the new words adopted in the preceding section, the word "administrative," in line 6, ought not to be changed to "administrational"? He seems to have adopted that form of terminology. And if not, why not?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the greatest regard for the gentleman from New York, and I will ask him if he thinks it ought to be changed?

Mr. BENNET. It is not a question of the gentleman's regard for me, but the question is as to the gentleman's regard for English grammar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to get the gentleman's attention——

Mr. BENNET. If we have gone into the use of the Roumanian language—I recognize the source—and if we are going to write our bills now in Roumanian under this administration, I say, Yes; let us write them in Roumanian throughout. Let us drop the "ive" at the end of the words and put in the Roumanian "al." I do not know why we are so bound by foreign customs during this administration. I think the gentleman, as a Member of the American Congress, should have some pride in standing by the American language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not so familiar with the Roumanian language as the gentleman is, my parentage being all American.

Mr. BENNET. I have only two parents, and both of them were born in America. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. This word has been used in this sense in this bill for ever so long, and as it has such a well-defined meaning, I can see no reason why it should be changed.

Mr. BENNET. The only reason is to be consistent, and I must say that I sympathize with the gentleman's stand in relation to this particular word, and I think he was wrong in the preceding paragraph. But the House has voted, by 44 to 18, that there is such a word as "demonstrational," and the Democratic Party has made so few contributions to anything worth while in this Congress that I am rather glad they have done that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was wondering, when I saw the language of this paragraph, why it was that the items of expense were not specifically appropriated for, so that we might know how many men were to be employed in this administrative work and what the compensation was to be. It seems to me we ought to be able to ascertain definitely how many men it will take to do this administrative work and to incur this administrative expense in this administrative division of the executive branch of the Government known as the Agricultural Department, and this does not give us any information at all. Why is it that we continue to appropriate in lump sums and keep the information from the Congress and the people as to what salaries are paid and to whom they are paid and why they are paid?

Mr. LEVER. This item is not different from other items in every bureau in this bill. Nor is it different from the policy that has been pursued in this bill ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MADDEN. But the fact that that has been the policy and the item is similar to this is no good reason it should continue.

Mr. LEVER. We can give the gentleman the information.

Mr. MADDEN. Why is it not printed in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. It is printed in the Book of Estimates. All lump sums are carried in the same way.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it not give the department wider latitude in the employment of men than it ought to give them, instead of making specific appropriation for the employment?

Mr. LEVER. Not any wider than any lump sum.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does not the great Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads make appropriations in this form?

Mr. MADDEN. No. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads says that there shall be 10,000 men of class 1, 10,000 men of class 2, and 10,000 men of class 3, at $800 and $900 and $1,000 each, in certain branches of the service.

Mr. HAWLEY. We do that in all the statutory rolls, but the scientists in the department we never have put on the statutory roll.

Mr. MADDEN. This is a clerical roll, though. It must be necessarily. It is administrative. It can not be scientific.

Mr. HAWLEY. All the clerks employed, except for temporary purposes in this particular bureau, are set forth in the statutory roll at the beginning of the appropriation for the bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. I can understand that where the department requires scientists to do the work of a given branch of the service that it can not very well put them on the statutory roll, but here is the administrative branch of a given bureau, where all the work must of necessity be clerical, and it is easy to set out the number.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will yield, I will say to him that there are only two salaries out of this entire sum—that of the assistant chief of the office, at $3,500, and one scientific assistant, at $1,800, traveling expenses $5,150, and miscellaneous expenses, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. What do the miscellaneous expenses consist of, and why have they such large traveling expenses?

Mr. LEVER. This is the administrative item for this entire bureau, and necessarily men selected by the chief of this bureau must spend a good deal of time in the field.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman thinks this is the best way to make the appropriation for this branch of the service?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I will say to the gentleman very frankly, it is the only way that we could work out that was at all satisfactory.

Mr. MADDEN. The committee is satisfied that they have all the information as to what the expenses are for, and that they are along economical lines.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. We have a check on them, and they are set out in detail here.

Mr. MADDEN. They do not give information as to how they are going to spend the funds, but how they have been expended?

Mr. LEVER. No. They are set out in the estimates as to how they are going to be expended.

Mr. HAWLEY. And in the program of work they are set out.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; they are set out in the program of work.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that so many gentlemen on the other side of the House wait for an opportunity to get into the RECORD to fight this Agricultural appropriation bill.

This is the bill of all bills that go through this House that benefits the agricultural class of our people, and I am surprised at some gentlemen on that side getting up here and fighting with all their might and main this bill, which means so much to the farmers of this country.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] seems to take delight in fighting, with all the earnestness that he has, these measures that benefit the farmers of the West, the farmers of the East, the farmers of the North, and the farmers of the South. Why, the gentleman becomes very vehement in his fight here against provisions in this bill, and he says it is trying to give somebody a job.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we must have men—experts—men qualified to serve this great agricultural mass. We are living in a progressive age. We are trying to carry the best information that we can obtain by all the power of this Government; we are trying to lay it at the door of the farmers of the West, of the East, of the North, and of the South; and the gentleman from Iowa rises up here and fights appropriations that benefit these people, that carry information to them. He says they want a few jobs.

The gentleman belongs to a party that was in power 16 years in every branch of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] It was so extravagant during all that time that Mr. Aldrich, Republican leader of the Senate, said it squandered $300,000,000 a year. It was so extravagant and wasteful of the public funds that Mr. Taft, a Republican President, said they had squandered $100,000,000, and the gentleman was unable to point out where we were misappropriating as much as $10,000 for all the farmers of the United States. [Applause.]

The gentleman talks here and seriously undertakes to entertain this House with a hearsay statement that floated about down in Louisiana, where seven men went out to lecture to the farmers and the farmers were not there and they lectured each other. [Laughter.] I do not believe a word of it. The gentleman talks that sort of stuff in this House in throwing himself against an appropriation that benefits the farmers of his own State and the country. If the gentleman keeps up that sort of fight, I want to make this prediction to him: In this fall campaign he will go to many places to speak where there will not be anybody there but him. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEFLIN. I was speaking of the other gentleman from Iowa, although you have made yourself liable, too. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has three minutes. That is the amount of time left.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, that will be enough. In response to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] I desire to say that if I remember correctly, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic Party declared in its platform in favor of a return to "that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic Government, and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people." It denounced the Republican Party as having been guilty of "a profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil."

I have before me a table giving the appropriations for two years that were denounced by the Democratic Party. According to the table, appropriations made by a Republican Congress were, for 1911, $978,521,087.68; for 1912, $995,799,462.72; total for the two years, $1,974,320,550.60. Appropriations made by the present Democratic Congress are reported to be, for the fiscal year 1914, $1,057,605,694.40; for 1915, $1,089,408,777.26; total for the two years, $2,147,014,471.66, which is $172,693,921.26 in excess of appropriations for 1911 and 1912, which they denounced as waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Republican administration turned over to you $149,000,000 in cash available for the payment of running expenses, you had to add another burden upon the people of $100,000,000 under the misnamed "war tax." You undertook to excuse the crime by charging it up to a war 3,000 miles away. You boasted of your pension legislation. The table shows that appropriations made for Army, Navy, and fortifications for the fiscal year 1915 were $11,228,690.07 in excess of appropriations for the fiscal year 1914; but appropriations for pensions is less by $11,150,000, besides two battleships, the Idaho and Mississippi, were sold and $4,635,000 out of the proceeds of the sale were turned into the Federal Treasury, and adding that amount to the decrease of appropriations for pensions, instead of having an increase of appropriations because of war, we have a decrease of $4,556,309.93.

Thus another plank of the Democratic Party was smashed. The punishment inflicted, though only $172,000,000 in two long years, evidently was sufficient to set the people thinking, and, as the gentleman knows, the Democratic majority in the House was materially reduced. Evidently the breach of promise and the humiliation added to the unnecessary burden was more than many loyal supporters could endure, and it is possible that if the Democratic Party, now in control, continues to add to the burden already imposed, Mr. Voter may be curious to know why this "waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the United States cotton-futures act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved August 18, 1914 (Public, No. 174, 63d Cong.), entitled "An act to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes," including all expenses necessary for the purchase of equipment and supplies; for travel; for the employment of persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and for all other expenses, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, that may be necessary in executing the provisions of this act, $120,750.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he make the point of order.

Mr. BENNET. Then I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not subject to a point of order. It is authorized by existing law, the cotton-futures act of 1914. This is to carry it into effect.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, there is an act known as the cotton-futures act, which was passed on the date set out in the paragraph; but by a decision of the Federal court, contained in volume 226 of the Federal Reporter, page 135, in the case of Hubbard and others against Lowe, internal-revenue collector, that act was declared to be unconstitutional.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman know that an appeal has been taken in that case and is now pending in the Supreme Court, and that until that court acts, it is not declared unconstitutional?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from New York knows nothing of that sort, so far as the conclusion is concerned. Of course, the gentleman from Alabama, as a good lawyer, will admit that the decision of any court is the law until it is reversed. This is the existing law.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not until the higher court acts, if an appeal is taken; but until the appeal is taken the judgment of the lower court is the law. Until a decision is rendered on the appeal you could not stop the business; not until the higher court acts.

Mr. BENNET. That would be a very comforting rule if it were true. I have unfortunately once or twice in my life represented defendants against whom judgments were obtained and had to appeal from those judgments. Now, under the logic of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the moment I appealed from those decisions it set aside the judgment; but I have never been able to convince any court that it did.

Mr. MANN. That is just exactly what it does.

Mr. BENNET. Here is what Judge Hough said in the first line of his decision, and I will say to the Chairman that it is very applicable:

That an unconstitutional statute is not a law at all is a proposition no longer open to discussion.

And then he proceeds, through several pages of opinion, to demonstrate that the law is unconstitutional, and he so held it. The headnote of the decision, or that portion of it which is in point, is this:

The cotton-futures act, having originated in the Senate, contrary to the constitutional requirement that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, is not and never was a law.

And of course, following that out logically, if it never was a law then there is no authority for the appropriation reported by the Committee on Agriculture, and therefore the provision is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman maintain, as a matter of law, that that decision of the circuit court, or whatever court it was——

Mr. BENNET. The district court.

Mr. HOWARD. That that decision of the district court is the law of the land, and that this whole act of Congress has been repealed by that decision? And does the gentleman mean to state, as a matter of law, that the appeal to the United States Supreme Court does not suspend that decision until it is finally adjudicated in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BENNET. Why, Mr. Chairman, every decision of every court is the law until it is reversed.

Mr. HOWARD. Suppose the Supreme Court of the United States were to decide within the next five minutes that that particular decision of the district court was wrong and should reverse it, what would be the attitude of the gentleman then? What would be the law?

Mr. BENNET. My attitude would be that the decision of the Supreme Court was final.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman has taken a position that is unheard of, as to the effect of an appeal. I would not entertain it from a justice of the peace. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. Well, I suppose the gentleman is entitled to cite the courts with which he is most familiar. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I should say from the appearance of the gentleman on that question that he has never practiced anywhere but in a justice court.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will rise, I will let the House pass on our comparative appearance. [Laughter.] But, of course, all persiflage aside——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York inform the Chair against whom that proceeding was brought?

Mr. BENNET. Against the collector of internal revenue in one of the New York districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman inform the Chair whether the collector has continued to collect this tax?

Mr. BENNET. The moment that the court handed down the decision not only this collector, but each internal-revenue collector in the United States, being a law-abiding citizen, ceased to operate under this law. The tax is not being collected. Nothing is being done under the law, because there is no law. There can not be any question about that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that the cotton exchange has gone on operating under this law, just as it did before. The officers of the law may not have collected the tax pending the appeal, but they are ready to collect it when the higher court, as it will, in my judgment, hold that the law is constitutional. The law will be amended. The bill that we passed, in fact, originated in the House.

Mr. BENNET. All that was disposed of by Judge Hough. He refers to Senate bill 110, and takes up the argument just made by the gentleman from Alabama, overrules it, and decides that the law is unconstitutional. Now, the decision of a court is binding on this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The appropriation carried in this paragraph is to pay the expenses of the machinery incident to the enforcement of this law.

Mr. BENNET. Of this unconstitutional act.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now being held in abeyance. As some gentleman suggested a moment ago, suppose the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal—I understand it is agreed that this case is pending on appeal——

Mr. BENNET. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know.

Mr. BENNET. All I know is the record.

The CHAIRMAN. If the case is pending on appeal, and if the Supreme Court of the United States should hold the act constitutional, then the machinery for its enforcement must be kept up.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; not at all. Take a rather famous case. The income tax of 1894 was declared unconstitutional. There were people who suggested that because of the fact that that case was decided by one vote, and that the personnel of the court afterwards changed, new proceedings ought to have been begun. Would anybody have held for a moment that after that act had been declared unconstitutional Congress ought to have gone on and appropriated money for its enforcement on the theory that possibly at some time in the future the court might reverse itself, as, of course, even the Supreme Court has done? But I stand on the proposition, which ought not to be strange to a lawyer, that the law is as declared by the latest decision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it might be possible for the chairman to take the reasoning of the judge as his own reasoning and for the Chair to hold that the law was unconstitutional. Yet I think no chairman would ever take that responsibility where an act of Congress had not been finally declared unconstitutional by the courts. If the contention of my friend from New York [Mr. BENNET] be correct, it would put us in a very embarrassing position. The other day we had the migratory-bird law under consideration. A few days ago one court declared it unconstitutional. The next day another court declared it constitutional. The next day another court declared it unconstitutional. I may not be giving the exact time, but all that has occurred.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think that no court has held the bird law constitutional.

Mr. MANN. I submit that the gentleman is mistaken. The statement to me is that some courts have held it constitutional. There is no final decision, however. If my friend from New York is correct, we might appropriate to-day; to-morrow we could not. The decision of a nisi prius court, or even one of the appellate courts, is not a final decision at all. It has no weight; when the appeal is taken, that vacates the judgment, but it does not vacate the reasoning.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. The Government could go on and operate under this law while the appeal is pending?

Mr. MANN. Certainly it could. It might not get any court to convict. Another nisi prius court might accept the reasoning of this court and take the decision as a precedent, because the decision of one judge has great weight with other judges, but it is not binding on them at all; even a decision of the court of appeals is not binding outside of the circuit, and they frequently disagree.

Mr. RICKETTS. Does the gentleman mean to say that an appeal vacates the judgment or suspends it?

Mr. MANN. It practically vacates the judgment until the decision is confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has stated what is in the mind of the Chair. The Chair had in mind the migratory-bird law. The Chair's information is that one Federal court, and perhaps two, has held the bird law unconstitutional, while another court of equal jurisdiction has held that it is constitutional. We know that these things occur not only in the Federal courts but in the State courts. The present occupant of the Chair would not feel warranted in sustaining a point of order simply because some district court had held an act of Congress unconstitutional, especially if it is pending on an appeal to the court of final jurisdiction. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. ADAMSON. Would the Chair kindly allow me to ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have been wondering several times when these questions came up for consideration during the progress of this bill if anybody would seriously contend that as long as a law is on the statute books not declared unconstitutional, we would be justified in failing to appropriate for the purpose of enforcing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not; and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET) there were—70 ayes and 10 noes.

So the decision of the Chair was declared to be the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make an observation. The decision of the court in New York in regard to this cotton-futures act is an illustration of the need of technical care in legislation. Here is an act on which a good deal of thought was expended. The bill was really prepared, I believe, by the gentleman from South Carolina, or some gentleman on that side of the aisle. In the end in the work between the House and the Senate the Senate passed a bill really prepared by the House—a bill nominally authorized by the right to raise taxes, but not intended for that purpose. The court, at the instance of some bright lawyer—and I take my hat off to the lawyer, whoever he was—raised the question, and the court decided that the bill ought to have originated in the House of Representatives, because we have the power alone to originate revenue legislation. I am inclined to agree with the court. I think it would be a very good thing if the House not only agreed with the court but hereafter enforced the doctrine as to all of these propositions nominally to raise revenue, whether they are for that purpose or not.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. If I understood the gentleman from Illinois, he said that the fact that the Federal court in a New York district construed the act unconstitutional that the judgment of the court was vacated. I would like to put this proposition to the gentleman from Illinois. Suppose, connected with that suit, as I assume there was, a petition to the court to enjoin the marshal or officer from collecting the tax because the act itself was unconstitutional and therefore invalid and the court upheld that contention and issued the injunction. Now, if we appropriate for the enforcement of this act would we not have this condition existing, that in other districts where the suit was not brought the marshal or officer would enforce the act but the officer could not enforce it in the district of New York where he was enjoined, for if he did he would be violating the positive injunction of the court, and would be guilty of contempt?

Now, if the act was declared unconstitutional and suspended for that reason in that district, would it not be an anomalous condition to enforce it in other districts over the country?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks a practical question. I do not suppose any money will be expended for the enforcement of the act as long as the decision stands. I presume that if the Supreme Court shall pass on the act and declare it constitutional this money will be expended. Or perchance before this act becomes a law some provision now in the cotton-futures act which has been declared unconstitutional will possibly be included as a portion of this act and this appropriation amended accordingly.

A while ago we were discussing a purely technical question. A practical question is another thing. I do not suppose any of the money will be expended to enforce an act which the Department of Justice believes to be unconstitutional.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a couple of minutes in which to make a statement.

Mr. LEVER. Make is seven minutes, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me as a plain proposition that if the court in New York, of competent jurisdiction, declared this act to be unconstitutional, necessarily it must have suspended the operation of the act throughout the entire country. If it did not, we would have this anomalous condition, that in the Federal district of New York, where doubtless there was more work, more revenue to be collected under this act than in any other district in the United States, the officer would be powerless, and yet out in a district of Iowa or Oklahoma, if the contention be true, it would be the positive duty of the official to go on and execute the act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Does the gentleman know whether this was an injunction proceeding?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not, but I assume that it was. I do not know just what the nature of the proceedings was.

Mr. STERLING. The injunction would operate on no person except the defendant in the proceeding, would it?

Mr. CULLOP. The defendant would be the officer whose duty it was to execute the law.

Mr. STERLING. Then if it was an injunction suit he and he alone was enjoined from collecting the moneys under this law, and how would that have any effect on any other officer anywhere else in the country who was not a party to the writ?

Mr. CULLOP. Very good.

Mr. STERLING. I agree with the gentleman——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman not to interrupt further, as I have only five minutes and I want to conclude my statement. The courts of this country must have full faith and credit throughout the entire domain of the country, so that if the officer was enjoined from executing an act, performing the duties required by the act to be performed, then the act would be suspended, so far as he was concerned, though it be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and if that judgment was presented to a court of concurrent jurisdiction, that court would have to give due faith and credit to the decision of the other court. I do not say it would be binding—that is, the decision of one nisi prius court upon another—but I do say that it would be a duty that courts universally follow to give due faith and credit to the decisions of other courts of similar jurisdiction and upon the same matter.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CULLOP. Let me get through with this, and then I will yield. Suppose no appeal had been taken in this case? Suppose the Government had been content with that judgment, then I would ask, gentlemen, if that would not stand as a precedent for every officer in the United States to be controlled by when he was called upon to act under this law? It would strike down the act if the proceedings were to stop there, and it will not do for gentlemen to say that when an act is declared unconstitutional by a court of competent jurisdiction that that judgment is to be ignored in any legislative body, State or National. If so, it would set a precedent which, if the citizen followed, would bring down on him severe criticism. Here a great department is doing and proposes to do in this matter what, if a citizen should do, would be the occasion for severe rebuke. To proceed as proposed would be to enforce a law which one of the courts of the country having jurisdiction in the premises has declared invalid on the highest ground for invalidity—holding it to be unconstitutional. Such a course is not in keeping with the procedure of governments, and is calculated to encourage disrespect for the court and disobedience to its orders. Such a course, to my mind, is subject to severe criticism, and will invite just censure. It would be much better for it to obey the mandate until reversed, if ever, and if not, to acquiesce in its judgment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has stated the situation correctly, as I recall my study of constitutional law. This court has jurisdiction and in proper procedure pronounced the act unconstitutional. Under the clause of the Constitution, which says that full faith and credit shall be given, then all district courts of the United States certainly would take due notice of the decision, and no one would say that this tax would be collected in the district where the decision was made, and I do not think anyone would say it would be collected in any other district until this final decision is reached in the Supreme Court.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I have only half a minute. That being true, and with no assurance that the Supreme Court will reverse the decision of the lower court, I think the proper and wise method now would be to strike out this paragraph at this time. It can not do any harm. In case of a reversal, then it can be enforced later on when its legality is established. I therefore move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On that motion I would like to say this, that unless there is some reason not explained for the expenditure of this money, pending the decision of the Supreme Court, it seems an idle waste.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, let me say——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, if the gentleman will permit for a minute, why should we spend the money when nothing is to be done pending the action of the court?

Mr. LEVER. There are two reasons: First of all, the department is now enforcing the law; that is, it is gathering its testimony and its evidence, and it is settling disputes and keeping up the machinery for the enforcement of this law. But there is a second reason. Assuming they were not doing that, I am inclined to think that there will be a reenactment during this session of Congress of the cotton-futures act, which was declared unconstitutional by the New York court.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is all of this $120,750 being spent now?

Mr. LEVER. None of this is being spent now. It is an appropriation bill which becomes effective on the 1st of July.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. An appropriation was made last year?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. They are spending some money now in gathering the evidence.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What was it spent for after the court in New York decided that this act was unconstitutional? What would the men have to do?

Mr. LEVER. The department took the position, and I think correctly, that until the Supreme Court has passed upon the validity of this act that is was their duty to enforce it as if no adverse decision had been rendered—enforcing it in the way of notifying all parties concerned that "We will collect evidence against you, and if you violate the law, if this act is declared constitutional, we propose to prosecute." Now they are gathering that testimony, and also settling disputes which arise on the cotton exchanges.

Mr. HAUGEN. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I take it that this bureau does exactly as the other bureaus do. I will read for his information the statement of Mr. Nelson, who is in charge of the bird act. Here is his testimony:

> The law is being enforced the same as ever until the status of the law is decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Notwithstanding the fact that the act was declared unconstitutional, the gentleman from Illinois says that one court had upheld it. The hearings do not disclose this fact. To the contrary, the hearings disclosed the fact that all the courts, where the question of constitutionality was raised, have held it unconstitutional.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we paying experts and clerks, including the bureau chief, to go through the motions of pretending to enforce the law that has been declared unconstitutional, or are they actually doing something?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is what they are doing. They are spending the money to enforce inoperative law, not only in this instance but in the interest of the bird act, in the interest of the cotton-futures act, and in the interest of the butter act.

Mr. LEVER. I do not agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa entirely, although I could not hear distinctly.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was reading from the testimony of the witnesses before the committee.

Mr. LEVER. As I understood the gentleman to read it, the act is being enforced as if no adverse decision had been rendered; and that is true, absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object to money to keep the machinery greased; but it seems absurd, if there is nothing to do, to spend $120,000 upon experts merely to go through the motions of reporting in the morning——

Mr. LEVER. That is not the case at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman might have some explanation of it.

Mr. LEVER. I will try to explain it. The time upon it is limited.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Make it 5 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is any of my time remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute remaining.

Mr. LEVER. The department has taken the position that until the Supreme Court passes upon the validity of the cotton-futures act——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. LEVER. It is very hard for me to make a statement and be interrupted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not reaching the point that I want to get at. How many men are employed for this $120,000, and what are these men doing now?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman to explain in his own time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the department takes the position that until the Supreme Court passes upon this matter it is their duty to keep up the machinery and to enforce this law as if no adverse decision upon it had been rendered. Whether that is right or wrong legally, I do not know. The Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture I regard as a good lawyer, and he has advised with the department as to this course. Not only are we seeing that the law is not violated upon these various cotton-future exchanges—not various ones, because there are only two in this country, namely, New York and New Orleans—but we provide the machinery for passing upon the disputes as between buyer and seller as to quality of grade, and the like of that, when such disputes arise.

That is an expensive piece of machinery. In addition to that, under this item we are providing for furnishing standards of grain to exchanges that may desire them, and that is an expensive feature. But I might say, without any further elaboration of it, that the department is enforcing this law and carrying on its machinery as if no adverse decision had been rendered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will answer the question I put to him, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. LEVER. I will try to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many men are employed? And what have they been doing?

Mr. LEVER. Twenty-six men have been employed. If the gentleman wants me to read the list, I will put them in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell me whether the case is pending in the Supreme Court or not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A number of gentlemen here have asked me to ask this question: How many men are employed, and where, and what are they collecting?

Mr. LEVER. Here is the list of men employed:

In Washington: 1 cotton technologist, $3,000; 2 specialists in cotton classing, at $3,000 each; 1 inspector of cotton standards, $3,000; 1 specialist in cotton classing, $2,640; 1 specialist in cotton classing, $2,500; 1 specialist in cotton classing, $2,400; 1 assistant in cotton business methods, $2,250; 1 assistant in cotton classing, $2,100; 2 assistants in cotton business methods, at $2,100 each; 2 assistants in cotton business methods, at $1,800 each; 1 assistant in cotton marketing, $1,800; 2 assistants in cotton classing, at $1,800 each; 1 assistant in agricultural technology, $1,440; 6 assistants in cotton classing, at $1,400 each; 1 assistant in cotton marketing, $1,400.

Out of Washington: 1 specialist in cotton classing, $2,500; 1 assistant in cotton classing, $2,100.

That makes 26 in all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have those men collected anything under this act?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman, in answer to his question, that I glanced over the hearing on that subject last night, and my recollection is that $45,000 has been returned to the Treasury, about $24,000 fees from settling of disputes, more than $10,000 from the sale of standards, and more than $10,000 from the sale of cotton left over. This is not a tax, however; to say that would be misleading.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Fees, not penalties?

Mr. LEVER. I so understand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are these men appointed by the Secretary under Executive authority, or do they come up through the civil service?

Mr. LEVER. Every last one of them comes through the civil service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How are the salaries fixed?

Mr. LEVER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary fixes the salaries, evidently.

Mr. LEVER. That may be, but they are all under civil service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are they all experts in cotton?

Mr. LEVER. So far as I know, they are. Now I will answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say that the case was pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; but it has not been argued yet. It is in the same status as the bird law.

Mr. CULLOP. I understood the gentleman to say that $10,000 had been collected?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; and more than that. Not in fines but in settling disputes between buyer and seller.

Mr. CULLOP. That was done before the law was declared unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Iowa have five minutes. He is a member of the committee. I did not know that the gentleman wanted five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I was to have that much time.

Mr. LEVER. Let the gentleman ask unanimous consent. I shall not object.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this paragraph. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has stated the policy of the Government and has explained what its policy is. Its policy is to have Congress appropriate money. For what? To enforce a law that is inoperative and is declared unconstitutional by the courts.

We appropriated a large sum of money for the enforcement of the migratory-bird act, held unconstitutional. We are now about to appropriate money for the enforcement of another act which has been declared by the courts to be unconstitutional.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that when the case was appealed that vacated the judgment in the court below, and the law stands as it virtually did before the decision?

Mr. HAUGEN. I state what the status is. Fines, of course, can not be imposed, but it is a "hold-up." They come up to a man and say: "Here, you have been violating this law. You come in and settle, and we will compromise the case." A constituent of mine compromised a case the other day. It cost him $1,111. The courts have held that the rulings of the department are unconstitutional. Think of it, a department levying a fine and compromising on $1,111 contrary to law as interpreted by the courts.

Several thousand dollars have been paid by honorable men in my district who have been held up because a few pounds of butter were found to contain more than 16 per cent of moisture, notwithstanding the fact that courts have held that the rulings of the department under which fines were compromised are unconstitutional. We have had two rulings, in one department 16 per cent of moisture and in another department 82½ per cent of butter fat. Here you have a conflict of ruling. The courts have held the one being enforced unconstitutional, yet this department holds up these people, as I have said, in some instances more than $1,000, and in another case they have come down to $100. Now, is it fair to appropriate money, is it fair for this department to hold up these people and compel them to pay either $1,100 or $100? In my opinion it is unjust.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I believe the gentleman stated that the decisions of the courts have held the bird act unconstitutional.

Mr. HAUGEN. Absolutely, in every case where the question of constitutionality was raised.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to know whether there are officers who are drawing pay for the execution of the bird act.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How many?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not tell you offhand. As the gentleman knows, we are making appropriations in a lump sum. Congress knows nothing about the number of men to be employed, and nothing about the salaries to be paid.

Mr. CANNON. If the hearings give the information of the number of employees engaged in the enforcement of the bird act, will the gentleman please put that statement in the RECORD?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. And their salaries?

Mr. HAUGEN. As far as I can.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting that information.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Iowa may extend his remarks by inserting the information referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. The estimates furnished by the department contain the following information on that subject:

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose one district court declared the bird law unconstitutional, and another district court declared it to be constitutional.

Mr. HAUGEN. Suppose it did—but it did not do any such thing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose it did, then would it be unconstitutional and out of commission before the Supreme Court passed on it, finally?

Mr. HAUGEN. In my opinion it should be held the same as unconstitutional, and the law should not be enforced until it has been determined by the highest court.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is a difference of opinion on that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know there is a difference of opinion as to that, and what I object to is that any department of the Government should hold up any man in the country, I care not who he is.

Mr. CULLOP. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make no distinction between a man who calls another man into his office and extracts $100 from him under the pretense of enforcing a law that does not exist, according to the interpretation of the courts, and the one who forcibly takes his money from him unlawfully. The principle is the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 34, noes 64.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Page 73, line 23, after the words "one hundred and twenty thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars" insert: "Provided, That no portion of the appropriation herein made for the enforcement of such cotton-futures act shall be expended unless and until the constitutionality of such cotton-futures act shall have been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on that amendment be closed——

Mr. MANN. Debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto has been closed.

Mr. LEVER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 33, noes 53.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—27 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Demonstrations on reclamation projects: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to encourage and aid in the agricultural development of the Government reclamation projects; to assist, through demonstrations, advice, and in other ways, settlers on the projects; and for the employment of persons and means necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $40,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 76, after line 17, insert the following as a separate paragraph:

"International Dry Farming Congress, El Paso, Tex.: to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the International Dry Farming Congress, to be held at El Paso, Tex., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid, arid, and semiarid regions of the United States, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $20,000.

"That the President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] in whose district is El Paso. The dry-farming people have arranged to hold the next convention down at El Paso, Tex. The amendment I have offered is exactly in the form it was carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill last year when the convention was held at Denver. It was held the preceding year at Wichita, Kans., and carried $20,000; it was held the preceding year at Tulsa, Okla., and carried $20,000 there. The preceding year it was held in Canada, and that year it only carried $10,000.

This item is not regularly estimated for, and I assume that it is subject to a point of order. However, the same custom has prevailed and the bill has carried it every year, and I hope that no point of order will be made and that we may accord El Paso, in that dry section of the greatest State in the Union, the same courtesy that has been accorded to other places.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the other provision provided for an invitation to foreign Governments?

Mr. FERRIS. The bill of last year did. This amendment is in the same form as the provision of last year and is identical with it. The year preceding that did not have the invitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what Governments do you expect to issue invitations?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not say. I have attended but one dry-farming congress, and that was at Tulsa. We had there quite a number from Canada and some other foreign countries. Our Secretary of Agriculture sends delegates. I hope that the chairman of the committee will let the House do the courteous thing instead of having it put on in the Senate, as it will be.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What amount of the appropriation last year was spent for traveling expenses of delegates?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was there any spent for that purpose?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not state.

Mr. MANN. The amendment provides that no part of it shall be used for the expenses of delegates.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it is for the rent of halls and making arrangements to care for the delegates.

Mr. BORLAND. Was the same amount carried in last year's bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The same amount for the preceding three years.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the $20,000 to be used by the Government in participating in the congress?

Mr. FERRIS. Not participating.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the department send anybody there?

Mr. FERRIS. They do; and they lecture and make speeches, and so forth.

Mr. BORLAND. That expense is incurred out of this appropriation or the regular appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois advises me that nothing can be spent for delegates out of this appropriation.

Mr. BORLAND. Out of the regular appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know.

Mr. BORLAND. It must be spent out of this appropriation.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Missouri raises the question as to whether the expenses of the delegates will be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. The amendment provides that no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates. It is for a Government exhibit there and things of that kind.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; they bring very elaborate exhibits down from the Agricultural Department, and things of that kind.

Mr. MANN. How is it possible to spend $20,000?

Mr. FERRIS. I never have had to do with the expenses of it. I attended the Tulsa convention in my own State. I was invited there. They made very elaborate arrangements. The town was full of people for over a week. They had elaborate exhibits, and it resembled a county fair in a good big town. They rented halls, and even constructed exhibit halls, and they had exhibits of all the different branches of the Government. The mining people had a lot of stuff there.

Mr. MANN. If we are to have a dry-farming congress every year, as has been the case recently, and we are to appropriate money every year to put up a building, it strikes me that we had better have a permanent location and give it at that place. I can not see, and I am asking for information, how it is possible to spend $20,000.

Mr. FERRIS. I never have had to do with the expenditure of the money, but I believe if the gentleman were to attend one of the congresses he would not think that that is too much.

Mr. MANN. I suppose most of the exhibits there are sent by the States or associations and not by the General Government. I do not understand that this is for the purpose of making a Government exhibit.

Mr. FERRIS. The Indian schools send the different kinds of wheat and corn and kafir corn and cane and maize.

Mr. MANN. Is that paid for out of this appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. Again I am at sea, and I am not able to tell the gentleman. Does the chairman of the committee know?

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that somebody ought to have some information on the subject if they want to get the money.

Mr. LEVER. My impression is that the department would pay for the expense of transportation of the things to which the gentleman has referred, although I confess that I do not have that information right at hand. Some foreign nations make exhibits—for instance, Canada.

Mr. MANN. Who gets this money?

Mr. LEVER. It is spent through the department.

Mr. MANN. Of course, but do they turn it over to the secretary of the dry-farming congress?

Mr. LEVER. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MANN. I understood when we first made the appropriation that that was the way part of it was to be expended.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that must be true. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman better let this go over until morning until we can get some information about it.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman is willing to do that I would be very glad to have it go over.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the amendment which I have offered be passed over until to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as the matter stands now I am inclined to make the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. The point of order is pending. Let me see if I can not justify this amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But absolutely no information has been presented here which would warrant Congress in putting its hand into the Federal Treasury and giving $20,000 to some individuals to spend for their own use.

Mr. FERRIS. It will not be that way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman is going to explain it, I will not make the point of order now.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the purpose of having it go over.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of associations being built up on this character of propaganda, and they have to pay for it out of their own pockets; and it would be better for Congress and for the people if we had less of them. They seem to get to a point where with Government money they pass resolutions to ask the Government for more money, and the time will come when we will have to consider whether we ought not to stop them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the consideration of his amendment be passed over until the morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cooperative fire protection of forested watersheds of navigable streams: For cooperation with any State or group of States in the protection from fire of the forested watersheds of navigable streams under the provisions of section 2 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $100,000.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, on page 7800 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 25, 1916, under a leave to print, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who is my friend and for whose integrity and ability I have the greatest respect, printed certain articles from certain newspapers published in Chicago, together with resolutions purporting to have been adopted by the Chicago Federation of Labor, the statement being made therein that in that organization there are 250,000 working people in the city of Chicago. These resolutions reflect upon and question the motives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association and such Members of the Illinois delegation in Congress as attended the banquet given at the Shoreham Hotel last night by the Illinois Manufacturers' Association to the Members of this body from the State of Illinois.

I regret that any member of the Illinois delegation felt himself called upon, even though requested to do so by a great labor organization, to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD matter misrepresenting, as this does, the attitude of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, and reflecting indirectly upon such Members of Congress as accepted their invitation to be entertained at their dinner last night and to confer with them upon the subject of national preparedness.

It is impossible from the nature of the material printed in the RECORD to tell what portion of it comprises extracts from certain Chicago newspapers and what part of it consists merely of the resolutions passed by the Chicago Federation of Labor on that subject. The resolutions indicate, however, that the Chicago Federation of Labor charges that the Illinois Manufacturers' Association—the delegation which came here yesterday—was composed of "self-styled patriots"—I read from the resolutions—"who are nearly all reaping great financial benefits from the present war in Europe by furnishing ammunition and other war materials," and also "that these gentlemen would repeat very large profits if the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States should adopt their so-called 'military preparedness' plan."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that his colleague may be permitted to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. I read again from the resolution:

> Whereas the "patriots" whose ill-gotten profits enabled them to hire a special train and arrange for an elaborate dinner in Washington to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, represent numerically a very small portion of our community, and do not represent the sentiment of the "people back home" in Chicago—

And so forth.

I represent an agricultural district in this body, and not a manufacturing district. I have no connection with the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. I represent a district where there are a few workmen who belong to organized labor. But in this body for nearly 14 years I have actively supported and have voted for every single labor proposition submitted here. For years and years as the ranking Democrat, when Democrats were in the minority in the House of Representatives, on the Committee on Labor I fought the battle for the measures that organized labor stood for. And I think as a citizen of Illinois, not representing a manufacturing district, not representing a district in which organized labor exists to any considerable extent, I have the right to resent the insinuations contained in these resolutions.

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association is about 20 years old. It numbers between 2,000 and 3,000 members. It reaches out from the great city by the lake down through the State of Illinois. The requirement for membership in that organization, as I understand it, is that the person seeking membership be a manufacturer, no matter how small, and most of them are small manufacturers, and they pay an annual fee of $25. The organization exists, as I understand it, for the purpose of promoting the manufacturing industries of the great State of Illinois, for the purpose of looking after credits, better transportation, better and more efficient business methods, and for the purpose of developing and promoting the industries of Illinois. Not long ago representatives of this great organization visited the Republics of South America, promoting there the trade interests of the United States and calling attention to the goods we manufacture in the State of Illinois.

Since this organization was perfected and commenced its work Illinois has forged rapidly to the front as a manufacturing State, until to-day we are the third State in the Union in point of manufactures. Five hundred thousand skilled workmen are employed in the factories of Illinois, more than in any other State except New York and Pennsylvania, and we pay out to the wage earners in those factories in Illinois over $300,000,000 per year. No State has increased as fast as has Illinois the wages of the men who work in her factories. To-day in 20,000 manufacturing establishments distributed throughout the great State I have the honor to represent in part here we turn out every year over $2,000,000,000 worth of manufactured products. Farming lands in Illinois are worth to-day more per acre than in any other State in the Union, and Illinois is our greatest agricultural State. If by some great calamity the factories of Illinois could be eliminated in a day, a half million of our citizens would be out of employment and farming lands would instantly depreciate in value 50 per cent, our prosperity would disappear, and the result would be most disastrous.

Now, I want to give you, and to place in the RECORD here, the names and occupations of the officers of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, in order that you may see whether any of them are interested in any way in the manufacture of munitions. None of these officers are, so far as I know—and I know of no manufacturers in the State of Illinois belonging to this organization who are—in any way interested in the manufacture of munitions.

Samuel M. Hastings, of Chicago, the president of the association, is president of the Computing Scale Co. of America, a company which manufactures the computing scales which are used in stores throughout this country. William Butterworth is the first vice president. He is a member of the firm of Deere & Co., of Moline, which manufactures plows. Dorr E. Felt is the second vice president. He is a member of the Felt & Tarrant Manufacturing Co., manufacturing these comptometers or adding machines which are sold throughout this country and the world. Peter S. Theurer, the treasurer of the association, is connected with the Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co., of Chicago, evidently from the name of the organization not engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war. Charles Piez, of Chicago, one of the directors, is connected with the Link-Belt Co., engaged in the manufacture of leather belts for machinery. Alfred H. Mulliken, of Chicago, another director of the association, is connected with the manufacturing firm of Pettibone, Mulliken & Co. William Nelson Pelouze, of Chicago, another director, is connected with the Pelouze Manufacturing Co. G. R. Meyercord, of Chicago, another director, is at the head of the Meyercord Co., manufacturing not war materials but harmless decalcomanias—a delightful gentleman who I assure you will always keep as far away from munitions of war as possible. Paul Schulze, of Chicago, another director, is connected with the Schulze Baking Co., evidently not a munitions concern. Frederick W. Upham, of Chicago, another director, is connected with the Consumers' Co., the organization that supplies the citizens of Chicago with coal and ice. H. G. Herget, another director, lives at Pekin, and is connected with the Pekin Wagon Co., manufacturing wagons for farmers. R. D. Clarke, of Peoria, also a director, is a member of the firm of Clarke Bros. & Co. Mr. Clarke at the present time is also largely interested in the reclamation of swamp lands in Illinois and Arkansas. George D. Tower, of Mendota, another director, is connected with the J. D. Tower & Sons Co. J. Willis Gardner, of Quincy, another director, is connected with the Gardner Governor Co. Milton S. Florsheim, of Chicago, another director, is connected with the Florsheim Shoe Co., and E. Tyner, of Chicago, another director, is a member of the firm of Ed. V. Price & Co., which manufactures not munitions of war but clothing. Mr. John M. Glenn is the secretary of the association, and Mr. Colin C. H. Fyffe is the general counsel.

Not one of the officers and directors of this association is engaged in any business even remotely connected with the manufacture of munitions of war. As a citizen of Illinois interested in its great industries and in its material progress I have the right to protest most vigorously against the insinuations contained in these resolutions. I am unwilling to have the matter I have been discussing become a part of the permanent records of this Government without adding to the record the statement I am now making as to the object and purposes and the organization of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. I have not been requested by any member of this organization to make this statement. I have not consulted in this matter the officers of the organization or any member of it. The gentlemen who came to Washington did not come here on a special train. There were not 200 of them. I did not see as many as 20 of them at the banquet referred to in the matter so inserted in the RECORD. They came here to consult with and to advise Members in both branches of the National Congress from Illinois, and they had the right to do this. It became the duty of Representatives from that great State to confer with that committee and to receive their suggestions in this crisis in our national history. It is the duty of Representatives in Congress to invite suggestions from their constituents and to consider any petition or suggestions presented to them respectfully and seriously at all times. The success of representative government depends entirely upon whether or not the people are correctly and properly represented in both branches of the Congress. It becomes the duty of Representatives to consult their constituents, and it is the duty of good citizens to consult and advise and make suggestions to their Representatives. Representatives of organized labor came to Washington from all over the Union, and especially from Illinois. They have the right to come. It is the duty of Members of Congress to invite these visits and to attentively consider all communications received from them or from any organization interested in legislation.

I regret that on last evening a prior engagement with the Credit Men's Association of the National Capital, to attend a meeting held by them and to deliver an address on my tariff-commission bill, prevented me from attending the banquet given by the representatives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. I, however, as soon as I had fulfilled my prior promise to the credit men's organization repaired at once to the Shoreham Hotel and reached the dining room where the banquet was being given just at the close of the banquet, in time to participate in the proceedings which followed. I saw enough of the banquet, however, to indicate to me that it was the usual dinner served on similar occasions here in the Capital City, resembling in every particular dinners I have heretofore attended, given by labor organizations to prominent labor officers and representatives and others. The dinner was attended by both Senators from Illinois and by a large portion of the Illinois delegation in Congress. I do not think any Member of Congress from Illinois was absent on account of being intimidated by any of the matter printed on the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to which I am calling attention. There was no attempt to improperly influence any Member of Congress. Mr. Hastings, the president of the organization, in opening the discussion, stated that the Illinois Manufacturers' Association was not in any way interested in the manufacture of arms or munitions of war. Its members receive no profit or financial benefit from business of that character. They have no interest in preparedness legislation other than the interest loyal American citizens should have in the welfare and the safety of this Government and of our institutions. They were not here, he said, to advocate any particular method of defense nor what the units of defense should be on the sea and on the land. That matter should be left entirely, he said, to the experts of the United States Government.

The organization he represented, he stated, did not advocate extravagant or unnecessary methods of defense. They only advocated an adequate and a sufficient system of defense. They only advocated such preparedness as would enable this Government to protect the lives of its citizens wherever they might be, on the land or on the sea, and which would enable this Government to protect and defend the homes of its citizens and the institutions and ideals of this great Government. In other words, he advocated that kind of preparation which would enable this great Nation to keep its place in the sun.

To-day these citizens of Illinois, representing its great industries, are quietly returning to the cities from which they came to take up again the business of managing the great industries of Illinois. I desire to say as a Member of Congress from that State that I appreciate their visit here, and I believe this sentiment is shared by all the Representatives from Illinois who attended this conference. I sincerely hope conferences between Illinois Representatives in Congress and their constituents, whether their interest is in manufacturing, in agriculture, in mining, or in any of the great principles for which organized labor stands, will be frequent in the future and I am sure that Members of Congress from Illinois will at all times have in view the material progress of that State and its great interests. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read it just as it is—amendment No. 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1, part A. That this part, to be known as the United States cotton-futures act——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it will take about 15 minutes to read that provision.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I take it that gentlemen on that side will make a point of order against it. May I say that this is the cotton-futures act?

Mr. STAFFORD. The same that is embodied in the resolution introduced this week?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; exactly.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if a point of order is to be raised, enough has been read to demonstrate that it is not in order on this bill. I suggest that somebody make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. To accommodate the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment reads as follows:

"AMENDMENT No. 1.

"Part A.

"That this part, to be known as the United States cotton futures act, be and hereby is enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"'That this act shall be known by the short title of the "United States cotton futures act."

"'SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of this act, the term "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. That the word "person," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office, shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

"'SEC. 3. That upon each contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business, there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton involved in any such contract.

"'SEC. 4. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be in writing plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract, and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved, without giving the weight, each bale shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

"'SEC. 5. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof, if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

"'First. Conform to the requirements of section 4 of, and the rules and regulations made pursuant to, this act.

"'Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

"'Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section and no other grade or grades.

"'Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract, the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the actual commercial differences, determined as hereinafter provided.

"'Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of Good Ordinary, or cotton that is below the grade of Good Ordinary, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of Low Middling, or, if stained, cotton that is below the grade of Middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under or in settlement of such contract.

"'Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that on the fifth business day prior to delivery the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade.

"'Seventh. Provide that in case a dispute arises between the person making the tender and the person receiving the same as to the quality or the grade or the length of staple of any cotton tendered under the contract either party may refer the question to the Secretary of Agriculture for determination, and that such dispute shall be referred and determined, and the costs thereof fixed, assessed, collected, and paid in such manner and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"'The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 5."

"'The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section; and his findings upon any dispute referred to him under said seventh subdivision, made after the parties in interest have had an opportunity to be heard by him, or such officer, officers, agent, or agents of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true quality or grade or length of staple of the cotton involved.

"'SEC. 6. That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton or grades above or below the basis grade in the settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, established by the sale of spot cotton in the market where the future transaction involved occurs and is consummated if such market be a bona fide spot market; and in the event there be no bona fide spot market at or in the place in which such future transaction occurs, then, and in that case, the said differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton above or below the basis grade shall be determined by the average actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract in the spot markets of not less than five places designated for the purpose from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as such values were established by the sales of spot cotton in such designated five or more markets: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton established by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That whenever the value of one grade is to be determined from the sale or sales of spot cotton of another grade or grades such value shall be fixed in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed for the purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"'SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such and of which he shall give public notice.

"'SEC. 8. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton and of other grades of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same or different grades in the markets selected and designated by him from time to time for that purpose; and in that event differences in value of cotton of various grades involved in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations.

"'SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the "Official cotton standards of the United States," and to adopt, change, or replace the standard for any grade of cotton established under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 251), and acts supplementary thereto: Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That, subsequent to six months after the date section 3 of this act becomes effective, no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary.

"'SEC. 10. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof, if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

"'First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"'Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

"'Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description, specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

"'Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of "set-off" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

"'The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words "Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 10."

"'This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton.

"'This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

"'SEC. 11. That upon each order transmitted, or directed or authorized to be transmitted, by any person within the United States for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which the contract of sale is or is to be made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in any foreign country, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if the contract made in pursuance thereof comply either with the conditions specified in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5 or with all the conditions specified in section 10 of this act, except that the quantity of the cotton involved in the contract may be expressed therein in terms of kilograms instead of pounds: Provided further, That if at the time any such contract is entered into the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, shall have determined and, by declaration then unrevoked, in the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act, shall have publicly announced that its terms are the substantial equivalent, and sufficient to accomplish the purposes, of the conditions specified in the fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5 of this act, and the rules and regulations relating thereto, such contract shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to comply with the said conditions: And provided further, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any order mentioned in this section if, first, such order and the contract made in pursuance thereof be solely for hedging the purchase or sale of spot cotton shipped, or to be shipped, from the United States to any foreign country, or the shipment or consignment for sale of spot cotton from the United States to any foreign country, whether such order or contract be the one given or made originally, or be subsequently given or made for a purchase or sale to be substituted, for hedging the purchase, sale, or shipment or consignment for sale, of spot cotton, or be for the liquidation of any such transaction; and, second, a report of such transaction, including the shipment of the cotton involved, be made to the Secretary of the Treasury at such time or times and in such form as he may require.

"'This act shall not be construed to lay any tax on cotton exported from any State.

"'SEC. 11a. That upon each order received in the United States which shall have been, directly or indirectly, transmitted or directed or authorized to be transmitted by any person from a foreign country in which there is any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which a contract of sale is made pursuant thereto at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in the United States, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery which made be made at, on, or in the exchanges, boards of trade, and similar institutions and places of business in such foreign country or countries comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of contracts of sale in foreign countries. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized from time to time to ascertain and determine in what foreign countries there are any exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, and whether any such contracts of sale which may be made at, on, or in such exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of such contracts of sale. He shall publish such determinations in his rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"'SEC. 12. Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment No. 2, part B. That this part, to be known as the United States grain act, be and is hereby enacted, to read and be effective hereafter as follows: This act shall be known by the short title of 'the United States grain grade act.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand that it is the plan of the chairman of the committee to present these three proposals to the Committee on Rules to make them in order. In order to accommodate him, so that the three can be brought in under the rule, I make a point of order against it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin states that he makes the point of order on this particular amendment as a matter of accommodation; but may I ask the gentleman if it is his real purpose to make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether I would press the point of order but for the fact we have passed the usual hour of adjournment. It is after 5.30 o'clock. To require these respective amendments to be read would keep us in session until 6 o'clock. I believe gentlemen on that side are going to have a caucus tonight. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] desires to have these amendments printed in the RECORD for the convenience of Members of the House.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has no objection to this particular amendment, has he—this grain-grading amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I think I will make a point of order against the amendment if no one else does.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to some of these provisions, but there are other Members on this side who do object to them, and so I am accommodating the gentleman from South Carolina in making the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois will make the point of order on this?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] concedes the point of order, and on that concession the Chair will sustain it, not because of his own judgment, for he has not even read it. The gentleman from South Carolina concedes the point of order, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, when the rule comes in will not this amendment be printed in the RECORD again?

Mr. LEVER. I presume so.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is it necessary to print it twice?

Mr. LEVER. Members may wish to see the proposition that is to come before the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is only fair that they should have that opportunity.

Mr. LEVER. That was my idea—that Members would like to see it in the RECORD.

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, is it the purpose to couple all these three propositions together, to make them in order in one rule?

Mr. LEVER. It is.

Mr. BORLAND. Why could they not stand on their individual merits?

Mr. LEVER. Simply to save time; that is all.

Mr. MADDEN. We will have a right to vote on them separately?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not object to having them printed in the RECORD, does he?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair state the proposition again?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina is that the amendment which he proposes may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Merely for information?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

"AMENDMENT No. 2.

"Part B.

"That this part, to be known as the United States grain grades act, be and is hereby enacted, to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"'That this act shall be known by the short title of the "United States grain grades act."

"'SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish as soon as may be after the enactment hereof standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as in his judgment the usages of the trade may warrant and permit, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to alter or modify such standards whenever the necessities of the trade may require. In promulgating the standards, or any alteration or modification of such standards, the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same shall become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

"'SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

"'SEC. 4. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any such grain which is sold or offered for sale by grade unless the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act and the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States: Provided, That any such grain not sold or offered for sale by grade may be sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce by sample or by type, or under any name, description, or designation which is not false or misleading, and which name, description, or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard of the United States: Provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may be shipped to or through any place at which an inspector licensed under this act is located, subject, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to be inspected at the place to which shipped, or at the place through which shipped for inspection, and subject further to the right of appeal from such inspection, as provided in section 6 of this act: And provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by any of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may, upon compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, be shipped without inspection from a place at which there is no inspector licensed under this act to a place at which there is no such inspector, subject to the right of either party to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine and certify the true grade thereof. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe, or in any way refer to, any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

"'SEC. 5. That no person shall represent that any grain shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of a grade fixed in the official grain standards other than as shown by a certificate therefor issued in compliance with this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act, and which has been certified to conform to any grade fixed therefor in such official grain standards, or which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved, and to the inspector thereof if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade, or has been sold or offered for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings.

"'SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain which has been sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grade, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary and to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. In every such case the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge and assess, and cause to be collected, a reasonable fee in amount to be fixed by him, which fee shall be refunded if the appeal is sustained. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings.

"'SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. No person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain for interstate or foreign commerce which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the official grades of the United States, unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That in any State which has State grain inspection established by law, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in issuing licenses, give preference to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given, the Secretary shall determine that any inspector has been found to be incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly or by any other standard than is authorized under this act, or has issued any false certificate of inspection, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has knowingly violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder. Pending investigation the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"'SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture, shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"'SEC. 9. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of sections 4 or 7 of this act, or any inspector licensed under this act who shall knowingly or carelessly inspect or grade improperly any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or shall knowingly or carelessly give any false certificate of inspection or grade, or shall accept money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, and any person who shall improperly influence or attempt to improperly influence any such inspector in the performance of his duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 11. That the word "person" wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person.

"'SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rent and the employment of such persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere.'"

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 77, after line 2, insert the following:

"Amendment No. 3, part C. That this part, to be known as the United States warehouse act, be, and is hereby, enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, with the same purpose I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina concede the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Now, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment be printed in the RECORD for information. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, does this include all the amendments that are to be acted on tomorrow, to come up under the rule?

Mr. LEVER. It does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

"AMENDMENT NO. 3.

"Part C.

"That this part, to be known as the United States warehouse act, be, and is hereby, enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"'That this act shall be known by the short title of "United States warehouse act."

"'SEC. 2. That the term "warehouse" as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure in which any agricultural product is or may be stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or, if located within any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in which any agricultural product is or may be stored. The term "agricultural product" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to mean cotton, wool, grains, tobacco, and flaxseed, or any of them. As used in this act, "person" includes a corporation or partnership or two or more persons having a joint or common interest; "warehouseman" means a person lawfully engaged in the business of storing agricultural products; and "receipt" means a warehouse receipt.

"'SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate the storage, warehousing, classifying according to grade and otherwise, weighing, and certification of agricultural products; upon application to him by any person applying for license to conduct a warehouse under this act, to inspect such warehouse or cause it to be inspected; at any time, with or without application to him, to inspect or cause to be inspected all warehouses licensed under this act; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses are applied for or have been issued under this act are suitable for the proper storage of any agricultural product or products; to classify warehouses in accordance with their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, conditions, and other qualities, and as to the kinds of licenses issued or that may be issued for them pursuant to this act; and to prescribe, within the limitations of this act, the duties of the warehousemen conducting warehouses licensed under this act with respect to their care of and responsibility for agricultural products stored therein.

"'SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him, to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse or warehouses in accordance with this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder: Provided, That each such warehouse be found suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product or products for which a license is applied for, and that such warehouseman agree, as a condition to the granting of the license, to comply with and abide by all the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"'SEC. 5. That each license issued under sections 4 and 9 of this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding one year and shall specify the date upon which it is to terminate, and upon showing satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time be renewed or extended by a written instrument, which shall specify the date of its termination.

"'SEC. 6. That each warehouseman applying for a license to conduct a warehouse in accordance with this act shall, as a condition to the granting thereof, execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a good and sufficient bond other than personal security to the United States to secure the faithful performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, and of such additional obligations as a warehouseman as may be assumed by him under contracts with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse. Said bond shall be in such form and amount, shall have such surety or sureties, subject to service of process in suits on the bond within the State, District, or Territory in which the warehouse is located, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe to carry out the purposes of this act. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that a bond approved by him is, or for any cause has become, insufficient, he may require an additional bond or bonds to be given by the warehouseman concerned, conforming with the requirements of this section, and unless the same be given within the time fixed by a written demand therefor the license of such warehouseman may be suspended or revoked.

"'SEC. 7. That any person injured by the breach of any obligation to secure which a bond is given, under the provisions of sections 6 or 9, shall be entitled to sue on the bond in his own name in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages he may have sustained by such breach.

"'SEC. 8. That upon the filing with and approval by the Secretary of Agriculture of a bond, in compliance with this act, for the conduct of a warehouse, such warehouse shall be designated as bonded hereunder; but no warehouse shall be designated as bonded under this act, and no name or description conveying the impression that it is so bonded, shall be used, until a bond, such as provided for in section 6, has been filed with and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, nor unless the license issued under this act for the conduct of such warehouse remains unsuspended and unrevoked.

"'SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, issue a license to any person not a warehouseman to accept the custody of agricultural products and to store the same in a warehouse or warehouses owned, operated, or leased by any State, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder. Each person so licensed shall issue receipts for the agricultural products placed in his custody, and shall give bond, in accordance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder affecting warehousemen licensed under this act, and shall otherwise be subject to this act and such rules and regulations to the same extent as is provided for warehousemen licensed hereunder.

"'SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge, assess, and cause to be collected a reasonable fee for every examination or inspection of a warehouse under this act when such examination or inspection is made upon application of a warehouseman, and a fee not exceeding $2 per annum for each license or renewal thereof issued to a warehouseman under this act. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"'SEC. 11. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation of satisfactory proof of competency, issue to any person a license to classify any agricultural product or products, stored or to be stored in a warehouse licensed under this act, according to grade or otherwise and to certificate the grade or other class thereof, or to weigh the same and certificate the weight thereof, or both to classify and weigh the same and to certificate the grade or other class and the weight thereof, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder so far as the same relate to him.

"'SEC. 12. That any license issued to any person to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products under this act may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied, after opportunity afforded to the licensee concerned for a hearing, that such licensee has failed to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products correctly, or has violated any of the provisions of this act or of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, so far as the same may relate to him, or that he has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose whatsoever. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"'SEC. 13. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall receive for storage therein, so far as its capacity permits, any agricultural product of the kind customarily stored therein by him which may be tendered to him in a suitable condition for warehousing, in the usual manner in the ordinary and usual course of business, without making any discrimination between persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

"'SEC. 14. That any person who deposits agricultural products for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"'SEC. 15. That grain, flaxseed, or any other fungible agricultural product stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same under this act.

"'SEC. 16. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep the agricultural products therein of one depositor so far separate from agricultural products of other depositors, and from other agricultural products of the same depositor for which a separate receipts has been issued, as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the agricultural products deposited; but if authorized by agreement or by custom, a warehouseman may mingle fungible agricultural products with other agricultural products of the same kind and grade, and shall be severally liable to each depositor for the care and redelivery of his share of such mass, to the same extent and under the same circumstances as if the agricultural products had been kept separate, but he shall at no time while they are in his custody mix fungible agricultural products of different grades.

"'SEC. 17. That for all agricultural products stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in a warehouse licensed under this act original receipts shall be issued by the warehouseman conducting the same, but no receipts shall be issued except for agricultural products actually stored in the warehouse at the time of the issuance thereof.

"'SEC. 18. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition from the American Society of Equity, of Montana, praying for legislation relative to the public lands on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in that State. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD together with the signatures and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Whereas the cooperative farmers of Montana, known as the American Society of Equity, realizing that our country now stands in the midst of difficulties, deem it necessary that all farmers should be induced to raise all food possible; and

Whereas we find a vast area of fertile land on the Fort Peck Reservation practically uninhabited, on account of the present law requiring all homesteaders to pay from $2.50 to $7 per acre for said land, one-fifth to be paid at time of entry, the other four-fifths to be made in five annual payments, that said law is keeping actual settlers from this land: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we ask our Senators and Congressmen to introduce a law asking a reduction of one-half of the appraised value of said land and that 10 years' extension of time be granted on all payments after the first one has been made, that being one-fifth down at time of entry.

We also ask that said law be made to cover all payments that have been made, with the exception of commutements, so that the actual settler who is on the land at the present time may receive the same benefits from time of their entry as those who are yet to homestead.

Whereas we consider this one of the first steps toward preparedness, we ask our Senators and Congressmen to act as soon as possible, as the planting time is near at hand, and through this law not only our State but our Government would be greatly benefited, as this is one of our greatest wheat belts.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 793) modifying and amending the act providing for the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 401) thereon.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 833. A bill to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade (Rept. No. 402);

S. 1807. A bill to reinstate Elwin Carlton Taylor as a passed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy (Rept. No. 403); and

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the bridge bill just reported be taken up. The bridge is in a wretched condition. It has been condemned. There was a report of the Army engineer made upon it yesterday which shows that it is a very urgent matter. If there is to be debate upon it and objection to the bill, of course I would not press my request.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Virginia can no doubt call up the bill to-morrow morning.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the rural credits bill be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays Senate bill 2986 before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I urge the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to a matter that we were discussing when the bill was last laid aside, on page 32, the provision that "no such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application promise shortly to become, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged." I assure the Senator I will take that up again and try to reach some solution. The only improvement I can suggest is that the provision be amended so as to read as follows:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application state his intention to become within six months, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

That would be a statement of a fact subject to proof whether he did have such an intention or not. If he did not have such an intention and there were proof of it, such as would convince a jury, he could be prosecuted for having made a false statement in his application. Then I would add to that——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator repeat his proposed amendment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I suggested to make it read:

Or who does not in his application state his intention to become within six months—

And so forth.

The point is this: If a man promises to do something and does not do it, he can not be prosecuted for false pretenses. If he states that he has an intention to do something when he has not, then he has made such a statement that he could be prosecuted for making a false statement of fact in his application.

I think there should be added to that a provision at the top of page 34 that on a failure to comply with the terms of his application the mortgage may be foreclosed. I can not think of any way that would make that any more binding on the borrower than I have suggested, but any of these several ways which have been suggested I think would work out practically about the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that seems to be a rather shadowy basis to base the prosecution upon; that is, to undertake to prosecute a man upon the ground that he had declared an intention to do a thing when, in fact, he had no such intention. It is pretty difficult to get into the human mind to find exactly what a man intended. The Senator is familiar with the rule that no man can be prosecuted for perjury for having promised to do something which he did not do.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but the promise to do something and having a present intention to do it are very different things. An intention is a present state of mind that is susceptible of proof and definite determination. If a man states his present intention to do something and later you prove that he had no such intention, he can be prosecuted for perjury.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator may be right about that. The line of distinction is sometimes a very narrow one. But I suggest to the Senator that it would be always an exceedingly difficult thing to prove what the intention of the individual was. After all, the intention is something within his own mind. It is not manifested necessarily by any outward circumstance. I think the Senator will be putting something into the bill that would be very difficult at least of enforcement.

It seems to me the thing to do is to leave the matter to the officials who have to deal with it. If the Senator will make provision that the officials who are responsible for making the loan shall be satisfied that the individual intends to do this thing, then he will have afforded some definite test, but if he simply provides that it shall rest in the intention of the individual, that being a matter wholly in his own mind, I think you will have such a shadowy test that it will be very difficult of enforcement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will pardon me, as I said at the outset I think any one of these ways will work out practically, because the land bank will have to be satisfied it is so before it makes the loan. It must exercise its judgment as to whether to make the loan or not. I am quite sure it will be satisfactory in any one of the three ways suggested; but, as I said, it is immaterial to me. I yield now to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if the provision he has just stated is one that refers to ownership, becoming the owner to the land?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suggest to the Senator that I can not imagine any great difficulty there, because I do not suppose that the money will be advanced until there is a mortgage, and a mortgage can not be given until there is ownership of the land, and the record shall show it.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; this is a promise to cultivate the land mortgaged. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the reason why I asked whether it had reference to the title.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is a promise to cultivate. For the purpose of getting this matter definitely stated and leaving it open, so far as I am concerned, to future consideration, if anyone desires to have it changed, I will move, on line 16 of page 32, that the word "promise" be stricken out and that there be inserted in place thereof the words "state his intention."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the word "promise" in the committee amendment and in lieu insert the words "state his intention."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, without objection; and, without objection, the amendment as amended will be agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, at the top of page 34, at the beginning of line 2, I move to insert "fail to comply with the terms of his application, or." The result of that amendment is that if a man borrows and then does not comply with the terms of his application the mortgage may be foreclosed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after the word "shall," at the end of line 1, insert the words "fail to comply with the terms of his application, or."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to paragraph 9, on page 33, which names the maximum which may be loaned to any one borrower. Should not that paragraph also state the minimum? Was not that the intention? I think previously in the bill a minimum is named, and should not a minimum be named here? I suggest as an amendment after the numerals "$10,000," that the words be inserted "nor shall any loan be less than the sum of $200."

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the distinguished Senator is in error in stating that there is a minimum limit. That is merely at the outset in the forming of loan associations. The Senator will find it on page 22. After the loan association is once formed, there is no reason why a man should not borrow less than $200 if he desires; and I can not see any reason for having any minimum stated.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I had thought that in the matter of a farm loan under this system there ought to be a minimum, and that it would not, as a business proposition, be wise to permit of loans in a less sum than $200; and that there ought to be at least that minimum limit to the amount which he could borrow. If a man must have a less sum than $200, let it be from some other source and in some other manner than by mortgage of his land to a Federal land bank. Such would be my idea in regard to it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have not previously heard that view urged. It would occur to me that there might be a good many cases where men might want to borrow less than $200, and might properly borrow it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 33, section 12, after line 16, where the committee propose to insert:

Taxes or assessments not paid when due, and paid by the mortgagee, shall become a part of the mortgage debt and shall bear simple interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I think that in nearly every State if a mortgagee pays the taxes on the land mortgaged, he would be undoubtedly subrogated to the right of the taxing power and be allowed to collect, but in order to have that clear, and thinking that in some States it may be otherwise, the committee have thought it proper to annex this condition. I believe the rate should be 10 per cent per annum. I think in most States for delinquent taxes there is a rate of at least 10 per cent charged. I ask unanimous consent to change the rate of interest, in line 19, from "6" to "10" per cent before this committee amendment is voted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that amendment to the amendment will be made. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 34, line 2, after the word "condition," to insert "or covenant," and in line 3, after the word "shall," to insert "at the option of the mortgagee," so as to make the clause read:

Twelfth. Every borrower who shall be granted a loan under the provisions of this act shall enter into an agreement, in form and under conditions to be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board, that if the whole or any portion of his loan shall be expended for purposes other than those specified in his original application, or if the borrower shall be in default in respect to any condition or covenant of the mortgage, the whole of said loan shall, at the option of the mortgagee, become due and payable forthwith: Provided, That the borrower may use part of said loan to repay any sum borrowed to pay for his stock in the farm-loan association, and the land bank holding such mortgage may permit said loan to be used for some other purpose specified in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 12, after the word "borrower," to strike out "or of the farm-loan association," so as to make the clause read:

Funds transmitted to farm-loan associations by Federal land banks to be loaned to its members shall be in current funds, or farm-loan bonds, at the option of the borrower.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 22, on page 35, the last clause read being as follows:

(b) Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to page 35, line 22, clause (b), that being one of the powers given the Federal land bank. Under (b) the bank will have the power to acquire and dispose of "parcels of land mortgaged to it as security."

I wonder if it is the intention to give the general power to a farm-land bank to buy lands which have been mortgaged to it as security, to purchase them at any time and to dispose of them, or is it meant that it shall acquire those lands simply in the course of the satisfaction of the mortgage debt, which I think is covered by subdivision (c).

Mr. HOLLIS. The provision to which the distinguished Senator calls attention is meant to cover transactions arising in States where the title passed to the mortgagee, where there is a default, in a case where there is a conditional sale. Therefore the mortgagee would have the right under his present title, if he acquired under foreclosure, to take peaceable possession and to hold the land until the mortgagor complied with the conditions of the mortgage. It is merely meant to cover a case of that kind, where the mortgagee would take temporary possession and proceed to foreclose finally if it became necessary to do so.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it seems to me there should be some language limiting it, because the terms are very general, and on the face of the statement it would give power to acquire any lands mortgaged to a land bank as security and to dispose of them.

Mr. HOLLIS. I agree with the Senator in the thought that this matter should be covered, and I am willing to have an amendment added at the end of the line. Perhaps the expression "under default" would cover it, or the words "where default has occurred"; and I ask unanimous consent that the words "where default has occurred" be added, on page 35, at the end of line 22, before the period.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 22, after the word "security," it is proposed to insert the words "where default has occurred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, under the subhead "Powers of Federal land banks," in section 13, page 36, line 11, after the word "Eighth," to strike out "To accept time deposits and to pay interest on the same, as provided in section 18 of this act," and insert "To borrow money, to give security therefor, and to pay interest thereon," so as to make the clause read:

Eighth. To borrow money, to give security therefor, and to pay interest thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 21, before the word "Federal," to strike out "on," and insert "of," so as to make the subhead read "Restrictions of Federal land banks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Restrictions of Federal land banks," in section 14, page 37, line 1, after the word "act," to strike out ", but this restriction shall not apply to prevent the acceptance of time deposits, as provided in section 18 of this act," so as to make the clause read:

First. To accept deposits of current funds payable upon demand except from its own stockholders, or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 6, after the words "section 17," to strike out ", or for short terms as provided in section 18," so as to make the clause read:

Second. To loan on first mortgage except through national farm loan associations as provided in section 7 of this act, or through agents as provided in section 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion of land credit, I wish to direct attention to a phase of the land question which clamors for settlement, a matter distinct from the general subject of rural credits, but frequently confused with it.

A vast and growing number of American farmers are reduced to such conditions that they have no land to offer as security for loans, no means to acquire land which they might offer as such security for loans of balances due on purchase, and hardly enough left after the landlord, the merchant, and the banker are paid from the proceeds of their crops to keep body and soul together until another crop is made. Whatever meager personal goods they hold are mortgaged for tools and food at a rate of interest so enormous as to keep them in poverty. Their wives and children must, as a rule, labor with them in the fields. As a result their children either have no schooling at all, or very little. They are in a state of financial servitude, from which there is little or no hope for escape under present conditions. These restless, discontented multitudes of men, women, and children, who have no place they may call home, whose earnings, toil as they will, are hardly sufficient for the barest necessities, present a problem that becomes more pressing every hour. The percentage of tenant farmers in the United States increased from 25 per cent in 1880 to 37 per cent in 1910, while the percentage of our rural population decreased from 70 per cent in 1880 to 53 per cent in 1910. It is the statement of Mr. Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits, that in the last 10 years in Texas and Oklahoma the ratio of increase of tenant farmers has been double that of land-owning farmers; that in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, South Carolina, North Carolina, Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana, Nebraska, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and California there has been an actual increase since 1880 of 994,361 tenants, while home-owning farmers have increased but 606,755; that in the States of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania tenant farmers have increased to the extent of 121,167, while the number of home-owning farmers has actually decreased to the extent of 62,915. But what of the country at large? In this connection let me say, Mr. President, that the last census shows that of the 20,000,000 families in the United States, less than 6,000,000 own their homes free from incumbrances, nearly 11,000,000 American families living in rented homes.

In this connection I want also to cite the fact that the Society to Lower Rents and Reduce Taxes on Homes, an organization located in the State of New York, published, on September 2 of last year, a statement showing that 13 families on Manhattan Island owned land of a total value of $205,404,875, or $15,800,000 to a family, the amount owned by these families being one-fifteenth of the value of all the land on the island. The total number of families in that borough was placed at 560,000. The 13 land-owning families are as follows: The Astors, Vanderbilts, Rhinelanders, O. B. Potter properties, J. P. Morgan, E. H. Van Ingen, Wendels, Goelets, Ehret, Gerrys, Charles F. Hoffman estate, William R. H. Martin, and Eugene Hoffman.

An interesting fact brought out in that connection was that the value of the improvements which these 13 great families have placed on the land was only one-fourth of its value, while the value of the improvements placed on the land by owners of small homes in Manhattan was three times the value of said land. It was demonstrated, therefore, that the small home owners were being taxed for the benefit of the 13 great families I have mentioned.

Mr. President, an aristocracy is rapidly developing in this country, built on the concentrated ownership of lands and also on the concentration of other forms of wealth, an aristocracy that riots in unmeasured luxury, an aristocracy for the most part selfish, indifferent, and cruel. It is the statement of Mr. Benjamin C. Marsh, the executive secretary of the Association for an Equitable Federal Income Tax, that less than 5 per cent of the population of the United States own nearly all the value of land and nearly all the acreage.

Commissioner Davies, of the Bureau of Corporations, reported in 1914 that 1,694 timber owners held in fee over one-twentieth of the land area of the United States, from the Canadian to the Mexican border—a total of 105,600,000 acres—and that 16 holders own nearly half of this amount, or about 47,800,000 acres. This is an alarming situation. The United States is becoming a land of the landless.

Sir, we talk of preparedness against war, and no man favors it more earnestly than I do. Let me say to you that the most effective step this country may take to secure permanent preparedness against all foes is to utilize part of its vast credit in anchoring the people to the land. If you would have this Nation invincible, make it a nation of homes. The home problem presents an emergency so tremendous and so pathetic as to justify the employment of a substantial portion of the Government credit in aiding our landless and homeless millions to acquire lands and homes. This has been done with gratifying results in Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and other countries. Some of our States are already considering such steps, Oklahoma and Massachusetts having enacted measures with such ends in view.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator to call his attention to the extraordinary efficiency of the German people, due to the very pains taken by the national power there in abolishing poverty by finding employment to occupy the people and teaching them how to make a living?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very valuable one. Let us have a Federal home-loan law, enabling the Federal Government to make loans or sales at low interest rates and on long time to worthy homeseekers, either directly or in cooperation with States, and perhaps other political divisions.

For many years the Federal Government protected the wages and incomes of the masses by offering them homes on the public domain. This served as a safeguard against the oppression of the laborers of factory and farm. Now that the public land available for homes has been nearly all preempted shall this safeguard perish? The public land is no more the public domain than the public credit—the Government credit, which is the common possession of all the people. Let the priceless bulwark of home ownership on easy terms, such terms as private collections of capital could never offer, be preserved.

The Secretary of Labor in his last annual report makes an epoch-marking suggestion. He says:

> It will not be enough to hunt "manless jobs" for "jobless men." Any efficient public employment service of a national character must go beyond that. Unless it does, "manless jobs" giving out while "jobless men" remain, the causes of involuntary unemployment will continue to express themselves to the great prejudice of the wage workers of the United States, and consequently to the harm of all industrial interests. In my opinion, therefore, the labor-distribution work of this department should extend to some such development of the natural resources of this country as will tend to make opportunities for workers greater than demands for work and to keep them so.
> For this purpose further legislation will be necessary. But it need not be either voluminous or revolutionary. Nothing more is required than a judicious utilization of Government lands.
> Title to some of the old public domain still remains in the Government. By a recent decision of the Supreme Court, Congress is soon to have the power, and to be under an obligation, to treat with land-grant railroads regarding the terms on which large areas of that domain heretofore granted away may be restored. There are extensive areas of privately owned but unused farming land in most or all of the States, which might be acquired by the General Government for promoting labor opportunities as advantageously as other areas have been acquired or retained by it for the creation of public parks. If Congress were to adopt, with reference to those lands, a policy of utilizing them for promoting opportunities for employment, the benefits of the labor-distribution work of this department, and of State and municipal public employment offices throughout the United States, would be vastly augmented.
> For such a policy the homestead laws seem to afford a legislative basis and their history to furnish valuable suggestions. Those laws relieved the industrial congestions of their day by opening the West to workers of pioneering spirit who set up individual homes and created independent farms in waste places. But the day of the individual pioneer is over. From the Atlantic he has moved westward until the Pacific throws him back again into crowded spaces, and new forms of industrial congestion have consequently developed. To the relief of these the old form of homesteading is not adapted, but the homesteading principle persists. The problem is how to adapt that principle to changed circumstances.
> One necessary condition is that the General Government shall retain title to the public lands it already holds. Another condition is that from time to time it shall reacquire title to such lands, formerly owned by it but now privately owned, as are held out of use and may be reacquired upon reasonable terms. Still another condition is that the Government, from time to time, shall acquire title to such privately owned lands in different States as may be usefully devoted to the purpose of opening opportunities for employment. All this need not be done at once. A satisfactory beginning may be made with public lands already available for the purpose in question. But it is necessary that the Government shall not lightly divest itself of title to any lands it may set aside for labor opportunities.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How can these Western States that have millions and millions of acres of land in governmental ownership ever support a State, county, or school government if that is going to be the policy of the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The policy I speak of will help the Western States. It will mean the more speedy sale of public lands to home owners. It will give these States more home owners, and that is what they want. These home owners will help to support the State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but these lands are situated in the States; and if these lands are to be held by the Government and the title is to remain in the Government, there is no power on earth by which they can be the subject of taxation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The idea is that the public lands available for homes shall not be too hastily disposed of, but that they shall be held only until they can be sold for this purpose under proper safeguards. But the disposition of existing public lands is not essential to the main question. The point I am making to-day is that we must maintain the homestead principle, which protected the masses of the people up to a few decades ago from oppressive conditions in the cities and in the wage-paying industries.

The Secretary of Labor continues:

> Regulation of private tenures created pursuant to this purpose should fit the circumstances of particular cases. It is therefore suggested that private titles to lands set aside for the indicated purpose be so adjusted by the Department of Labor to its work of labor distribution as to prevent inflation of land values. This precaution is of extreme importance. Wherever inflation of land values might enter in, the proposed method of promoting labor distribution would be obstructed.
> There is still another essential condition. Equipment for farming and education in farming as well as a place for farming are needed. All three, however, could be met by an appropriate unification of some of the activities of the Departments of the Interior, of Agriculture, and of Labor. Pursuant to such unification Congress might provide a "rotary fund" for lending purposes; that is, a fund to be used over and over again for those purposes and to be maintained by repayments of loans.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Government of the United States is now using a rotary fund in furnishing means to various Indians for the purpose of teaching them self-support by agriculture. That fund, as I say, is a revolving fund.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am very glad to have that statement, Mr. President.

The Secretary of Labor continues:

> Out of this fund Congress could authorize the departments named above to make loans, through the Department of Labor, to settlers placed by this department upon lands set aside for that purpose in accordance with the authorized plan for thus augmenting labor opportunities. Those loans could be safeguarded, without commercial collateral, by resting them upon the best possible basis of industrial credit—ability, opportunity, and character—and by establishing in connection with them a system of community credits adapted to the circumstances.
> By their educational processes the Departments of the Interior and of Agriculture could make efficient farmers of inexperienced but otherwise competent workers seeking that vocation. By its marketing plans the Department of Agriculture could guard borrowers from the "rotary fund" against commercial misfortune in disposing of their crops. By its labor-distribution functions the Department of Labor could bring the right men to the right places on the soil and settle them there under favorable circumstances. And by their several appropriate functions these three departments, cooperating under appropriate legislation, could multiply demands for labor in rural regions and minimize labor congestion at industrial centers.
> It is a reasonable prediction that such a policy would develop in country and city an economically independent and socially progressive population. The results would be analogous in our time to those of the homestead laws at an earlier period.

Mr. President, let these suggestions of the Secretary of Labor be extended to cover the acquisition of farm homes with Government aid for both landless and jobless men. The rural districts are rapidly decreasing in population.

A Federal home-loan and aid law and a short-term rural-credit law will go far toward remedying fundamental economic evils while a permanent land-mortgage system is being developed.

One of the greatest national needs is to turn the trend of population from the cities back to the farm home. It is fundamentally a national need. It is essential to the Nation's liberty and life.

Of course, it is exceedingly questionable whether the power of the Federal Government, under the Constitution as it now reads, covers the use of its funds and its credit for the acquisition of lands and the distribution of those lands on the homestead principle among the people. I therefore submit an amendment to the Constitution along this line, and ask that it be read, and ask unanimous consent to introduce it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, giving Congress the power to purchase, hold, improve, subdivide, and sell land and to make loans for the purpose of promoting farm-home ownership, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

AMENDMENT —.

The Congress shall have power to purchase land anywhere in the United States, hold, improve, subdivide, and sell the same, and also to make loans for the purpose of encouraging and promoting farm home ownership in the United States: Provided, however, That this amendment shall not be deemed to authorize the sale of such land at less than the cost thereof.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, I do not wish to object to this being read as a part of the Senator's remarks; but I think it is my duty to call attention to the rule in regard to the introduction of other matters while a Senator has the floor and is making a speech.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Do I understand that this amendment can not be introduced by unanimous consent, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the duty of the Chair to prevent any person from interrupting a Senator while he is talking by the introduction of a bill, joint resolution, or any other document. Whether the Chair is under the duty of interfering with the Senator from Texas, the Chair is in very grave doubt.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not see how a man could interrupt himself in this way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to speak for the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator from Texas is an exception to the rule that bills or resolutions shall not be introduced while a Senator is speaking——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I should like to have the matter ruled on anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any objection to the Senator's introduction of a resolution. This suggestion was largely humorous on the part of the Senator from Wyoming. Shall the amendment be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. President, if this amendment seems to strike anybody as radical or socialistic, I want to call attention to a similar amendment to the Constitution of the conservative State of Massachusetts, which was adopted in that State last November by a popular vote of 3 to 1; and I ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONSTITUTION OF MASSACHUSETTS.

ARTICLE OF AMENDMENT ADOPTED NOVEMBER, 1915.

The general court shall have power to authorize the Commonwealth to take land and to hold, improve, subdivide, build upon, and sell the same, for the purpose of relieving congestion of population and providing homes for citizens: Provided, however, That this amendment shall not be deemed to authorize the sale of such land or buildings at less than the cost thereof.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As a matter of fact, this Massachusetts amendment and my amendment are the antithesis of socialism. The object of these amendments is to preserve the institution of private-land ownership, to preserve it for the masses.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Texas if he is able to advise us as to the attitude of the Senators from Massachusetts upon that amendment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I judge from the speeches that have been made by the Senators from Massachusetts opposing the acquisition by the Government of an armor-plate plant and of a nitrate plant, and opposing the principle of extending governmental activities along these lines, that they may not be in sympathy with the action of the overwhelming majority of the people of Massachusetts in voting to put the State into the business of buying land and selling it to the people for homes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield; yes.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will so amend his proposed amendment to the Constitution as to require the Government to sell some of the land it already owns, I will support it with a good deal of enthusiasm.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Well, Mr. President, this idea that I have suggested includes the sale of the land the Government now possesses and creates circumstances under which it may be sold.

I merely wanted, Mr. President, during the discussion of land credits, to bring the attention of the Senate to a question that is going to assume greater and greater importance as the years pass by. The land question is to-day one of the most fundamental and the most important questions before the country. The fact that the land is rapidly passing away from the possession of the people, that its control is being centered in the hands of the few, is one of the most alarming facts of contemporary history. The United States is becoming a country of tenants and boarders. A land without homes is a land without hope, a land without liberty, although it may wear the garb of a republic and boast of treasures beyond the human brain to comprehend.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas what amount of land is allowed for homestead purposes in the State of Texas now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator mean what amount of the public land may be sold to individuals for homesteads, or what amount of land is exempted from debt as a homestead?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, perhaps that expresses my thought more accurately.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The two propositions are different, as the Senator understands.

Mr. POMERENE. They may be, of course, and they may not be.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Two hundred acres are exempted from debt as a rural homestead.

Mr. POMERENE. And what amount is exempted from sale for debt?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Two hundred acres. A section of land—that is, 640 acres, may be bought from the State for a homestead on 40 years' time at a very low rate of interest. Grazing homesteads comprise more than one section.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I want to say a word of commendation for the pending bill, which I shall call the Hollis bill. It seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to unusual and particular credit for the preparation and perfection of the simple, strong, and comprehensive measure which is now before the Senate.

I do not take the gloomy view presented by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator did not understand me to bring forward my suggestions as criticisms of this particular measure?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I did not.

I come from the West, where agriculture is prosperous, where agriculture is developing, where home owning is the rule. It is true, however, that the farmers in the West are borrowers. They ought to be borrowers. We have not sufficient capital in the West for the proper development of our farms; and the bill now before the Senate provides in a simple way for accomplishing something which has never yet been accomplished in the United States, and that is for bringing the farmer who wants to borrow money for legitimate purposes into close contact, under Government supervision, with the money lenders who have the capital to invest.

Mr. President, capital in this country is abundant, but to the farmer it is comparatively inaccessible. Through the Federal reserve act and through other legislation enacted by Congress capital has been made readily accessible to the merchant, the manufacturer, and the business man of the industrial centers and of our cities. This bill, in my opinion, will make capital accessible to the farmer on the most favorable terms.

It is true, Mr. President, that the farmer in the past has borrowed money, and I speak of the farmer of the West because I know him better than I know the farmers of other sections. The great difficulty has been, however, that he has been compelled not only at times to pay an excessive rate of interest but practically at all times to pay an excessive commission to the middleman or agent who has procured for him the loan that he needs. Reduced to its simplest statement this bill establishes a new middleman, provides him with capital, regulates his charges and his profits, and in that way gives to the farmers of the country an opportunity to procure from the money lenders their loans not only at the lowest possible rate of interest but at the minimum of cost.

Mr. President, I have heard some opposition to this bill expressed here in the Chamber, though I am glad to say not much, and I attribute the absence of opposition very largely to the fact that the bill has been so admirably drawn and so thoroughly digested that it is very difficult to make legitimate criticism.

We have been told by some objectors that Congress has neither the power nor the duty to establish this farm-loan system, under which the agricultural interests of the country are to be given quick and cheap access to the great monetary resources of the country. I shall leave to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who has the bill in charge, the defense of the bill upon legal lines. I think he has already indicated that there is sufficient authority to hold that the bill is drawn in such a way as to come within the constitutional powers of Congress.

I shall discuss for a few moments, however, the duty of Congress to provide for the farmers this means of access to the loanable funds of the country. Mr. President, I might assert that duty upon the ground that the farming industry is the greatest industry in the United States; that in it are employed the largest number of American citizens. That would probably be sufficient to establish the duty of Congress to look after their welfare. But the farmer of the country is in a stronger position than that. He has a stronger claim upon the consideration of Congress. The farm produces the greatest necessary of life—one might almost say the only absolute necessary of life—food for the people. We are approaching a time when the production of food must be one of the great cares of government, if that time has not already arrived. We have witnessed in this country a gradual increase in the cost of living, a cost of living which affects peculiarly the laboring men and clerks in our cities and in our great industrial centers engaged in manufacturing, in mining, and in mercantile pursuits. We know that the number of arable acres in the United States is limited. We can increase them slightly from time to time by irrigation, but, practically speaking, all the arable land of the United States for all time is already known, and most of it is in cultivation.

How are we going to provide the food for our increasing millions in the future from year to year and from decade to decade? We can only do it by doing as Germany did. Beginning 45 years ago Germany has raised the productiveness of each acre by every means known to scientific agriculture. In that period Germany has increased the average German farm acre more than 80 per cent. To bring this about it was necessary to supply farmers with cheap and abundant capital to build improvements, buy machinery, and fertilize the land. In this way intensive farming has enormously increased the national wealth and enabled the empire to bear the burden of this war.

We also can greatly increase the productiveness of our acres if we give the farmers the proper help.

So I say, Mr. President, that the people in our cities and in our industrial centers are interested in this system, which will give to the farmers of the United States, North and South and East and West, capital with which to develop and improve their farms, capital with which to make them productive to a much larger degree than they have ever been in the past. Congress therefore, when it provides this system for the farmer, is also providing for the people in our industrial centers a safeguard against an undue increase in the cost of living and an insurance of sufficient food products.

Mr. President, I have referred to this bill as a simple bill, and it appeals to me because it is so simple and so strong. It practically unites into one great mutual organization all the farmers of the United States and gives to each farm mortgage the united strength of the whole system. It not only affords cheap capital to be borrowed by the farmer, but it affords a good investment for the small lender of money in the richer portions of the United States. The man or the woman in New England who now finds difficulty in finding safe investment for a small amount of savings can under this bill buy land-bank bonds. The timid investor of the East will be given an opportunity under this system of buying bonds of the Government-controlled land bank, which will yield not less than 4 per cent and which may yield a larger amount. It is this 4-per-cent money of the great eastern centers of saving and capital which it is proposed through the land bank and through the farmers' associations to lend to the farmers at 5 per cent, thus permitting only 1 per cent commission or middleman's cost where heretofore in the past the average farmer has paid 2½ per cent and sometimes 3 per cent as a commission for securing a loan.

Mr. President, I referred to the simplicity of the system. Ten farmers in a neighborhood desiring immediately or in the future to borrow money upon their farms associate themselves together in a little association called the farmers' association. Each farmer may apply to that association for a mortgage. Each farmer is an inspector of his neighbor's mortgage. To some extent each farmer is a guarantor of his neighbor's loan. This association, then, in the name of these farmers makes application to the land bank of the district for a loan to each. Suppose each farmer desires to borrow $2,000, each farmer pays in 5 per cent in cash to the farmers' association, namely, $100. The association then, with $1,000 in cash, turns it over to the land bank and receives in return certificates of ownership of the stock of the land bank for that amount. It is an investment in the capital stock of the land bank. Thereupon each farmer becomes entitled to receive at the lowest possible rate of interest a loan of $2,000 upon his farm, providing that amount does not exceed one-half of its value. The land bank has secured $1,000. This becomes a part of its working capital. Each $1,000 added to its capital increases its power to issue bonds $20,000, which in this case is the amount that goes to the 10 farmers in long-time loans. The security for each issue of bonds is, first, the capital of the bank; second, the land mortgaged; third, the obligation of the farmers' association; and fourth, notes of the farmers. Every new mortgage increases the cash capital 5 per cent. The bonds will be a safe and attractive investment, and the land banks can issue and sell them as fast as they make farm loans, and put the mortgages in their vaults. The farmers who invest in the capital of the land bank to the extent of 5 per cent of the amount of their mortgage receive a stock certificate which should pay a fair dividend. So they are all bound together in one great mutual system—all borrowing twenty times what they invest in stock.

So, Mr. President, the farm bank, with a minimum capital of $500,000 of cash actually paid in, paid in largely by the Government of the United States to begin with, paid in later also by these farm associations for the farmers, starts its business. It brings the funds from the money centers to the farms where it is loaned. When it has exhausted its capital and exhausted the funds which it has received from the farmers' associations it has the power to issue bonds to cover mortgage loans, dollar for dollar, as they are made. Thus the mortgages pile up within its vaults as new bonds are issued and sold and the cash capital grows 5 per cent of each loan as it is made.

The bank is under constant Government inspection. Its operations are safeguarded not only by its own land examiners, who go out and visit the farms as loans are made, but it is also under the inspection of the officers of the United States. It affords cheap loans to the farmers and to the bond buyers in the centers of capital a safe investment. Thus we will have a constant flow of cheap money into the land bank and a constant flow of money from the land bank out to the farmers' associations as they are formed, and through the farmers' associations to the farmers themselves.

I say, Mr. President, it seems to be a system so simple and so strong that it is remarkable that it has not been undertaken in this country before this time.

Mr. President, in my opinion, one of the best features of this system is the provision permitting long loans. This provision permits a farmer to borrow money and repay it at his convenience. He is only required to pay 1 per cent of the principal each year, although he may pay more. The mortgage may not be paid off under this amorization plan for 36 years. What will be the consequence of this provision? It will be that farms will be bought and sold with the mortgages upon them; that people with limited capital will be able to buy these farms with the long-time mortgages already upon them. People will be able to go out from cities with a comparatively small amount of ready capital and buy farms, being compelled to pay only the amount represented by the equity and take their time in paying the mortgage.

Nor is that all, Mr. President. I believe that a farm under such a long-time mortgage, with the amortization feature, calling for only the interest every year and 1 per cent of the principal, will be a safe investment for a second mortgage, and that men will be found with local capital who will lend moderate amounts on second mortgages. They will feel sure that they can always protect themselves if necessary by taking the farm and keeping up the first-mortgage payments required for interest and for the amortization of the loan. In other words, the second mortgagee will not fear to loan on second mortgage; he will not fear that the first mortgage will fall due and be foreclosed in a year or two if default in principal should unhappily come, but he will feel safe in lending under a second mortgage, because so little principal on the first mortgage falls due each year.

I believe this system will enable the farmers of the country not only to get cheap money, the cheapest money that the market affords, in the manner provided by the bill, but it will enable the farmer also to secure additional or second-mortgage loans if it is necessary to develop his farm to a higher degree of perfection. I believe, Mr. President, that the result of the bill now before the Senate will be to develop agriculture in the United States, and particularly in the West, and I hope also in the South, as it has never been developed before.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], as well as those by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who has just spoken, it may be of interest to know that in western Kansas we already have a plan by which any able-bodied man with a family can become the owner of a farm from the production of the farm alone.

This plan was inaugurated by one of our western Kansas public-spirited men, Mr. John Plummer, who lives at Johnson, Stanton County, Kans., and who himself owns a large amount of land and is the inventor of a particular kind of a plow which has revolutionized farming in western Kansas, in what was formerly known as a semiarid country—dry land with an elevation of about 3,000 feet. By the use of this plow Mr. Plummer has never had a crop failure in that western country with limited rainfall.

He and those with whom he is associated agree to take any able-bodied man willing to work on a farm of 160 acres, place moderate improvements on it, and to break it up by the use of this plow in order to demonstrate its ability to produce crops, and to secure permanent settlers who will own their farms. They agree with the farmer in the outset to purchase all the crop that he can raise upon his place at the market price, and also agree to sell him the land at the market value from his farm's production, aiding him in setting aside a sufficient sum each year to pay out by the use of reasonable economy in about five years.

By this method a great many families have obtained homes in western Kansas, and it is being gradually extended and developed until that whole country will no doubt be settled up by farmers who own their homes. All that it takes is an able-bodied man, willing to work, with a family and a few hundred dollars to provide for his groceries and clothing until he can produce his living upon the land.

Now, if this can be successfully accomplished in a private way by one charitably inclined with a little means, how much easier might it be accomplished by the Government with unlimited means.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, agriculture is the most important activity of mankind. It always has been, and from the very nature of things always must be. Not only the happiness and prosperity but the very existence of the human race depends, not indirectly but directly, upon the products of the soil. When the farmer's returns are bountiful all the people, regardless of creed or avocation, share in the prosperity and happiness which it brings. When the sun fails to shine and the rains cease to fall, the farmer fails and with him goes all enterprise and activity. Happiness ceases; starvation, misery, and destruction take possession of all things. Civilization must end and human existence must cease when the soil fails to produce. This is not only true of mankind; it is true of government. All governmental activity must cease when the soil fails to bring forth its return. No government can live without agriculture. When there is no product from the soil, gold becomes less valuable than dust and government bonds as worthless as mere "scraps of paper." One of the principal objects of government should be to encourage as much as possible the scientific development and the practical protection of agriculture. All the people are interested in the success of the farmer, not because they think more of the farmer than of any other citizen but because their own happiness and their own prosperity goes up or down according to the success or the failure of the farmer. In legislating for the benefit of agriculture we should always bear this distinction in mind. A sound public, governmental policy, one in which all the people regardless of their avocation are directly interested, is the proper legislation to give the utmost possible encouragement to agriculture. One of the alarming features disclosed by the last Federal census is that the population in our rural communities has been decreasing, while the population in our already overcrowded cities has been increasing.

The last Federal census discloses the remarkable fact that in the great State of Illinois, justly noted for its rich soil and fine agricultural development, there were 50 agricultural counties between the years 1890 and 1910 where the population had actually decreased, while the cities in the same State for the same period show an increase of more than 16 per cent. In addition to this, not only in Illinois but in the entire country, figures show that the proportion of tenant farmers is continually on the increase. In 1880, 25 per cent of the farmers of the country were tenants; in 1890, 30 per cent; in 1900, 35 per cent; and in 1910, 37 per cent of the farmers of the country were tenants. These remarkable conditions ought to excite the consideration and interest of all worthy citizens whether in the country or in the city. We are all equally interested and are all equally affected, regardless of our vocation or location. Unless this tendency is checked it is easy to see that all classes of our citizens will be injured. We ought to legislate, if we can, not only to stop this tendency but to reverse it. It is no answer to say that legislation in this direction is class legislation, because the evil tendencies that I have pointed out apply as much to the man in the city as to the man on the farm.

For several years the high cost of living has been one of the alarming tendencies of the age. If it continues to increase, it will be necessary for humanity to entirely reconstruct many of the economic instrumentalities of government. This increased cost falls lightly upon the rich but bends the back of labor in every activity of human existence. That it falls the most heavily upon the poor is apparent to anyone who gives it but a moment's study. The expense of maintaining existence for one man is about as great as for another, regardless of his station in life. The man who has an abundance or whose income is very large can look with impunity upon the continually increasing cost of living, but the man whose income is moderate and who requires about all of the product of his labor to sustain himself and those dependent upon him can not long endure if the expense of existence continues to increase. The very poor will suffer first, and those in moderate circumstances will come next. It can easily be seen that a readjustment of every economic condition must result unless this tendency is stopped. When we find that the population of the farms in our best agricultural communities is decreasing and that, therefore, the producing capacity of mankind is lessening, while the population of the cities is increasing and that, therefore, the consuming portion of the population is becoming greater, we are confronted with a condition that all sober-minded, well-meaning men ought to honestly try to remedy. Not only does this condition have a direct bearing upon the cost of living, but it likewise has a direct effect upon the social and physical conditions of human society. The overcrowding that is continually going on and continually growing worse in some of our large cities means that we are burdening future generations with human beings who will be defective mentally, physically, and morally. It is in the slums of the overcrowded cities where crime and social disorder are bred. It is there that the army of inebriates, the physically and socially defective human beings are recruited. This means increased taxation. This means greater burdens for the balance of humanity. It means less stability for society. It means a weaker Government, a less patriotic citizenship.

To prevent this flow of humanity from the open country to the crowded city we must make farm life more happy, more desirable, more profitable. Under existing conditions the farmer pays the highest rate of interest of any class of citizens. His security is the foundation of society, of government, the corner stone of existence, and yet when he places it upon the market as security for money he is compelled to pay the highest rate of any class of our citizens. The security that ought to command money at the lowest rate in fact pays the highest. The worst condition that could possibly exist would be to have all our farming done by tenants, a condition where the owners of the land lived in the cities and where the actual work of the farm was done by those who had no title to the soil which they tilled.

The model condition, the one that would bring the maximum amount of prosperity and happiness to all the people, would be to have all the land cultivated by men who actually own it and reside with their families upon it. Anything that we can do to bring about an approach to this condition must result in increased happiness to the people, in strengthening the moral foundation of society, and increasing the stability of government itself. Patriotism grows where light and sunshine penetrate the home. Crime, disorder, and ignorance thrive best in the dark alleys and slums inhabited by tenants and poorly developed offspring. We ought to make it easy for men who are now tenants in the country to buy the farms which they till and to make it possible for thousands of willing men who are struggling almost against hope in the cities to take their wives into the open country and rear their children in the healthy atmosphere of a real country home owned by themselves. There is nothing that gives more happiness to the parent, more stability to the citizen, and more patriotic pride to the individual than to see his offspring growing into strong and vigorous manhood and womanhood around a hearthstone the title of which is in himself. If we could lower the rate of interest on farm loans, we would make it possible for thousands of tenant farmers and yet thousands of residents in the city to become the owners of country homes. Why should not the instrumentality of government be turned in this direction? What higher and nobler thing can government do for the perpetuation of government and for the happiness of all people than to make it possible for those who desire to live on farms and till the soil to borrow money at such a rate that it will be possible for them to carry out this idea?

Various plans to bring this about have been proposed within the last few years. Some of them, in my judgment, have much merit, and most of them, I think, have been proposed by honest men with the honest intention of improving present conditions. I can most heartily give my support to any plan that would bring about an improvement. But it will be found upon examination, in practically all of the schemes proposed, that the machinery is top-heavy. There are too many middlemen to receive commissions; too much machinery to be oiled; too much overhead expense. All of these must be paid by the man on the farm who borrows the money.

These criticisms, at least to a very great extent, are applicable to the pending bill. I fear that the bill is top-heavy. I doubt its practicability, yet I know how earnestly the committee having it in charge has striven to bring in a practical, workable proposition. Particularly is this true as to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] whose name the bill bears. I criticize it, therefore, not as an enemy but as a friend. If it is passed and becomes a law no man will more earnestly hope for its sucessful operation than I. In addition to its being top-heavy, I doubt very much whether the bonds provided for will float at a rate that will enable the farmer to get very much benefit out of it. To my mind its expensive machinery could be obviated and plenty of money obtained at a low rate of interest if it were entirely and completely a governmental instrumentality. I believe that we are justified, for the reasons that I have already given, and for additional reasons that I shall give later, in utilizing the credit of the Government as an instrumentality to make it possible to obtain money at the very lowest rate of interest. With this in view, I have introduced a bill (S. 3201) providing for the establishment of a bureau of farm loans, which I intend to offer as a substitute for the pending measure.

In proposing a plan of my own to remedy the situation I do so without any criticism, other than that I have already outlined, upon the various other plans that have been proposed by others who have given the subject much thought and consideration. To get a low rate of interest, of which the farmer can have the benefit, we must lessen the machinery as much as possible and surround the security with stability that in the markets of the world will command the lowest possible rate of interest. In the proposed substitute which I shall offer I have provided for the establishment in the Agricultural Department of a bureau of farm loans, which shall, in fact, be a clearing house between the men, women, and children who have money and savings to loan and the man who wants to become a farmer and build up a home for himself and family in the country. It is the function of this bureau to make loans on farm lands located in any of the States of the Union. These loans are to be secured by mortgages, made payable to the bureau, and draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable semiannually. I have provided that loans can be made for $100 or any multiple of $100 up to and including $2,000. At the end of five years one-tenth of the principal becomes due, and thereafter one-tenth becomes due each year until the entire loan is matured. This would make the loan run for 15 years, but the right is given to the mortgagor to pay the entire loan or to make a payment of $100 or any multiple thereof on the principal at the maturity of any semiannual interest payment. It is provided that application for loans can be made, upon blanks furnished by the bureau, to any postmaster, and the postmaster is authorized to receive such application and to administer oaths to applicants or other persons to any affidavits made necessary by the rules and regulations of the bureau. It is made the duty of the postmaster, when requested by the bureau, to appoint the appraisers that are provided for in the proposed law. It is provided that no person shall be entitled to a loan under the act who is not of good moral character and who does not establish to the satisfaction of the bureau that he is honest and bears a good reputation in the neighborhood where he resides. No loan shall be made to any person who is not an actual resident on and engaged in the cultivation of the land offered as security; but where the applicant is endeavoring to secure the money for the purpose of building a house upon the land, or for the purpose of making part payment upon the purchase price of the land, the bureau can waive this stipulation; but it is expressly stated in the proposed law that it is the intention of the act to provide money only for persons who intend to reside on and cultivate the land which they offer as security. No loan shall be made for more than one-half of the value of the land offered as security, and only for one or more of the following purposes:

First. To make payment of part of the purchase money of the land to be mortgaged.

Second. To pay off an indebtedness already existing against said land.

Third. To build a house, barn, or other building or buildings upon said land.

It is also provided that the bureau, under proper rule and regulation, can provide that not to exceed 50 per cent of any loan may be used for the purchase of stock and farm implements. It is made the duty of the postmaster or any other employee or official of the Government, without fee or pay therefor, to make confidential reports to said bureau upon request upon any subject pertaining to any loan and upon the character or standing of any applicant or witness.

It might be advisable to increase the amount that could be loaned in excess of $2,000, although we ought never to go beyond the theory which we ought constantly to bear in mind, that one of the principal objects of the plan is to help tenants to become proprietors, and to help residents in the city to become farmers. We want to increase the farming population. We want to stop the trend toward the city. We ought not use the instrumentality of the Government for the purpose of permitting men to speculate or for the purpose of permitting men of wealth to control large areas of the farming community. We must not go to the extent of providing money through the instrumentality of the Government for men to deal in farms so large that they themselves would necessarily require the assistance of tenant farmers to care for their interests. As long as we carry out these objects we will not be guilty of the charge of class legislation. We will, in other words, be legislating for all and not for a part.

Let us see now how the Government could look after these loans. We have an army of postmasters, revenue collectors, deputy revenue collectors, United States marshals, deputy United States marshals, post-office inspectors, inspectors of the Land Department, and various other officials whose duties carry them to all parts of the country. These officials, like a network, cover the entire United States. There is scarcely a farm in the United States of which the postmaster in the vicinity has not a personal knowledge. The chances are that the postmaster would not only know the individual applying for the loan, but he would likewise be acquainted with the land that was offered for security. The marshals and post-office inspectors in the performance of their duties are continually passing up and down the country, and very often they could without any additional expense, and almost always with but slight additional expense, make a personal inspection of the land offered as security. Not only would they be able to do this when the land is offered for security, but these officials would know in a general way whether the mortgagor was in good faith carrying out the terms of his mortgage. Any dereliction in this respect could be reported at once. It is made the duty of these officials under the proposed law to make confidential reports to said bureau upon request therefor upon anything pertaining to any loan or the character and standing of the mortgagor or any witness. Moreover, if this plan were adopted, there would be no community in the United States but where there would be a great many farms mortgaged to this bureau, and every citizen would have an interest in the success of the plan. He would feel a proprietary interest and this bureau would be in a better position to get direct, positive, and reliable information as to the conditions at all times than any other loaning institution that ever existed or that has ever been proposed in any of the various schemes for rural development. In addition to this, the bill which I have offered makes it the duty of attorneys in the Department of Justice in all parts of the United States to pass upon abstracts and to foreclose mortgages whenever it becomes necessary. We already have the legal machinery in active operation in every section of the country, and by increasing it somewhat it would be able to look after all of the legal business and litigation that would become necessary. The proposed bill gives to the bureau the right to declare any loan due if the mortgagor has failed or neglected to pay the interest on the mortgage or the taxes on the land, or if he has failed to apply the money in accordance with the statements made in the application, or if he has made any false statements as to any material matter in his application, or if he neglects to properly care for the improvements on the land, or if the land without the consent of the bureau should cease to be farmed and cultivated.

The mortgagor is allowed to pay the interest and the principal to the postmaster and the money is remitted by the postmaster to one of the Federal reserve banks and the business of the bureau is transacted with these banks already in existence and already performing certain governmental functions. With the exception of the officials of the bureau, there would be no necessity for additional employees, except the employment of the necessary clerks and inspectors to do the business of the bureau.

The question now arises: How will this bureau secure the money with which to make these loans? I have provided in the substitute bill which I propose that the bureau shall issue bonds in denominations of $100 or any multiple thereof, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. When the bureau desires to secure money for the purpose of making loans, it gives notice of its intention to issue bonds and invites from the public generally subscription to said bonds. These bonds, together with the interest thereon, and also the notes and mortgages taken by said bureau, are entirely free from all taxation of every kind, national, State, and municipal. They are, both as to principal and interest, the obligation of the Government, the same as other Government bonds. No bonds can be issued except for the purpose of loaning money as before outlined, so that when bonds are issued bearing 3½ per cent interest, mortgages are taken bearing 4 per cent interest. In my judgment, this difference of one-half of 1 per cent would much more than pay all the expenses connected with the bureau, as well as the losses, if any, that were sustained. The bonds are payable in 15 years. Perhaps it would be advisable to provide that the bureau should have the option of paying them off at the time any interest payment became due after five years. This bureau would therefore be issuing bonds on the one hand and with the proceeds making loans on the other. It would be a clearing house where the middleman's profit and where the overhead machinery of loan companies would be almost entirely eliminated. It is possible that after the bureau had been in operation a few years it would be found that these bonds could be sold at par at a less rate than 3½ per cent. If experience demonstated this, then the rate to the farmer is lowered accordingly. The bureau might be described as a great bank dealing in time deposits and loaning on real estate. It would take in deposits on 15 years' time and loan on land for the same length of time. The amount of its business would, of course, be enormous. It would be continually making loans, daily collecting principal and interest, issuing bonds, paying interest on bonds. It would be an outlet for the savings of millions of school children. It might be well to provide for the investment of postal savings funds in them. Trust funds of all kinds would be invested in these bonds. And while the Government, in order to make the bonds float, would be behind them, no man would say that there would ever be any possibility of any loss occurring to the Government as long as the bureau was honestly and fairly conducted. If the Government runs no risk of loss, why should it not lend its credit to that portion of our citizenship whose prosperity means the happiness of all?

Let us now consider for a few moments some of the objections that are urged against such a plan. First, it is said that this bureau would get into politics and become a political organization, loaning money to its political favorites without proper consideration and security. I am frank to admit that if this bureau became partisan and became a political instrumentality that the entire plan would be a failure. Partisanship would be its ruination, as it is the ruination of almost everything that it embraces within the circle of its power. We are continually from day to day in the Federal Government, in State governments, and in municipal governments trying to get away from partisan politics. Its baneful influences is one of the serious objections to our form of government. But it is possible to keep this bureau entirely out of politics. I have provided that the director of the bureau shall be appointed for a term of 10 years by the President and that his appointment must be confirmed by the Senate. It is provided that he can only be removed by the Secretary of Agriculture for cause, and then only upon charges made, and that he must be publicly tried, and that his removal must be approved by the President of the United States. All of the transactions of his office must be public. I make it a criminal offense for any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives or other Government official or member of any political committee to use any influence or attempt to persuade or to use any political influence to induce the bureau to make or refuse to make any loan. The very fact that every act of this bureau would have to be public would be the best protection against the baneful influence of party politics. Every honest citizen would be interested in the carrying out of the work of the bureau in good faith. If the tenure of office of the officials of this bureau were independent of partisan control, and Members of Congress were absolutely prohibited by law from making any recommendations or using any influence to control the action of the bureau, and if every act of the bureau were open to public inspection and public view, I do not believe that party politics would ever succeed in getting its withering influence into the domain of the bureau's action.

Another objection always offered is that this kind of a law would be in the nature of special privilege or class legislation. I have already to a great extent answered this objection at the beginning of my remarks. It is not class legislation and is not open to the charge that we would be enacting laws for the benefit of one class of our citizens only. The direct benefit would come to all classes of citizens. It would take away from the army of consumers and would add to the army of producers. It would increase the efficiency of the producing class. In this we are all directly interested and would all receive benefits. It would improve the quality of our citizenship. It would increase the stability of our Government. It would lessen the army of paupers; decrease the inclination toward crime that poverty and ignorance always breed. It would decrease taxation, because thousands of children growing up in idleness would be transplanted to the healthy atmosphere of enlightened, educated agricultural communities. The fact that the loan is made directly to the farmer does not make it class legislation.

In our Federal reserve act the Government under certain conditions issues money and loans it directly to the bankers, and yet many of the people who are objecting to governmental assistance in the farm-loan business are ardent supporters of the theory that it is proper for the Government to loan its credit to the banks. I mention this instance of Government credit to the banks provided for in the Federal Reserve System without criticism. While the Federal reserve act, in my judgment, has many imperfections and ought to have been amended in some very important respects, yet I believe, as a whole, the law is a good one and that its result will be beneficial. The theory of it is that in times of panic or distress the Government will loan its credit to the banks in order that they may float loans in business matters; and while the banker, of course, gets a benefit, the entire country or the affected community is benefited through this instrumentality of Government in lending its credit to the banker. The principal object of the Federal reserve bank is to prevent panics, and one of the means by which this is sought to be accomplished is that in times of stringency the Government shall loan its credit to the bankers, not because the Government has any more regard for the banker than for other citizens but because the business of the country is transacted through the banks, and if, with the assistance of the Government, the banks can stem the tide, business generally is protected and prosperity retained. So in the farm-loan plan I have proposed the Government lends its great credit to the bonds, so that the farmer can get cheap money, and through his prosperity all of the people may have their happiness increased as well as the cost of living decreased. The instrumentality of Government is exactly the same. It could be said, of course, that if all the people who had loans from the Government refused to pay and if all the people who had the bonds demanded payment the scheme would fail. So it could be said of the Federal Reserve System; if after the Government notes had been turned over to the banks and they in turn had loaned them out to the people everybody refused to pay and all became bankrupt, the Government would fail with the rest. The difference is in favor of governmental support of a farm-loan plan, because the farmer's security is much better than that which the banker offers. Business men fail, stocks of goods burn, railroads become bankrupt, but the land remains intact, and security founded upon it is the best, the surest, and the safest known to man. Moreover, many of those people who are objecting to the Government lending its aid in any farm-loan plan are often found advocating, for instance, a ship subsidy—a direct payment by the Government to a certain kind of business. Many of them were strong advocates of the exemption of American ships from toll when passing through the Panama Canal. I do not criticize these advocates. While I do not agree with them, I concede their honesty; but yet no man who has given the subject any consideration will deny that exemption from tolls when passing through the Panama Canal, for instance, is another form of subsidy, not as honest, in my judgment, as the direct payment. But the man who advocates subsidy, either by a direct payment or by the exemption from taxation of any kind, goes on the theory that if the Government through taxation pays the subsidy the benefits derived by all the people will more than recompense the outlay. This is, perhaps, in a great many instances true; but if these things can be even advocated from an honest standpoint, and I think they can, how much more logical it would be to sustain the proposition of Government assistance in the plan I have outlined, where there is no intention of the Government ever paying one penny toward the great enterprise; where no man who will give it careful and honest study can, in my judgment, reach any other conclusion than that there never could be a condition arise by which the Government could possibly lose anything.

Another illustration not only where Government credit but the direct use of Government funds is employed for the benefit of all the people through the instrumentality of a class of citizens is the organization under the Federal statute of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. This bureau was created by an act of Congress September 2, 1914, to write insurance on American ships and cargoes against the risk of war. Private corporations, taking advantage of the European war, increased the cost of this kind of insurance to such a rate as to materially interfere with shipments of American products. Congress took notice of the condition by the passage of the act which brought this bureau into existence, and provided for the Government going into the insurance business. It was not because Congress desired to give direct financial assistance to those who furnished the produce to be shipped or to those who were engaged in the carrying of the merchandise to foreign shores, although such people incidentally did get a direct benefit from the act. The object of the act, the real reason for its passage, was that through the instrumentality of these particular classes all of the people could receive the benefits of the governmental activity. It is worthy of note, also, to consider the results of this governmental insurance. In the first annual report made by the director of this bureau, for the year ending September 2, 1915, he used the following language:

> The operation of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department during its first year just closed demonstrates, despite persistent claims to the contrary, that the Government can conduct a private business enterprise economically, efficiently, and profitably.

This report not only shows that great benefits were derived by the country generally in the reduction that governmental interference brought about in insurance rates but that the Government had made a considerable profit out of the operations of the bureau. A recent examination of the records of this bureau discloses that since its organization on September 2, 1914, up to April 19, 1916, this bureau has issued 1,420 policies of insurance, involving risks to the amount of $114,883,056 and that the bureau received as premiums for these risks the sum of $2,557,085.14. It had risks on April 19, 1916, outstanding to the amount of $12,857,661 and that its net losses to that date, all paid, were $696,220.05. The total expenses up to April 19, 1916, were $27,744.51. This leaves a net profit to the Government from the business, above all losses and expenses, to the 19th day of April, 1916, of $1,833,120.58.

Another instance where Government funds under laws passed by Congress have been used for the benefit of the people generally through the instrumentality of the farmer is the operation of the Reclamation Bureau. It is conceded, I think, by all who have given any consideration to the subject that great benefits have resulted from the operations of this bureau, and that still greater benefits will result in the future. No man now questions the wisdom of using Government funds through this instrumentality, and no man doubts but that through such use great benefits have come and great benefits will continue to come to the people generally.

The Government many years ago gave millions of acres of public land to corporations in return for the building of railroads across the western plains. In addition to giving the land to railway companies it also loaned its credit for the raising of many millions of dollars for the construction of such railroads. Subsequent events have perhaps demonstrated that the Government was too generous in its gifts for these purposes, but there can be no doubt but that the object of Congress was to benefit the entire country, and to do this it gave direct subsidies and loaned the credit of the Government to private corporations as an instrumentality to bring about the general benefit, and there is no doubt but what the entire country did receive great benefits from this governmental instrumentality.

Government funds have been used in the purchase and development of the Panama Railway Co. In a similar way Government funds are now being used in the construction of a railroad in Alaska. Many people will receive individual benefits and perhaps some of them make vast fortunes on account of the construction of this railroad, but yet the object of Congress in authorizing the use of Government funds for its construction was to bring about beneficial results to all of the people.

Congress has many times recognized that Government assistance to agriculture is not only proper but necessary for the proper development of our country, and for the improvement of agricultural conditions generally. We are appropriating thousands of dollars annually to send men all over the world for the purpose of getting rare seeds and plants for the improvement of agricultural conditions and for the investigation of improved methods of cultivation and development. The object of it all is to improve the happiness and contentment of all classes of people, although the instrumentality through which this is brought about is the farmer. We recognize by our laws—in fact, every civilized Government in the world recognizes by its laws—that agriculture is the foundation not only of all prosperity and happiness, but of life itself, and that when we improve it in any way we bring beneficial results to every home, whether in the country or in the city, to every class of people, regardless of their business or occupation.

Still another very apt illustration of the use of Government credit for the benefit and improvement of conditions generally, through the instrumentality of a class of citizens, is the establishment of the Government Postal Savings System. In this case the Government borrows money of its citizens and pays interest on the same. It agrees to return this money on demand, and it borrows it without any specific governmental use for it. It limits the amount that it will borrow of any one citizen in order to confine the transactions to a class of citizens. One of the objects of the law is to induce the people of small means to avoid extravagance by economizing their savings, and to bring this about the Government pays interest to such people, not because the Government wants the money but because it desires to foster among the people habits of frugality and economy. Another object of this law is to improve business conditions and increase the circulating medium, by bringing into circulation amounts of money that are otherwise hidden and locked up from business transactions. After the Government has borrowed this money from the people it loans a large portion of it to the banks in the various communities where it obtained the money. It charges these banks a higher rate of interest than it pays to those from whom it borrowed the money, and in this way it has made a profit out of the business.

The postal savings systems have been established by practically every civilized government in the world. Reduced to a short definition, our system can be defined as the borrowing of money by the Government from its citizens and the loaning of the same money to another class of citizens. Through this governmental activity we assist financially those from whom we have borrowed the money. We give to a class direct Government assistance by the payment of interest and pledge to them the credit of the Government for money borrowed. We also give direct assistance to the banks when we loan them the money at a less rate than the banks would have to pay in borrowing money from the citizens generally. In other words, in this use of the instrumentality of Government these two classes of people get a direct and positive benefit not shared in by the people generally. The object of the system, however, is to benefit the entire country, improve the business of the entire country, and to increase the amount of money in circulation in the entire country, and these two classes are the instrumentalities through which this object is attained. It is much more a direct benefit to the postal savings depositors who loan the money and the banks that borrow it than the plan I have proposed for the establishment of the bureau of farm loans is beneficial to the farmers who borrow the money.

It is said also that if the Government provides for the loaning of money through a bureau as I have outlined for the farmer, why should it not provide for the loaning of money to other classes of citizens as well? This objection loses sight of the fact that the object of the entire plan is to benefit all the people and not any class; that the farmer is only an instrumentality by which this benefit can be extended to the people, the same as in the Federal reserve act the banker is the instrumentality through which the Government by the use of its credit prevents panics and financial disaster. Under the Federal reserve act the ordinary citizen can not get the United States notes behind which the credit of the Government is lodged. If he applies to the Federal Reserve Board he will find that he must go into the banking business before he can get this favor, if you call it such. Not only must he go into the banking business, but he must go into a certain kind of banking business. And so with the farm-loan plan; if the business man or even the millionaire desires to avail himself of the benefits of the law outlined he must buy the farm, comply with the conditions, and go out among the toilers and engage in agriculture—not by proxy, but in his own proper person. It must be borne in mind, however, in the plan outlined, that not only is the benefit to accrue to all the people, but the Government is amply secured against loss. The Government would not be justified in loaning money to the farmers, even though all the people would benefit by it, if the farmer did not give ample security to prevent any loss coming to the Government. The principle upon which such assistance rests involves not only benefit to the people generally, but security to the Government against loss as well.

Objection is also made to the use of Government credit for the benefit of the farmer, on the ground that it is claimed such a plan would impair the Government credit. As a matter of fact, the plan which I have outlined, if the bureau provided for were honestly managed, would bring in a large profit to the Government. The one-half per cent difference between the rate charged to the farmer and the rate paid by the Government on the bond for the money, would much more than pay all the expenses of operation and would build up in a very short time, an enormous surplus. There would be no doubt if this law were put into operation, that after it had been in force several years and a large surplus had been built up that Congress would perhaps change the law and provide for a smaller margin between the rate on the bond for money borrowed and the rate on the mortgage for money loaned. This surplus would be an element of strength rather than a weakness, and could very properly be used in case of any great emergency. If the money obtained by the Government upon the sale of bonds were invested in some enterprise, in some business, or in some product from which there would be no income, then the objection now under consideration would be valid. If the Government invested these funds in battleships, in armament, and in the raising of large armies, where the investment could not under any possible condition bring a financial return to the Government, then the credit of the Government would be impaired in proportion to the amount of the bonds issued, but if these funds were invested in real estate mortgages, carefully supervised and honestly managed on a conservative basis, then the Government would have security upon absolutely the best property in the world, in fact the only property that is, after all, the foundation of all prosperity, of all happiness, and of all wealth. This security would be as stable as the Government itself. In fact, the stability of the Government as well as its very existence depends upon the production of the soil, and a Government will fail just as soon as the land fails to produce. The plan proposed in its operations can be compared to a bank. The most successful bank, the one that stands highest in financial circles, is the bank that has not only the largest deposits but that has invested these deposits in the safest line of investments. If two banks equally honestly managed, having equal capital and having equal deposits, but one having its deposits invested in good securities and the other with its deposits in its vault should desire to borrow money, there is no doubt but that on such a showing, the money loaner would prefer to loan his money to the bank that had its deposits properly invested, although it would be known, as a matter of fact, that if all the depositors of this bank on the same day demanded their money, they would not be able to get it, and the bank would have to fail, while the other bank, with its deposits all in its vault, would be able to pay its depositors on demand dollar for dollar. So it would be with the bureau of farm loans, taking the people's money and issuing certificates of deposit therefor, due in 15 years, and investing this money in the fundamental security of the country, where the interest payments would be continually coming in. Its resources would be absolutely the best known to man. If honestly managed it could not fail. Even though the Government itself should be destroyed the security of this bureau would remain intact. The one thing only that could destroy it would be some act of God that would bring about the annihilation not only of the Government but of the productibility of the soil.

The plan which I have briefly outlined would in my judgment be workable and would add immensely to the prosperity of all our people. There would be no dangers to the Government involved. It would not mean the increasing of money or the expansion of the currency. To the extent of its operation it would interfere with men engaged in the loaning of money upon real estate. It might have some influence upon the savings banks of the country, and in this way there might be instances where there would be personal loss, but if we can devise a plan by which the farmer who wants the money and the individual who has it to loan can be brought into direct contact, and thus the consumer and the producer brought directly together, we ought to do it, even though in the doing of it we take away the profitable occupation of a few who standing between have taken their toll as the money has passed from one to the other.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks the Senate bill 3201, to which I referred and which was introduced by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). If there be no objection, permission is granted.

The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill (S. 3201) providing for the establishment of a bureau of farm loans in the Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be called the bureau of farm loans. There shall be appointed a director of said bureau, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum, and an assistant director, who shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum. The assistant director shall perform the duties of the director of said bureau in case of the death, resignation, removal from office, or absence of the director, and he shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of Agriculture, by the director, or by law. There shall also be in said bureau a chief clerk and such other agents, clerks, inspectors, and employees as are provided for in this act or as may hereafter be authorized by law, or as may be authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture. The director and assistant director shall hold their respective offices for a term of 10 years and shall be removed from office during such term only for cause. The Secretary of Agriculture can remove either of said officers for a violation of law or neglect of duty, but only after a public trial upon charges duly made, of which the accused official shall have reasonable notice, and then only upon the approval in writing of the President of the United States. The director and assistant director shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and in case there is a vacancy in either of said offices the appointment to fill the same shall be made for the full term.

SEC. 2. That under the rules and regulations made by the director of said bureau and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in accordance with the provisions hereinafter provided, the said bureau shall make loans on farm lands located in any of the States of the Union or in the District of Columbia. Said loans shall be secured by mortgage made payable to said bureau, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable semiannually. No loan shall be made upon any tract of land less than 10 acres in area. Loans shall be made only for $100 or any multiple of $100 up to and including $2,000. The mortgage securing any such loan shall provide that at the end of five years one-tenth of said loan shall become due, and that thereafter one-tenth of said loan shall become due each year until the entire loan matures. Said mortgage shall also provide that whenever any interest is due, the mortgagor or his grantee shall have the right to pay the entire loan or to make a payment of $100 or any multiple thereof on the principal thereof, and upon such payment being made the interest on the amount so paid shall thereupon cease. Said mortgage shall also provide that both principal and interest shall draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from maturity.

SEC. 3. That no person shall be entitled to a loan of money from said bureau until he has made application therefor under oath upon blanks to be furnished by said bureau. Such application can be sworn to before any person authorized to administer an oath, and all postmasters and their deputies in the United States are hereby authorized to administer oaths to applicants making application for loans under this act and to administer oaths to such applicants or other persons to any other affidavits made necessary by the rules and regulations of said bureau. Whenever any oath is administered by a postmaster or deputy postmaster no charge shall be made therefor. No person shall be entitled to a loan under this act who is not of good moral character and who does not establish to the satisfaction of said bureau that he is honest and bears a good reputation in the neighborhood where he resides. No loan shall be made to any person who is not an actual resident on and engaged in the cultivation of the land offered as security: Provided, That where the applicant for the loan is endeavoring to secure the money for the purpose of building a house upon the land or for the purpose of making part payment upon the purchase price thereof, the bureau can waive this stipulation if convinced that it is the intention of applicant as soon as possible to reside upon the land and to cultivate the same, the intention of this act being to provide money only for persons who intend to reside upon and cultivate the land which they offer as security. No loan shall be made for more than one-half of the value of the land offered as security and only for one or more of the following purposes:

First. To make payment of part of the purchase money of the land to be mortgaged.

Second. To pay off an indebtedness already existing against said land.

Third. To build a house, barn, or other building or buildings upon said land: Provided, That said bureau, under proper rule and regulation, can provide that not to exceed 50 per cent of any loan may be used for the purchase of stock and farm implements. Any applicant or other person testifying falsely to any material fact in any application or other affidavit connected with any loan under this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of perjury and punished accordingly.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every postmaster, deputy postmaster, or other employee or official of the Government, without fee or pay therefor, to make confidential reports to said bureau upon request therefor, upon anything pertaining to any loan and upon the character or standing of any applicant or witness. Such postmaster, deputy postmaster, or other officer shall also, when requested by said bureau, appoint appraisers to appraise the land offered for security under the regulations of and upon the blanks furnished by said bureau.

SEC. 5. That any person applying for a loan shall furnish to said bureau an abstract of title to the land offered as security and shall pay all the necessary expenses connected with the making of said loan. Such applicant shall furnish conveyance for the appraisers appointed to fix a value upon land offered for the loan, or shall pay for the transportation of said appraisers to and from said land, and if required by said appraisers, he shall pay a fee to each of them, not exceeding two in all, which fee shall be ascertained in advance and fixed by the official appointing said appraisers. It shall be the duty of said bureau and the officials appointing said appraisers to select efficient, qualified, and unbiased persons, but, at the same time, to regulate any fee that they may charge for such service so as to make the same as small as possible. Said appraisers shall make return upon blanks provided by the bureau and shall swear to the same before some person qualified under this act to administer an oath.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of every United States district attorney or deputy district attorney, upon request from said bureau, to examine the abstract of title to any land offered as security under this act and to make return thereof to the said bureau. It shall likewise be the duty of any district attorney or deputy district attorney, when requested by the bureau, to foreclose any mortgage taken as security for a loan under this act and to prosecute the same to final judgment. All such services so rendered by an attorney connected with the Department of Justice shall be a part of his official duty and shall be rendered without pay, but said bureau shall pay in all cases the actual expenses of any such attorney in connection with such litigation.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of any post-office inspector, United States marshal, deputy United States marshal, or other employee or inspector of any other department, when engaged in official business in the vicinity of any land mortgaged to said bureau, upon request of said bureau, to make a personal inspection of the same and to report thereon to said bureau. Such inspection shall be made without charge, but said bureau shall pay the actual expenses, if any, made necessary thereby. It shall likewise be the duty of any postmaster, deputy postmaster, or other governmental official residing or doing business in the vicinity of any land that has been mortgaged to said bureau, upon request of said bureau, to make a report upon said loan or as to whether the money borrowed upon said land has been expended or is being expended in accordance with the purposes for which the same was loaned, and in making any loan under this act the said bureau can withhold, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, any part of the same for the purpose of insuring the application of said loan to the purposes for which the same was made.

SEC. 8. That should the owner of any land mortgaged to said bureau fail or neglect to pay the interest thereon at or before the time when the same is due, or permit the taxes on the land to become delinquent, or neglect or refuse, without the consent of said bureau, to apply the money borrowed in accordance with the statements made in the application for the loan, or if he has made any false statement as to any material matter in said application, or if he neglects to properly care for the improvements on said land, or if he do any other act that materially injuries the value of the security, either by overt act or by neglect and inattention, or should said land, without the consent of the bureau, cease to be farmed and cultivated, then the said bureau shall have the right, at its election and without notice, to declare the entire amount secured by said mortgage due and payable, and may take any steps necessary for the foreclosure of said mortgage and the collection of said loan, and from and after said election so made by the bureau the amount secured by said mortgage shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

SEC. 9. That in making any payment of interest or payment of the principal, or part payment of the same, upon any loan made under this act, the person making such payment can pay the same to any postmaster designated by said bureau, and the same shall be transmitted by said postmaster either directly to the bureau or to such Federal reserve bank as may be designated by the bureau, and such postmaster shall immediately notify the bureau of such payment and the transmission of the money so paid, and thereupon credit shall be given for the payment of such money as of the date the same was paid to the postmaster. The said bureau shall notify each person to whom a loan has been made as to the post office where payments upon his loan can be made. The bureau may make such designation by general circular or by specific notice in writing, and can designate by such notice a post office within a county or other district to which all payments within such district can be made.

SEC. 10. That the bureau shall deposit all money it receives in the Federal reserve banks provided for in the act of December 23, 1913, and in making disbursements of money it shall do so by check upon such banks. Any Federal reserve bank organized under the said Federal reserve act is hereby authorized and instructed to receive such deposits and to pay checks or drafts drawn by said bureau upon said deposits, the same as other accounts authorized to be held by said banks under said act.

SEC 11. That the bureau shall have power to sue and to be sued, to complain and defend in any court of law or equity having jurisdiction of the subject matter in litigation. To protect any loan it may pay the taxes or any other prior lien due and unpaid against the land securing said loan, and in such case the amount paid in liquidation of such taxes or lien shall be added to and become a part of its mortgage on said real estate and from the date of such payment shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. It shall have the right and authority to purchase, at sale under judgments or decrees of court rendered in foreclosure proceedings of any mortgage it owns, the land so mortgaged, but in such case it shall not bid a greater amount for such land at such sale than the amount due in such proceedings, together with costs and expenses expended in relation to said loan. In case the bureau obtains title as set forth in this section to any real estate, it shall have authority to sell the same at such price as may be for the best interests of said bureau in the judgment of the director and to convey title to the purchaser thereof by deed signed and acknowledged by the director. In making such sale it shall be authorized to take a return mortgage from the purchaser for part of the purchase price thereof in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. That in order to secure money for the purpose of making loans as hereinbefore provided the said bureau shall issue bonds which shall be the obligation both as to principal and interest of the United States. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations of $100 or any multiple thereof and shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually. Said bonds, together with the interest thereon, and also all notes and mortgages taken by said bureau upon farm lands, shall be entirely free from all taxation of every kind, national, State, and municipal. When in need of money for the purpose of making loans as provided in this act, the bureau shall give notice of its intention to issue bonds and invite from the public generally subscriptions to said bonds. If the amount of subscriptions shall exceed the then demand of the bureau, it shall give preference in accepting money for said bonds to those offered in the smallest amounts, the intention being to give as wide circulation and distribution to said bonds throughout the country as is possible. Said bonds shall be issued for the term of 15 years, with the privilege on the part of said bureau of paying the same upon the date of maturity of any interest payment after 10 years. After this act shall have been in active operation for one year said bureau shall have authority to change the rate of interest charged for farm loans thereafter made and to also change the rate of interest upon the bonds herein provided for thereafter issued, it being the object of this act to pay as low a rate of interest upon said bonds as will float said bonds at par and to charge as low a rate of interest upon the farm loans herein provided for as will bring in sufficient revenue to pay said bonds, the interest thereon, the expenses connected with the making of said loans, and any losses, if any, incurred therein.

SEC. 13. That it shall be unlawful for any Senator, Member of the House of Representatives, or any other official of the Government of the United States to use or attempt to use any political or other influence to induce said bureau to make or refuse to make any loan or loans. Any person found guilty of the conduct in this section prohibited shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $2,000.

SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any official of any State or any officer or member of any political committee to use or attempt to use any political or other influence to induce said bureau to make or refuse to make any loan or loans. Any person found guilty of the conduct in this section prohibited shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 15. That it shall be the duty of the officials of said bureau to give publicity to any letter or communication from any of the persons named in the above two sections, requesting or urging said bureau to make or to refuse to make and loan and to give to the Department of Justice the names of any of said mentioned persons attempting to influence the action of said bureau in allowing or refusing any application for a loan, together with the evidence connected with said attempt, whether the same be in writing or otherwise.

SEC. 16. That any person who shall make any false representation to said bureau in connection with the making or the investigation of any application for a loan shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I feel that the Senate and the country owe a debt of gratitude to the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and to both Senators from Nebraska for their addresses this morning. They all deal with very vital and important questions that affect the people who live in the United States.

The subject of tenancy of farms is one that has attracted the attention of all economists. It is a very serious evil and it must sometimes be handled in some such way as the Senator from Texas suggests. Both the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are pioneers in the study of questions of this sort, and what they have to say is entitled to the greatest consideration of the Senate. I feel personally that the country is not yet ready for either of the measures that they suggest. It is for that reason that I have not directed my efforts along those lines. I feel personally that the pending bill is as far as the country will warrant us in proceeding at this time. Unless some one else is prepared to speak I ask that the reading of the bill by committee amendments be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 37, line 10, after the words "section 12," to strike out "or section 18," and in the same line, after the word "act," to insert "and those taken as additional security for existing loans," so as to make the clause read:

Third. To accept any mortgages on real estate except first mortgages created subject to all limitations imposed by section 12 of this act and those taken as additional security for existing loans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 21, after the word "shall," to insert "also," so as to make the clause read:

Fifth. To demand or receive, under any form or pretense, any commission or charge not specifically authorized in this act. This provision shall also apply to joint-stock land banks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National farm-loan associations: Special provisions," in section 15, page 38, line 11, after the word "expenses," to strike out "shall" and insert "may," so as to make the clause read:

Such member may, at his option, pay the expenses for appraisal, examining title, drawing legal papers, recording and similar services, or he may require such expenses to be advanced by the Federal land bank making the loan, in which case said expenses may be made a part of the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments. Such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the 50 per cent limited in section 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Unlimited department," in section 16, page 39, line 9, after the word "department," to strike out "or to the savings department," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 16. That the Federal farm-loan board is authorized and directed to create in each Federal land bank a special department for the issue of farm-loan bonds unlimited, to be known as the unlimited department, and also to set apart from time to time for the purposes of said unlimited department such portion of the capital stock of said bank, not exceeding one-half, as its needs may require. Whenever an unlimited department is created in any land bank there shall also be established a limited department, which shall carry on all business of said bank which is not assigned to the unlimited department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Agents of Federal land banks," in section 17, on page 40, line 22, after the word "incorporated," to strike out "trust company, mortgage company, or savings institution, chartered by the" and insert "bank, trust company, or mortgage institution chartered by the Federal Government, or by the," so as to make the clause read:

No other agent than a duly incorporated bank, trust company, or mortgage institution, chartered by the Federal Government, or by the State in which it has its principal office, shall be employed under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 3, after the word "agents," to strike out "the actual expense of appraising the land offered as security for a loan, examining and certifying the title thereof, and making, executing, and recording the mortgage papers, and in addition may allow said agents," and in line 8, after the word "unpaid," to strike out "capital" and insert "principal," so as to make the clause read:

Federal land banks may pay to such agents not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon the unpaid principal of said loan.

Mr. SMOOT. The paragraph as proposed to be amended would read as follows:

Federal land banks may pay to such agents not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon the unpaid principal of said loan.

I hardly see why the original language of the bill was not in better form than as it is proposed to amend it. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is to be amended on lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, why the word "capital" would not be better than the word "principal," in line 8.

Mr. HOLLIS. Capital, in connection with money, is usually employed as opposed to dividends meaning the same as capital stock. The principal of a loan is a definite description of what we mean to reach here, and therefore we thought it to be the more apt word.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that it was the object of the provision, as amended, to pay to these agents one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon any loans that they may secure?

Mr. HOLLIS. On any loans that they secure for the land bank, of course. I can explain that to the Senator. The total allowance for all expenses and profits on loans under this system is limited to 1 per cent on the principal. Originally the bill was drawn so that half of that went to the land bank and half to the loan association. Later the bill was drafted so that the land bank handled it all and the loan association got just what was left after the expenses were paid in the form of dividends. When a loan is made through the agency of a bank the 1 per cent belongs entirely to the land bank, and it may allow not to exceed one-half of it to the agent doing the business and indorsing the loan so that it becomes responsible.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that; but under the reading of the provision as it now stands it seems to me that the Federal land bank would be allowed one-half of 1 per cent upon the principal of the note as long as the note was not paid in full; in other words, if they made a loan of $1,000 for 25 years they would be entitled to one-half of 1 per cent for that full length of time upon that amount if the note had not been reduced, or if in the meantime it had been reduced each year, still they would be allowed one-half of 1 per cent upon whatever amount of the principal of the note was unpaid. Is that the intention of the framers of the bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is correct. If the loan was for $2,000 and the amortization payment was so arranged that $100 would be paid on the principal each year, there would be one-half of 1 per cent on $2,000 for the first year, and one-half of 1 per cent on $1,900 for the second year, and so on. It is to cover the expenses of collecting and the risk the bank assumes in indorsing the loan. There are to be payments every year; the bank is to collect them and forward them to the Federal land banks; and for the entire service of indorsing and becoming liable on the loan and collecting and forwarding it they receive not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent a year. If it proves to be lucrative the farm-loan board can direct that it shall be lowered. It is not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was rather a high rate to pay the Federal land bank one-half of 1 per cent of all the rate of interest over and above the 4 per cent or 5 per cent, between 4 and 5 per cent, the Federal land bank getting the business and the bank itself receiving the other half doing virtually all the business and furnishing the money and everything else. I thought it was an unfair distribution of the 1 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. My own belief is that one-half of 1 per cent to the land bank will result in dividends to the borrowers; I hope so, and I so expect from my investigation; and that the one-half paid the agent will be fully adequate. The farm-loan board may order it to be reduced. If the one-half of 1 per cent which goes to the land bank is too much, it will be returned to the borrower in the form of dividends. So no harm will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to be reduced. Of course, the words "not to exceed" give the power to reduce it, and perhaps there is no particular objection to it, but I would very much rather see the bill read "not to exceed one-third of 1 per cent per annum upon the unpaid principal of the loan."

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to see the bill so drafted that all the rates would be very much lower, but I agree with the Senator that you always want to provide for enough revenue to run the Government, and this provides a way for the money to go back to those who contribute it in an equitable proportion. I hope we have our percentage high enough so that this will surely pay the bill; and that is why I favor making it as high as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that of course one advantage is that as he perhaps knows it is none too high until the bank gets into full swing and operation; but I do believe that it is too high after the banks are established and the loans are made. If the bank is a success, then, in my opinion, one-half of 1 per cent per annum is too high.

Mr. HOLLIS. I agree with the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 10, after the word "paid," to strike out "to agents under the provisions of this section" and insert "by borrowers for appraisal, examining title, drawing legal papers, recording, and similar services"; in line 14, after the word "payments," to strike out "as provided in section 15 of this act"; and in line 14, after the word "act," to insert: "Such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the 50 per cent limited in section 12," so as to make the clause read:

Actual expenses paid by borrowers for appraisal, examining title, drawing legal papers, recording, and similar services may be added to the face of the loan and paid off in amortization payments. Such addition to the loan shall not be permitted to increase said loan above the 50 per cent limited in section 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, while a little out of order, I call the Senator's attention to the language on page 40, line 12. The language is, "because of some peculiar local conditions." I suggest that the words "some peculiar" be stricken out, and just let it read "because of local conditions."

Mr. HOLLIS. There was a reason for putting in the words "some peculiar" there. It will be easily understood that if a borrower can go to a bank and get all the benefits of this act they will not want to form farm-loan associations. This language is employed to arrest the attention of the farm-loan board and have them understand that it really meant something. Therefore I like those words because they challenged the attention of the Senator from Ohio, and they will challenge the attention of the farm-loan board. They can not do any harm, and they may prove restrictive. I hope so.

Mr. POMERENE. I dare say if the learned Senator in charge of the bill were sitting as a court he would have some difficulty in giving those words a judicial construction.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there ought to be some peculiar condition existing, and if the word "peculiar" were left out it seems to me it would be wide open as to any condition arising that this provision of the bill would apply to. I think it is as moderate a word as could be found, and that it would at least give notice. I think that is all there is in it; it is simply a notice.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall not insist on an amendment, but certainly it is rather peculiar.

Mr. BRADY. Before leaving page 41 I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a little more fully relative to the discussion which took place between himself and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] concerning lines 3 to 9, on page 41, and from line 21, on page 41, to line 4, on page 42. It seems to me that it would indicate that the agent negotiating the loan would have to become responsible for the loan.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. BRADY. And that the only compensation the bank or trust company or mortgage institution would receive for making the loan and guaranteeing it would be the one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BRADY. Instead of that being too large a rate it seems to me it is rather small, and that that feature of the bill should receive very careful consideration at the hands of the Senate, for it does not seem possible that a responsible banking institution would negotiate a loan of $10,000 and look after it for 36 years for any less than one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator will see it is one-half of 1 per cent of the amount due each year.

Mr. BRADY. I understand that.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator will understand, of course, that this does not require the bank which indorses to embark any of its capital. This is in the nature of an acceptance. It merely requires its indorsement. This is a proposition to loan on farm land not to exceed 50 per cent of its value. We want to enlist the interest of the bank so that it will be sure not to allow a loan to be made for more than 50 per cent of the value and so that the loan will surely be paid. We secure that interest of the bank by securing its indorsement, and we limit the payment to one-half of 1 per cent on the amount of the principal due each year. If agents can not be found who will do it for that sum, we shall not be able to do business on that basis, because we can not allow more than 1 per cent any way for expense and profit, and half of that ought to go to the Federal land bank. So if they are not able to do it for that percentage this section will not be operative, but we have not any more to pay them even if we think they ought to have more.

Mr. BRADY. Then, in case the agent made the loan, the agent making the loan would take one-half of 1 per cent, and the other one-half of 1 per cent would go to the Federal land bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. BRADY. Thus making the full 1 per cent which is to be allowed, which the bank and agent would be permitted to make on the loan.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BRADY. It seems to me that that is a very equitable provision.

Mr. HOLLIS. The committee felt that it was such.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 42, after line 9, to strike out:

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

SEC. 18. That the Federal farm-loan board is authorized and empowered to permit any Federal land bank to establish a savings department for receiving time deposits on which interest may be paid. The books, funds, earnings, and reserves of said savings department shall be kept separate. The capital of said land bank shall not be available for any debts or obligations of said savings department as long as any farm-loan bonds issued by said bank are outstanding and unsatisfied. Said savings department shall contribute to the general expenses of said bank its proportionate share, based upon the amount of farm-loan bonds and time deposits outstanding in the separate departments of said bank.

Every savings or time deposit shall be subject to not less than 30 days' notice before the whole or any part of the same is paid or withdrawn, but no land bank shall be obliged to avail itself of such notice when payment or withdrawal is requested.

Each Federal land bank shall maintain a reserve of at least 5 per cent of all time or savings deposits received by it, said reserve to be in cash or invested so as to be quickly available, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board. The remaining 95 per cent of such deposits may be invested as follows:

(a) In first mortgages on farm lands within the district for a term not exceeding five years, subject to be called on 60 days' notice at any time after one year, said mortgages to be subject to the restrictions imposed and conditions provided under sections 12 and 20 of this act, except as to term and amortization.

(b) In United States Government bonds or farm-loan bonds issued under this act.

(c) In such securities as the Federal farm-loan board may prescribe. Preference shall be given to first mortgages above described.

Interest on time or savings deposits shall in no case exceed the current rate on bonds issued by the land bank receiving such deposits, and any agreement for a higher rate of interest shall be invalid.

Time or savings deposits may be received from any person, firm, or corporation, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board. Each depositor may receive a deposit book, on which all deposits and withdrawals shall be entered, or the deposit may be evidenced by a certificate which shall specify the rate of interest to be paid and the notice of withdrawal required.

Every national farm-loan association shall by its secretary-treasurer receive and pay out time or savings deposits as agents for the Federal land bank of the district, and said secretary-treasurer shall forthwith forward any deposit so received to said land bank. Farm-loan associations receiving and forwarding, or paying out, deposits as aforesaid, shall receive such compensation therefor as the Federal farm-loan board shall fix.

All net earnings of savings departments shall be carried to surplus account and invested according to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in division (c), subhead "Joint-stock land banks," on page 44, line 21, to change the number of the section from "19" to "18"; on page 45, line 3, after the word "bank," to strike out "shall" and insert "may"; and in line 4, before the word "than," to strike out "not less" and insert "more," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 18. That corporations, to be known as joint-stock land banks, for carrying on the business of lending on farm-mortgage security and issuing farm-loan bonds, may be formed by any number of natural persons not less than 10. They shall be organized subject to the requirements and under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors of every joint-stock land bank may consist of more than five members.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 23, before the word "deposits," to strike out "accept" and insert "receive"; in the same line, after the word "deposits," to strike out "of current funds payable upon demand"; and in line 25, after the word "act," to strike out:

Provided, however, That this restriction shall not apply to prevent the acceptance of time deposits, as provided in section 18 of this act for Federal land banks.

So as to make the clause read:

No joint-stock land bank shall have power to issue or obligate itself for outstanding farm-loan bonds in excess of fifteen times the amount of its capital and surplus, or to receive deposits or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 17, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty"; in line 19, after the word "provisions," to insert "of the paragraphs designated first, sixth, eighth, ninth, and twelfth"; in line 22, after the word "made," to strike out "which are not" and insert "in excess of 50 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged lands, and all loans shall be"; and on page 47, line 1, after the words "principal office," to insert "or within some State contiguous to such State," so as to make the clause read:

Joint-stock land banks shall not be subject to the provisions of section 13 or section 20 of this act as to interest rates on mortgage loans or farm-loan bonds, nor to the provisions of the paragraphs designated first, sixth, eighth, ninth, and twelfth of section 12 as to restrictions on mortgage loans: Provided, however, That no loans shall be made in excess of 50 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged lands, and all loans shall be secured by first mortgages on farm land within the State in which such joint-stock land bank has its principal office or within some State contiguous to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 12, after the word "section," to strike out "19" and insert "18," so as to make the clause read:

Each joint-stock land bank organized under this act shall have authority to issue bonds based upon mortgages taken by it in accordance with the terms of this act. Such bonds shall be in form prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board, and it shall be stated in such bonds that such bank is organized under section 18 of this act, is under Federal supervision, and operates under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16, page 47, the last clause read being as follows:

Farm-loan bonds issued by joint-stock land banks shall be called joint-stock bonds.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he does not think that the bonds referred to in the text of the bill as "joint-stock bonds" should be called "joint-stock land bonds"? The banks which issue such bonds have been called all the way through the bill "joint-stock land banks."

Mr. HOLLIS. The reason for placing this definition here was merely to describe these bonds for the purposes of this act and to distinguish them from farm-loan bonds, limited or unlimited, issued by the Federal land bank. I have no idea what they will be called in practice, but this is an apt name by which to refer to them in other sections of the act. I merely wanted a short name for such bonds, so that it would not take too many words. I would just as lief call them "class C bonds," or anything else the Senator desires; but the object of designating the bonds as we have done in the bill is what I have stated.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator feels, then, that it would be perfectly easy to distinguish these bonds by calling them "joint-stock bonds" instead of "joint-stock land bonds"?

Mr. HOLLIS. It seems to me so.

Mr. BRADY. If the Senator from New Hampshire feels that that description will answer the purpose, I have no objection.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think it will.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, under subhead "Appraisal," on page 47, line 18, to change the number of the section from "20" to "19."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 6, after the words "with the," to strike out "affidavit provided for in section 7 of this act" and insert "application for the loan," so as to make the clause read:

The written report of said loan committee shall be submitted to the Federal land bank, together with the application for the loan, and the directors of said land bank shall examine said written report when they pass upon the loan application which it accompanies, but they shall not be bound by said appraisal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 13, after the word "application," to strike out "affidavit," so as to make the clause read:

Before any mortgage loan is made by any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank it shall refer the application and written report of the loan committee to one or more of the land-bank appraisers appointed under the authority of section 3 of this act, and such appraiser or appraisers shall investigate and make a written report upon the land offered as security for said loan. No such loan shall be made by said land bank unless said written report is favorable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 23, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "twenty-two," so as to make the clause read:

Whenever any Federal land bank or joint stock land bank shall desire to issue farm-loan bonds under the provisions of section 22 of this act the Federal farm-loan board shall refer the application of such land bank to one or more of the special appraisers appointed under the authority of section 3 of this act. Such special appraiser or appraisers shall make such examination and appraisal of the mortgages offered as collateral security for such bonds as the Federal farm-loan board shall direct, and shall make a written report to said board. No issue of farm-loan bonds shall be authorized unless the Federal farm-loan board shall approve such issue in writing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 22, after the word "directors," to strike out "of any farm-loan association," so as to make the clause read:

No borrower under this act shall be eligible as an appraiser under this section, but borrowers may act as members of a loan committee in any case where they are not personally interested in the loan under consideration. When any member of a loan committee or of a board of directors is interested, directly or indirectly, in a loan, a majority of the board of directors shall appoint a substitute to act in his place in passing upon such loan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Powers of Federal farm-loan board," on page 50, line 2, to change the number of the section from "21" to "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 22, after the word "penal," to strike out "sum" and insert "sums," so as to make the clause read:

(f) To prescribe the form and terms of farm-loan bonds, and the form, terms, and penal sums of all surety bonds required under this act and of such other surety bonds as they shall deem necessary, such surety bonds to cover financial loss as well as faithful performance of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 51, to insert:

(g) To require Federal land banks to pay forthwith to any Federal land bank their equitable proportion of any sums advanced by said land bank to pay the coupons of any other land bank, basing said required payments on the amount of farm-loan bonds issued by each land bank and actually outstanding at the time of such requirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 7, to change the letter in parentheses from "g" to "h."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Applications for farm-loan bonds," on page 51, line 11, to change the number of the section from "22" to "21."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Issue of farm-loan bonds," on page 52, line 18, to change the number of the section from "23" to "22"; and in line 21, after the word "twenty," to strike out "two," and insert "one"; so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 22. That whenever any farm-loan registrar shall receive from the Federal farm-loan board notice that it has approved any issue of farm-loan bonds under the provisions of section 21, he shall forthwith take such steps as may be necessary, in accordance with the provisions of this act, to insure the prompt execution of said bonds and the delivery of the same to the land bank applying therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Form of farm-loan bonds," on page 54, line 18, to change the number of the section from "24" to "23," and in line 20, after the words "denominations of," to insert "$25, $50"; so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 23. That all bonds provided for in this act shall be issued under the authority and by the direction of the Federal farm-loan board. They shall be issued in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000. They shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to be paid and retired at the option of the land bank at any time after 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, whose amount and term shall be fixed by the Federal farm-loan board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 6, after the word "concerning," to insert "the form of farm-loan bonds, and"; so as to make the clause read:

The Federal farm-loan board shall prescribe rules and regulations concerning the form of farm-loan bonds, and the circumstances and manner in which farm-loan bonds shall be paid and retired under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading down to the word "banks," in line 19, page 55, as follows:

Farm-loan bonds shall be delivered through the registrar of the district to the bank applying for the same.

In order to furnish suitably engraved bonds for delivery to Federal land banks and joint stock land banks, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeits and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantities of such bonds of the denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000 as may be required to supply such land banks.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, on page 55, line 18, I move to insert "$25, $50," so as to correspond with the provision on the preceding page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 18, after the word "of" it is proposed to insert "$25, $50."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before proceeding to the next subdivision, I should like to ask the Senate to recur to page 35 on which, with the preceding page, the powers of the Federal land banks are defined. Under the fifth subdivision it will be perceived that the Federal land bank is given authority:

To acquire and dispose of—

(a) Such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business, which, however, may be in part leased to others for revenue purposes.

(b) Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security.

(c) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it.

Of course, the land bank ought to be given power to acquire such real estate as is essential for the conduct of its business. It also should be given the power, as provided in subdivision (c), to acquire lands in satisfaction of debts or sold under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it; but why invest it with unlimited power to buy "parcels of land mortgaged to it as security"? And why should a land bank be permitted to speculate in the lands which it holds as security?

Furthermore, it will be observed that, while it is there given power to acquire such lands, by subdivision (c) it is given the same power to acquire lands which shall be taken in satisfaction of debts or sold under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it, but such lands it can hold for no longer than five years, when it must get rid of them. The land, however, acquired under subdivision (b) being parcels of land held by it as security, it may purchase and apparently hold for an indefinite period. I should like to have a little enlightenment from the Senator from New Hampshire upon the significance of subdivision (b).

Mr. HOLLIS. Subdivision (b) was amended this morning to read:

Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security where default has occurred.

That was the intention. In some States the actual title to the land is passed by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and the mortgagee may take possession on default without court proceedings. This was made to cover cases of that kind. It should, however, only cover such cases where default has occurred.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I ask the Senator if that is not covered by the next subdivision, which reads:

Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debt or purchased at sales.

That is to say, under the terms of subdivision (c) the land bank may take a piece of property in satisfaction of a debt to it. I still question the advisability of giving the land bank the power to buy any piece of property that is mortgaged to it as security because there has been default in the mortgage, inasmuch as that would easily permit a man who wanted to sell his land to the bank to suffer a default and then the power would exist in the bank to buy that land of the man upon just such terms as they might agree upon.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, of course, if there were default and the land were acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments or decrees, then the provisions of subdivision (c) would apply, and the lands could only be held for five years. That is the intention; but subdivision (b) was put in at the suggestion of a member of the committee, who called attention to the fact that in some States the title actually passed to the mortgagee when the mortgage was made; that it was a title that would pass, subject to defeasance on the condition being filled; and that subdivision (c) would not cover such cases in his State. Therefore he said this provision ought to be put in; and it would seem where it is provided that parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts may be held only for five years and where subdivision (b) says that parcels of land mortgaged to the land bank as security can only be acquired where default has occurred, that it would be covered; but I know the Senator from Montana is an able lawyer, and if he thinks otherwise and can suggest any other way to arrange it to cover all cases I shall be very glad to accept an amendment. It was not on my suggestion that the provision was inserted.

Mr. WALSH. I think that it is a very questionable power to put in the hands of the Federal land bank to acquire without restriction and to hold without restriction, and for an unlimited time, any land pledged to it as security for indebtedness.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is not the intention of the act, of course, and if the Senator will allow the paragraph to be passed over I will take that up and draw it so that there will not be any question about it.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, under the subhead "Special provisions of farm-loan bonds," on page 57, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 25. That the form of farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be prepared by the Federal farm-loan board. The form of farm-loan bonds issued by a Federal land bank shall include, among other provisions, a copy of this section of this act, and a statement that the assets of all the Federal land banks and of one farm-loan association are jointly and severally liable for the payment of each bond, and shall further state the physical basis of such bonds in farm lands, and whether the first mortgages held as collateral security for its payment have been received from an association with a limited or an unlimited liability, and such other information as may be prescribed by the Federal farm-loan board.

Each bond shall also contain a certificate in the face thereof, signed by the farm-loan commissioner, to the effect that this bond has the approval in form and issue of the Federal farm-loan board and is legal and regular in all respects. It shall be signed by the president of the bank issuing the same and attested by its secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 6, after the word "Sec.," to strike out "25" and insert "24"; in the same line, before the word "land," to strike out "Each" and insert "That each Federal"; in line 7, before the word "bound," to strike out "held to be"; in the same line, after the words "of its," to strike out "president" and insert "officers"; and in line 8, after the word "signing," to insert "and issuing," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 24. That each Federal land bank shall be bound in all respects by the acts of its officers in signing and issuing farm-loan bonds and by the acts of the Federal farm loan board in authorizing their issue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 10, to strike out:

Said bonds shall state that they are authorized by the Federal farm loan board under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 12, to strike out:

There shall appear in the face of each farm-loan bond provided for in this act the statement that such bond is not taxable by national, State, or municipal authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 9, to insert:

Every farm-loan bond issued by a Federal land bank shall be signed by its president and attested by its secretary, and shall contain in the face thereof a certificate signed by the farm loan commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of the Federal farm-loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the Federal farm loan board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by National, State, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security of Government bonds or first mortgages on farm lands, indorsed by farm-loan associations having double or unlimited liability of their members, as the case may be, and at least equal in amount to the bonds issued; and that all Federal land banks, stating the approximate amount of their aggregate capital and surplus, are liable for the payment of each bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to question the wisdom of the last clause of the amendment found on page 59, "that all Federal land banks, stating the approximate amount of their aggregate capital and surplus, are liable for the payment of each bond," or, rather, that portion of it expressed by the language, "stating the approximate amount of their aggregate capital and surplus." That is changing at all times; is it not?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but that would apply as of the time the bond was issued, and would not be reduced until the bond was paid.

Mr. WALSH. So that it would be substantially stable and the representation would be substantially accurate during the entire life of the bond?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; it would not be less than that until the bond was redeemed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, under the subhead "Application of amortization and interest payments," on page 60, line 3, to change the number of the section from 26 to 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to the bottom of page 62.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning on line 1, page 63.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reserve and dividends on land banks," on page 63, line 19, after the word "SEC.," to strike out "27" and insert "26," and on page 64, line 7, after the word "any," to strike out "of said," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 26. That every Federal land bank, and every joint-stock land bank, shall, out of its net earnings, semiannually carry to reserve account 25 per cent thereof until said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of said land bank. Whenever said reserve shall have been impaired, said balance of 20 per cent shall be fully restored before any dividends are paid. After said reserve has reached the sum of 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock, 5 per cent of the net earnings shall be annually added thereto. For the period of two years from the date when any default occurs in the payment of the interest, amortization installments or principal on any first mortgage, by both mortgagor and indorser, the amount so defaulted shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified, unless collected, shall be debited to reserve account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reserve and dividends of national farm-loan associations," on page 64, line 22, to change the number of the section from 28 to 27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Defaulted loans," on page 66, line 2, after the word "SEC.," to strike out "29" and insert "28," and in line 10, after the word "bonds," to insert "issued by said land bank," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 28. That if there shall be default under the terms of any indorsed first mortgage held by a Federal land bank under the provisions of this act, the national farm loan association or agent through which said mortgage was received by said Federal land bank shall be notified of said default. Said association or agent shall thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to make good said default, either by payment of the amount unpaid thereon in cash, or by the substitution of an equal amount of farm loan bonds issued by said land bank, with all unmatured coupons attached.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Exemption from taxation," on page 66, line 13, after the word "SEC.," to strike out "30" and insert "29"; in line 16, after the word "State," to insert "municipal"; in line 20, after the word "banks," to insert "and farm loan bonds issued"; and in line 25, after the word "State," to insert "municipal," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 29. That every Federal land bank and every national farm loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint stock land banks, and farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, on yesterday, I think it was, I called the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], in charge of the bill, to this provision contained in section 29 which proposes to exempt from taxation certain of the property belonging to these Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations. The Senator from New Hampshire seemed to be entirely confident that the General Government had the power to exempt from taxation this species of property, and directed my attention to the case of McCulloch against State of Maryland, which was a decision with reference to the power of the State of Maryland to impose certain taxes against the United States bank.

I think a careful reading of that case will demonstrate that the question presented there was altogether different from the one which is presented by this bill. I think, in the first place, that even if the Government of the United States has the power to exempt this species of property from taxation at the hands of the State, it ought not to exercise it. It is a species of property which, when held by the private banks of the State, chartered under the laws of the State, is subject to taxation; and I see no reason why property of that same description, held by a bank which happens to be chartered by the Government of the United States, should escape taxation.

What is it that is proposed to be done? The language of the section is:

> That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint-stock land banks, and farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

In what possible way can it be said that a first mortgage executed to a Federal land bank, for money loaned to a farmer in precisely the same way that money may be loaned to a farmer by a State bank and secured by a mortgage, is an instrumentality of the Government of the United States, and thereby exempt from taxation?

This bill is attempted to be tied to the Constitution by a somewhat slender thread. I am not prepared to say that the bill, taken as a whole, is unconstitutional. It may be conceded, at any rate, for the sake of the argument upon this question, that it is constitutional; but what governmental function does the Government of the United States discharge through these banks?

The bill provides that deposits of Government money may be made in these banks. It provides, in a somewhat general way, that the fiscal operations of the Government may be carried on through these land banks. To that extent these land banks become instrumentalities or agencies of the Federal Government in the same way that a State bank which is authorized to receive deposits of postal savings becomes an instrumentality of the Federal Government. In other words, the bank becomes an instrumentality of the Federal Government to that extent—to the extent to which the Government of the United States deposits its moneys in the bank, and to the extent to which the Government of the United States utilizes these banks in its fiscal operations. But in loaning money to the farmers it is not discharging any governmental function. The Government of the United States is not acting through the bank in doing that. The bank, in doing that, is discharging a purely private function—just as much a private function as is the individual loaner of money when he loans money to a farmer and takes a mortgage to secure it.

In the case of McCulloch against Maryland the situation was altogether different. There the Congress had provided for the creation and organization of a United States bank, through which the Government of the United States was to discharge its fiscal operations. Among other things, the bank was authorized to issue bank notes; and what the State of Maryland undertook to do was to provide by law that those bank notes, the issuance of which constituted a governmental function carried on through the bank, should not be issued except upon paper which the law of Maryland provided should bear a stamp, to be paid for by the bank, the value of which should be proportioned to the size of the note; and they undertook to provide further that these bank notes should be issued in certain definite amounts—$5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as I recall.

The Supreme Court in that case very properly held that the act of the Legislature of Maryland was an attempt to tax a governmental operation performed through the bank; and the power to tax being the power to destroy, the power might be exercised so as to destroy that governmental operation. But the court nowhere held that the property of the bank could not be taxed; and, indeed, in the concluding part of the case—the case itself being a very long one, covering in the original volume something over 100 pages, with the statement of the case and the arguments of counsel and the opinion itself—in summing up, the court says:

> The court has bestowed on this subject its most deliberate consideration. The result is a conviction that the States have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard—

Now, observe the language—

> No power * * * to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress—> to carry into execution the powers vested in the General Government. This is, we think, the unavoidable consequence of that supremacy which the Constitution has declared. We are unanimously of opinion that the law passed by the Legislature of Maryland imposing a tax on the bank of the United States is unconstitutional and void.

To do what?—

Now, I call particular attention to this concluding paragraph:

> This opinion does not deprive the States of any resources which they originally possessed. It does not extend to a tax paid by the real property of the bank, in common with the other real property within the State, nor to a tax imposed on the interest which the citizens of Maryland may hold in this institution in common with other property of the same description throughout the State. But this is a tax on the operations of the bank, and is, consequently, a tax on the operation of an instrument employed by the Government of the Union to carry its powers into execution. Such a tax must be unconstitutional.

Mr. President, the question has arisen in a variety of forms since that decision and since the other decision, with reference to the same law, in the case of Osborn against United States Bank. In the case of the Railroad Co. against Peniston, which is reported in Eighteenth Wallace, the question came up with reference to the power of the State to tax certain of the transcontinental railroads which had been incorporated by an act of Congress, and which Congress had declared, among other things, should carry on certain of the operations in which the Government was interested, such as transporting troops, mail, and so forth. The case of McCulloch against Maryland and Osborn against The Bank were both cited by counsel as authority for the proposition that a law of the State of Nebraska undertaking to impose a tax upon the property of these railroad companies could not be sustained because it was a tax on an instrumentality of the Government of the United States, as it was claimed.

But the court disposed of the question in this way, and I read from the syllabus in Railroad Co. against Peniston, Eighteenth Wallace:

> The exemption of agencies of the Federal Government from taxation by the States is dependent not upon the nature of the agents nor upon the mode of their constitution, nor upon the fact that they are agents, but upon the effect of the tax; that is, upon the question whether the tax does in truth deprive them—

That is, the agents—> deprive them of power to serve the Government as they were intended to serve it—

Now, observe, because it deprives them—> of power to serve the Government as they were intended to serve it, or hinder the efficient exercise of their power. A tax upon their property merely, having no such necessary effect and leaving them free to discharge the duties they have undertaken to perform, may be rightfully laid by the States. A tax upon their operations, being a direct obstruction to the exercise of Federal powers, may not be.

There is nothing occult about a question of this character. It seems to me it may be disposed of by a very simple illustration. Here is an individual who is an officer of the Government of the United States. He is thereby an agency through whom the Government of the United States discharges some of its governmental functions. Now, no State can pass a law which will have the effect to obstruct or interfere with the operations of that officer in so far as they are governmental operations; but if he commits murder he may be prosecuted under the law of the State. If he commits any other offense against the law of the State, he may, of course, be prosecuted. The salary which he receives from the Government of the United States may not be taxed by the State, because that would be to interfere with him in the exercise of his functions, because the power to tax, I repeat, is the power to destroy, and they could conceivedly take away his salary entirely or take away so large a part of it as to render it impossible for him to act in the capacity to which he has been appointed. But the State may tax his property. The fact that he happens to be an officer of the General Government does not prevent the State from taxing a mortgage, if he holds it, if it be the policy of the State to tax mortgages; it does not prevent it from taxing his money, if he has money in the bank, from taxing his real estate, from taxing his personal property, from taxing anything that he has which in the hands of the ordinary citizen may be taxed. It is exactly the same as to any other agency which the Government constitutes. The Government for certain purposes has constituted State banks its agents, as I have already stated, with reference to the receipt of postal savings bank funds, yet that does not give the Government of the United States power to provide that such a bank shall be exempt from taxation with reference to its mortgages or with reference to its other property.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that if any property is exempted from the operation of State law in pursuit of the power of taxation it is constitutionally exempted? Can Congress exempt property from State taxation? Must it not be constitutionally exempt, in other words?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I answer that with some hesitation, because there are certain intimations in some of the decisions, purely dictum, which may indicate the contrary. However, my own judgment is that Congress has no power to exempt from taxation anything which would not because of its nature be exempted under the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that is the better view; and it is preliminary to another suggestion. The modern and sounder opinion, I think, is that Congress has the power to provide for the incorporation of common carriers doing an interstate business. I think our late Attorney General held that Congress has the power to make an act of incorporation of that sort exclusive and require the carriers who propose to engage in transportation among the States to incorporate under a law of Congress, if one were provided. I think it is also the modern opinion that Congress can pass a law providing for the incorporation of any person or persons engaged in interstate commerce, all this under authority in the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States.

Now, if property is exempt from taxation on the part of the State, under the Constitution, I ask whether or not, if Congress should go on in its——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In its mad career?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not say that; but in its regulation of commerce among the States along the lines that have been so earnestly urged, would not the result be that practically all the property of the United States of that character would be exempt from taxation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Theoretically, of course, we face that conclusion. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I am not quite prepared to assent to the proposition that Congress has power to provide that in order to enable a person or persons to engage in interstate commerce they must be chartered under the Federal Government. Indeed, I doubt very much whether Congress has power to that extent, because the right to trade between the States, I think, is a right which belongs to the citizens of the States, and the power of Congress is to regulate the right, and I doubt very much whether it can say that only a particular description of persons shall be permitted to engage in commerce among the States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Lest I may be misunderstood, I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that I share his doubt in that respect; but there is no great question that Congress may make a law which is optional in its character, so that corporations can be formed under it for the purpose either of engaging in general business among the States or of engaging in the business of common carriers. There are a great many people who believe that that is the only effective way of regulating commerce. If, however, the fact of organization under a Federal law would exempt all the property of these corporations from State taxation, it can be readily seen that it would be so inviting that all of them would become Federal corporations instead of State corporations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, Mr. President, I do not think for one moment that Congress has any such power to exempt from taxation.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. There is a practical question in connection with this provision as it would apply to the State of Minnesota. Under the laws of our State a real estate mortgage before it can be recorded must pay a tax to the county treasurer. I think it is at the rate of 50 cents a hundred. A small mortgage under $100 is exempt. If a mortgage has to pay that tax before it can be recorded, manifestly no loan association or anybody else would take a mortgage that could not be recorded.

It is a universal rule pertaining to the transfer of real estate that such transfers, whether by deed or mortgage, are governed wholly by the laws of the State in which the real estate is situated. How can the Federal Government change the laws of the State of Minnesota in respect to real estate mortgages? If we insist in Minnesota that no mortgage on real estate shall be recorded until that tax is paid, can the Federal Government come in and veto that and prevent it? To my mind this would be an absolute obstacle in the State of Minnesota to the enforcement of this provision of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Minnesota is entirely correct. I do not think the Federal Government can interfere with a law of that kind.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, when the Senator from Utah has completed his argument I shall offer some suggestions in answer, but lest I forget the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota I should like permission to reply to his statement now.

Before the mortgages in any State can be received by the land bank in order to borrow money, the farm-loan board must investigate the laws of that State, and if they are not such as to recording of title and homestead exemptions, and so on, as to afford adequate security to the land bank, then the loans can not be made in the State until the laws are changed. If Minnesota is in the unfortunate predicament of having laws so that it could not come under this system, it will suffer and not the system.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it seems to me that that would be an unfortunate meddling on the part of the Federal Government——

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; why, instead of the State suffering, should not the system be so amended that this regulation of the State shall be consistent with the system?

Mr. HOLLIS. When I come to answer the Senator from Utah I think I can show that the provision in Minnesota would conform to the act that we have under consideration, but that would be the answer in case they are so inconsistent that the State could not exempt mortgages from taxation.

Mr. WALSH. Before we pass from the subject, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether he concurs in the view expressed by the Senator from Minnesota that such a fee as that charged for filing a mortgage falls within the denomination of a tax such as is contemplated in the bill under consideration?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I do not think it comes under the operation of this section, but I understood the Senator to use it as an illustration.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Utah agree about that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That we could do that?

Mr. WALSH. That we could do that. That no charge shall be made for recording them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps not. The two cases are not entirely parallel.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to be led aside to discuss that particular question. It is not the immediate proposition involved.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the Senator from Montana is doubtless laboring under the impression that it is a record fee. It is in no sense a record fee. It is a tax that has to be paid as a prerequisite to the right to have the mortgage recorded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And the tax is proportioned to the amount of the mortgage?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, of course, it would come within the provisions of this section. It is a tax.

Mr. NELSON. It is not a recording fee; it is a tax. A recording fee has to be paid in addition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not understand that at first. I do now, and I answer the Senator from Montana that in my judgment it would come within the purview of section 29.

Mr. President, the power to tax is a sovereign power, and in one respect the most important sovereign power which can be exercised by any Government. It is a power upon the exercise of which every other power depends, and it exists to the utmost limit in the Federal Government and also in the State government.

The Federal Government has no power to interfere in any way with the power of the States to tax, and the State has no power to interfere in any way with the power of the General Government to tax; but the power of both governments to tax is subject to an exception, and that is that neither government can tax the instrumentalities of the other. However, the right of one is no more restricted than the right of the other.

The power of the Federal Government to tax the instrumentalities of the State is just as restricted, just as much forbidden as the power of the State to tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government, only they must be instrumentalities.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, unless I might forget it when I come to reply, is not the Senator overlooking the well-established principle that while the Federal Government can tax out of existence bank notes issued by State banks the State can not tax the bank notes issued by national banks? There is a plain illustration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, there does seem to be a distinction of the particular kind to which the Senator calls attention, but the Senator must remember that the decision to which he refers, the decision which held that the Federal Goverment had the power to tax the issues of State banks, was rendered many years after the decision in the McCulloch case. The decision was by a divided court, as I remember, and never has been regarded as being among the strongest decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a case that stands by itself. However, the general doctrine that I have laid down is recognized, I think, by all the cases.

Now I call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of National Bank against Commonwealth, which is reported in Ninth Wallace, page 353. In the course of that decision the court said:

It is certainly true that the Bank of the United States and its capital were held to be exempt from State taxation on the ground here stated—

That is, where they were instrumentalities of the Federal Government, by which its important operations were carried on—and this principle, laid down in the case of McCulloch v. The State of Maryland, has been repeatedly affirmed by the court. But the doctrine has its foundation in the proposition that the right of taxation may be so used in such cases as to destroy the instrumentalities by which the Government proposes to effect its lawful purposes in the States, and it certainly can not be maintained that banks or other corporations or instrumentalities of the Government are to be wholly withdrawn from the operation of State legislation. The most important agents of the Federal Government are its officers, but no one will contend that when a man becomes an officer of the Government he ceases to be subject to the laws of the State. The principle we are discussing is its limitation, a limitation growing out of the necessity on which the principle itself is founded. That limitation is, that the agencies of the Federal Government are only exempted from State legislation, so far as that legislation may interfere with or impair their efficiency in performing the functions by which they are designed to serve that Government.

I call attention particularly to what immediately follows:

Any other rule would convert a principle founded alone in the necessity of securing to the Government of the United States the means of exercising its legitimate powers into an unauthorized and unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the States—

And so on.

The case of Railroad Co. against Peniston I have already referred to, and now I call attention to a paragraph in the case of Lane County against Oregon, in which it is said:

In respect, however, to property, business, and persons within their respective limits their power of taxation remained and remains entire. It is, indeed, a concurrent power, and in the case of a tax on the same subject by both Governments the claim of the United States, as the supreme authority, must be preferred; but with this qualification it is absolute.

With the qualification that when the Government of the United States and the State government tax the same thing the claim of the United States is paramount to that of the State—with that qualification the decisions says the power of taxation in the State is absolute.

The extent to which it shall be exercised, the subjects upon which it shall be exercised, and the mode in which it shall be exercised, are all equally within the discretion of the legislatures to which the States commit the exercise of the power. That discretion is restrained only by the will of the people expressed in the State constitutions or through elections, and by the condition that it must not be so used—by the condition that it must not be so used as to burden or embarrass—the operations of the National Government. There is nothing in the Constitution which contemplates or authorizes any direct abridgment of this power by national legislation. To the extent just indicated it is as complete in the States as the like power, within the limits of the Constitution, is complete in Congress.

Now, mark again the language—

What?—

Mr. STERLING. What case is that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a quotation from Lane v. Oregon (7 Wal., 57).

Now, I come to a sentence or two in the case of Railroad against Peniston, to which I referred that I desire to read, and I read it because the court in that case very carefully distinguished the case of McCulloch against Maryland and the case of Osborn against The Bank from the other cases which subsequently arose, and pointed out with great clearness the precise limits of the decisions in those two cases. After referring to those two cases, they say:

In the former of those cases—

That is, the McCulloch case—

the tax held unconstitutional was laid upon the notes of the bank. The institution was prohibited from issuing notes at all except upon stamped paper furnished by the State, and to be paid for on delivery, the stamp upon each note being proportioned to its denomination. The tax, therefore, was not upon any property of the bank but upon one of its operations; in fact, upon its right to exist as created.

I pause long enough to hazard at least the suggestion that if the State bank issue tax question had arisen at the same time and had been brought before the same court as the case of McCulloch against Maryland, the court at that time thus constituted would probably have held that the act passed by the Congress of the United States which sought to tax out of existence State bank issues would not have been valid. The court proceeds:

The tax therefore was not upon any property of the bank but upon one of its operations; in fact, upon its right to exist as created. It was a direct impediment in the way—a direct impediment in the way of a governmental operation performed through the bank as an agent.

Not in some private function of the bank, but—in the way of a governmental operation performed through the bank as an agent.

In other words, it was the same as if an attempt had been made to tax money issued by the Government of the United States, because it had utilized this bank as its agency through which to perform this governmental function or operation.

It was a very different thing, both in its nature and effect, from a tax on the property of the bank. No wonder, then, that it was held illegal. But even in that case the court carefully limited the effect of the decision. It does not extend, said the Chief Justice, to a tax paid by the real property of the bank, in common with the other real property in the State, nor to a tax imposed on the interest which the citizens of Maryland may hold in the institution, in common with the other property of the same description throughout the State. But this is a tax on the operations of the bank and is consequently a tax on the operations of an instrument employed by the Government of the Union to carry its powers into execution. Such a tax must be unconstitutional. Here is a clear distinction made between a tax upon the property of a Government agent and a tax upon the operations of the agent acting for the Government.

And the court proceeds:

In Osborn v. The Bank the tax held unconstitutional was a tax upon the existence of the bank—upon its right to transact business within the State of Ohio. It was, as it was intended to be, a direct impediment in the way of those acts which Congress for national purposes had authorized the bank to perform. For this reason the power of the State to direct it was denied, but at the same time it was declared by the court that the local property of the bank might be taxed, and, as in McCulloch v. Maryland, a difference was pointed out between a tax upon its property and one upon its action.

And further, on page 36 of this volume (18 Wall.), the court said:

It is therefore manifest that exemption of Federal agencies from State taxation is dependent, not upon the nature of the agents, or upon the mode of their constitution, or upon the fact that they are agents, but upon the effect of the tax; that is, upon the question whether the tax does in truth deprive them of power to serve the Government as they were intended to serve it, or does hinder the efficient exercise of their power.

Now, in what way are these land banks authorized to serve the Government of the United States? In receiving deposits of governmental money and in discharging some fiscal operation of the Government. When they are loaning money to a farmer they are not performing any governmental function; they are not engaged in any operation for the Government of the United States; it is purely a private function. They are not doing anything for the benefit of the Government of the United States; what they do is for the benefit of the farmer and for the benefit of the bank. They loan money to the farmer upon which they collect interest, and they are authorized to collect interest to such an amount, the bill contemplates, that the bank will earn dividends. It is purely a private business that they are engaged in, so far as that part of it is concerned. The case continues:

A tax upon their property has no such necessary effect. It leaves them free to discharge the duties they have undertaken to perform. A tax upon their operations is a direct obstruction to the exercise of Federal powers.

In this case the tax is laid upon the property of the railroad company precisely as was the tax complained of in Thompson against Union Pacific. It is not imposed upon the franchises or the right of the company to exist and perform the functions for which it was brought into being.

If the State had undertaken to impose a franchise tax upon the Union Pacific Railroad in that case, it would have been invalid.

It is not imposed upon the franchises or the right of the company to exist and perform the functions for which it is brought into being. Nor is it laid upon any act which the company has been authorized to do. It is not the transmission of dispatches, nor the transportation of United States mails, or troops, or munitions of war that is taxed, but it is exclusively the real and personal property of the agent, taxed in common with all other property in the State of a similar character.

Now, we can imagine the railroad company acquiring a mortgage as a part of its property. Can there be any doubt that the taxing power of the State would have extended to that mortgage as well as to its rolling stock, to its track, and to its real property?

It is impossible to maintain that this is an interference with the exercise of any power belonging to the General Government, and if it is not, it is prohibited by no constitutional implication.

In a very strong opinion rendered in a similar case, involving the right to tax the Union Pacific Railroad, the case being reported in First Dillon, page 314, at page 320, speaking of the proposition that the State had no power to tax the Union Pacific Railroad because it had been created by the Government of the United States, and that, among its powers, it was authorized to perform certain functions for the General Government, Judge Dillon said:

The argument in support of this proposition is that the corporation was created by Congress and not by the State; that it was created because deemed by Congress a fit instrumentality or means of exercising the constitutional powers of carrying on, promoting, or facilitating the operations, or executing the duties of the General Government, and that if it be such instrumentality or means it is settled that it is beyond the taxing power of the State.

Then the court refer to the bank cases and state very briefly what they held, and then proceed:

The defendant controverts these propositions and contends that the Union Pacific Railroad Co., though chartered by Congress, is essentially a private corporation, whose principal object—

Let me pause to emphasize those words "principal object"— is individual trade and individual profit, and not a public corporation, created for public and national purposes; and denies that it is an instrument, agency, or means of the General Government, in such a sense as, on this ground, to exempt it by necessary implication from taxation by the States. The cases referred to undoubtedly establish the doctrine that no State has the right to tax the means, agencies, or instrumentalities rightfully employed within the States by the General Government for the execution of its powers; and this doctrine is adhered to, and, when understood with the necessary qualifications, declared to be sound by the Supreme Court, in its latest adjudications on the subject.

Then, further on, the court says:

But the doctrine has its foundation in the proposition that the right of taxation—

That is, the doctrine that the State may not impose a tax upon the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

But the doctrine has its foundation in the proposition that the right of taxation may be so used in such cases as to destroy the instrumentalities by which the Government proposes to effect its lawful purposes in the States, and it certainly can not be maintained that banks or other corporations or instrumentalities of the Government are to be wholly withdrawn from the operation of State legislation. * * * The principle we are discussing has its limitation—a limitation growing out of the necessity on which the principle itself is founded. That limitation is that the agencies of the Federal Government are only exempted from State legislation so far as that legislation may interfere with or impair their efficiency in performing the functions by which they are designed to serve that Government. Any other rule would convert a principle founded alone in the necessity of securing to the Government of the United States the means of exercising its legitimate powers into an unauthorized and unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the States.

Thus far the court is quoting from a case which I have already read. Then the court goes on, at page 323, to say:

The Government created the corporation—

That is, the Union Pacific Railroad—

The Government created the corporation and both authorized and aided the building of the road. It was to be constructed within the Territories of the United States; and if Congress was not the only power which could erect said corporation and authorize it to build the road therein, it is certain that no road could have been constructed through the national domain against the will of Congress.

The purpose of Congress is manifest not only from the nature of the legislative provisions, but from the plain expression of it, both in the title and in the body of the incorporating act. It is declared in the eighteenth section that "the object of this act is to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and to this end "Congress may, at any time, having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act." And to the same effect is the title, which is, "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad, etc., and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

Therefore the case dealt with a corporation which was expressly designed to carry on operations for the Government far more important than anything of that character that is provided for in the bill now under consideration. Then I come to page 326, where the court says:

Congress had the power to create this corporation; it had the power to make its grants conditioned upon the performance by the corporation of certain duties; the power to reserve legislative control over it, as it did; and these and other provisions of the act intended to secure to the Government the use of the road for postal, military, and other public purposes are not abrogated or abridged by the subsequent admission of Nebraska into the Union as a State; and these rights are inalienable in their nature, without the consent of Congress, and not destructible by any act of the company.

Then the court sums up as follows:

1. That the Union Pacific Railroad Co. is not an instrument of the Government in such a sense as exempts it by implication from the taxing power of the State through which its road may be located.

2. If it be in any sense a Federal instrumentality, the rights of the Government, under the incorporating act, are fully protected and reserved, and any rights derived from a sale for taxes under State authority are entirely subordinate to the original, paramount, and indefeasible rights of the General Government; can not destroy the corporation nor incapacitate it from discharging any of its inalienable, fundamental, and organic duties to the Government. If so, then the case falls without the principle on which the corporation relies to sustain its application for an injunction.

I think I can discover in the more recent judgments of the Supreme Court evidences of a conviction on the part of the judges that the doctrine of implied exemption of Federal agencies from State taxation has been carried quite to its limit, and that it will not be pressed to embrace a case of the character of the one now under consideration.

It is true that in this case and in some of the other cases the statement is made that no exemption from taxation will arise by implication; but the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa a short time ago, to my mind, must be necessarily true, and that is that the right of the State to tax being a sovereign right the Government of the United States can not interfere with it, unless it be necessary to protect its own instrumentalities or its own operations, either carried on directly or through some agency.

If we once accept any other doctrine, if we once say that the Congress of the United States has the power by an express enactment to do more than that, then we have taken away the sovereign power of taxation from the States, because there is nowhere to draw the line; in the very nature of the case there can be no limitation. If we have the power to say, because we have constituted a certain agency for the purpose of doing certain things for the Federal Government, that we may exempt from State control—because if we can exempt from taxation we can exempt from other control—that we may exempt from State control the operations of that agent which have nothing to do with the Federal Government, then where is the power to end? If we can exempt the mortgage taken by this institution, which constitutes property, upon what theory may we not exempt the farm which the land bank acquires when it has foreclosed one of these mortgages? It seems to me very clear that this is a sovereign power of the State, which the Federal Government is just as powerless to invade, except to protect its own operations, as is the State powerless to invade the sovereign taxing power of the Federal Government, except for the same purpose.

Now, I call attention—and this is the last case which I shall quote—to a recent decision in the case of South Carolina against the United States. That was a case where the State of South Carolina had undertaken to go into the liquor business.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator please give the reference to that case?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is in One hundred and ninety-ninth United States. That was a case where the State of South Carolina had gone into the liquor business, and the Federal Government undertook to collect taxes of the State, just as it collected taxes of corporations or individuals engaged in that business. The State insisted that that was taxing a State operation, and therefore could not be permitted, but the court held that the position was not well taken. The court in its decision, at page 461, said, after referring to a number of decisions:

These decisions, while not controlling the question before us, indicate that the thought has been that the exemption of State agencies and intrumentalities from national taxation is limited to those which are of a strictly governmental character, and does not extend to those which are used by the State in the carrying on of ordinary private business.

In that case they went further than it is necessary for me to go here, and held that even where the State itself engaged in the business, if it was a business that was in its essence ordinarily a private business, it could not escape taxation because it was the State which had embarked in it. At page 463 the court says:

It is reasonable to hold that while the former may do nothing by taxation in any form to prevent the full discharge by the latter of its governmental functions, yet whenever a State engages in a business which is of a private nature that business is not withdrawn from the taxing power of the Nation.

I repeat, in conclusion, that here is an attempt to create an organization for the purpose of doing two wholly distinct things: One, to carry on certain limited operations for the Government; that is, to receive deposits, and to carry on certain fiscal operations; and, second, to discharge the essentially private business of loaning money and collecting interest upon the loans. The bill does not even contemplate that the Government of the United States necessarily shall be interested in the institution, because it provides that the stock in these various banking institutions shall be subscribed by private individuals; and that only in case there are not sufficient subscriptions from private persons is the Government of the United States to participate. In that event, the Government of the United States is to make up the difference between the subscribed capital and the authorized capital, but provision is made by which the Government retires from the business as a stockholder as quickly as it can, leaving it then wholly in the hands of private individuals.

So that in the last analysis we have a bank which is owned and operated, except for Government supervision, by private individuals engaged in a private business, and the bill undertakes to exempt from taxation the property which they acquire in the discharge of their purely private functions, and not in the discharge of any governmental operations or functions at all.

It seems to me that we are undertaking by that not only to do an unwise thing, to take from a State the opportunity of taxing valuable property within its limits, to which it must afford police protection, as it affords police protection to every other species of property within the State, but that we are doing something that we are without authority to do, namely to invade a sovereign power of the State.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is there any difference in principle here than would be the case if Congress attempted to exempt from taxation the stock and mortgages of national banks now in existence all over the country? They are all taxed under State law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are all taxed. Of course, the national banks are a good deal more closely related to the Government of the United States than the banks proposed under this bill will be related to the Government, and as a matter of fact, in the national banking legislation—I have not had occasion to examine it for some time—there are certain provisions which affirmatively recognize the right of the State to tax the capital stock of national banks.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And it is all taxed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And, as a matter of fact, it is all taxed. As a matter of practical construction, there certainly can be no more reason why the property of the banks proposed to be established under this bill should be exempted from taxation than that like property held by the national banks should be exempted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment which I intend to offer to the pending bill, and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

I also present an amendment which I intend to propose to the substitute of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such will be the order, in the absence of objection.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] announces two prime propositions. He says, in the first place, that he does not agree with the policy of exempting these banks and their operations from taxation; and, in the second place, he does not believe in the right of Congress so to exempt them.

The second proposition always follows, in the case of a constitutional lawyer, from the first. Any lawyer who does not believe in a certain policy of Congress is sure to find somewhere in the decisions of the Supreme Court some basis for his position; and I could tell by looking over a list of the Senators of this body those lawyers who would find grave constitutional objections to doing what we are trying to do in this act.

The Senator from Utah has overlooked two or three very important principles. The first is that in McCulloch against The State of Maryland there was no action of Congress whatever exempting the bank or its operations from taxation. In that case the Congress of the United States did not undertake to cover the field of taxation; they allowed it by implication to the States; and yet the court held that, in spite of a failure to include in that statute establishing a United States bank an exemption from taxation, still the operations of the bank were exempt.

Now, take the national banks that exist to the number of 7,500 in this country. There has never been any question raised as to their constitutionality. The question was considered, and an opinion was anounced by the Supreme Court in the case of Farmers' National Bank against Deering, in Ninety-first United States, page 29, in which the constitutionality of the national-bank act was placed expressly on the authority of McCulloch against The State of Maryland. There has never been any argument that the constitutionality of the existing national-bank act rests in the power to issue currency. The Congress of the United States has no express power under the Constitution to issue currency; not the slightest; it has never been claimed that it has. All the authority that it has is to coin money; and the constitutionality of no bank act has ever been placed on the proposition that the bank in issuing currency was coining money or performing a Government function.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Supreme Court, however, as I recall the decision, has held that having the express power under the Constitution to coin money, Congress has the power, when necessary, to provide a substitute for coined money.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should be very glad to have the Senator produce that case and show where it affected in any degree the constitutionality of any act that Congress has passed for that purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not speaking about it with reference to national-banking legislation; but I say that it has been held that, having the power to coin money, Congress has the power to provide currency or a substitute.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is very true, but the point here is that no bank has ever been declared constitutional because it was given the power to issue currency. If it had been, it would be an authority for the present act; and I wish it were so, because the bonds issued under this act will be just as much currency as the bank notes issued by national banks—precisely as much. They are issued in denominations running from $25 to $1,000; they are promises to pay; they are not legal tender; and that is all the national-bank notes are, namely, promises to pay; they are not legal tender. So, if the issue of currency makes any bank constitutional, the issue of these farm-loan bonds, which are payable to bearer, just as a bank note is, makes this act constitutional; and I hope the Senator will succeed in finding such a case. I have not been able to do so.

There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which in express terms gives authority to Congress to establish a bank or any other corporation. There is no authority of the kind except by implication. McCulloch against the State of Maryland, which has remained undoubted and unquestioned authority for nearly 100 years, settles that point. Chief Justice Marshall wrote the opinion; Daniel Webster was counsel for the United States, and appeared with the Attorney General. That case decided that the Government can not be run with the express powers given it under the Constitution unless it can borrow money, unless it can regulate commerce between the States, and raise armies and navies. And the only concrete instance that Chief Justice Marshall cites of how that bank could perform Government functions is that it could transfer treasure from the East to the West and from the North to the South.

In the present bill precisely the same functions are given to the land banks that are given to the national banks under the national-bank act. The Supreme Court has nothing to do with the method by which Congress carries out the purposes that are confided to it. Who for a moment thinks that the Government of the United States ever intends to avail itself of all the 7,500 national banks as fiscal agents or as Government depositaries? It is for Congress to say that they may want to do so at some time; it is for Congress to say "We will establish banks of this kind as Government depositaries and as fiscal agents"; and if Congress says "We do it for that purpose," that settles it, and the Supreme Court can not go behind that verdict. So, Congress having decided that it will establish a bank and will make that bank—or 7,000 other banks—Government depositaries and fiscal agents the Government is acting in that sphere, and, so far as the Government acts in that sphere, it becomes supreme.

At this juncture let me call attention to another point which has evidently been overlooked by the distinguished Senator. He has discussed the occupation of a field of taxation by a State and its occupation by the United States, and says that where one has acted the other is excluded. In the railroad cases which he cited the Government of the United States did not act on the question of taxation. The Government set up the instrumentalities to conduct commerce between the States and to transport armies and ammunition, but it did not undertake to occupy the field of taxation so far as those instrumentalities were concerned.

In the present bill the distinguished Senator from Utah would not himself undertake to occupy that field of taxation, and, if he did not, undoubtedly the State would be left free to occupy it; but where the Government, acting under a sovereign power, does undertake to occupy a field, it occupies it for all purposes and excludes the States from it. That has been decided, and very clearly decided, in a decision under the national-bank act in Veazie Bank against Fenno, 8 Wallace, 533. In that case the United States taxed State bank notes issued by a bank having a State charter, and the court held that the United States may tax bank notes not issued under its authority. That is undoubtedly so, and the opinion has been unanimously concurred in by all the banks of this country, and no State bank undertakes now to issue bank notes. If they did, they would be taxed, and there would be no profit in it. They could issue them if they wanted to pay a 10 per cent tax. Therefore, when the Government of the United States does act upon the subject of taxation concerning any instrumentalities that the Congress has seen fit to employ to carry out an authorized or expressed purpose of the Constitution, then it may act, and act with supreme authority.

In this instance, in section 6 of the pending measure, we have adopted the exact provision found in the national-bank act, to wit:

> That all Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks organized under this act, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government as may be required of them.

If the national banks never in the world performed any governmental function whatever they would still be constitutional. The test is not, as the distinguished Senator seems to think, whether or not in the operation that is going on the bank is performing a governmental function. What governmental function is a national bank performing when it loans money to me on my note? None whatever. If Congress sees fit to give to the banks, so that they may exist through the employment of private capital, the power to make money in certain ways, Congress has a right to endow those institutions with such powers; and when they are exerting those powers, whether it is in a private capacity or in a public capacity, they are instrumentalities of the United States, not acting for a public purpose, but acting for a private purpose or any other purpose which can be conceived of, and if they are instrumentalities of the United States, then we may annex any conditions we may desire to the performance of any duties private or public. There can not be any escape from that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. My inquiry is whether the exception which the bill contains with regard to real estate is one of policy or one of necessity?

Mr. HOLLIS. Purely one of policy. We could exempt real estate just as much as we could the capital—there is no doubt about it—just as we exempt the post office when we buy real estate and put a Government building upon it. Of course we could.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that the Senator applies the rule he has just announced to the real estate as well as to the personal property of the bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. And we could except all of it if Congress so desired?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly; but I think it would be very bad policy. Let us apply that for a moment.

The United States Constitution—and we do not consider it broadly enough in this body; now and then some one gets up and considers some section of it—declares, first, the purpose of the Constitution, among other things, to promote the general welfare and provide for the common defense, and then it proceeds immediately to discuss the powers of the legislative branch. It sets them up, first tells what the Senate and House shall be composed of, how they shall conduct their business, what shall be a quorum, and so forth, and then, in the eighth section of the second article, I believe, it says that the Congress shall have power to do certain things. We have to operate under the eighth section.

Among other powers given to Congress is the power to establish post offices and post roads. In order to carry that out we want a post-office building. A post office is not a building alone. A post office is a building with people in it to handle the postal business, but to carry out the purpose of constructing a post office we erect a building. We buy from the citizens of a State, from the owners, a certain tract of land, and we put up a post-office building on it. That is exempt from taxation. That is a discrimination against every other piece of real estate that does pay taxes; but we do it, and we could do it here. If it seems wise to Congress in establishing a useful instrumentality—one that will exist and be powerful enough to be of some service to the Government—Congress may exempt its real estate if it wants to, but I think that would be very poor policy.

Now, let me recur to the question of currency.

Most people confuse currency and coin. Coin is specie. It is metal, having a real value, an intrinsic value, and stamped by the Government so that it passes as legal tender from hand to hand. Currency is composed of paper money, bonds, securities, and bank checks. That is currency. It is used all the time as currency. It passes current from hand to hand, but is not legal tender. Now, the bonds issued under this act are just as much currency as the bank notes issued by the Riggs National Bank—just as much. One is legal tender as much as the other; that is to say, not at all. If the bonds secured by these mortgages are properly looked after and properly issued, they will be better currency than the bank notes issued by the Riggs National Bank. They will be better secured. So that if any Senator is going to put the right to establish a national bank on the ground of the power of Congress to issue currency, then this act is surely constitutional. There can not be any escape from that.

Recurring to the railroad cases that have been referred to, I have no hesitation in saying that if it had seemed to the Congress of the United States that it was necessary to exempt those railroads and their real estate from taxation, Congress would have had entire authority to do it. If Congress had believed that otherwise those instrumentalities would not have been vigorous and useful and would not have fulfilled the function of the Government that the Congress thought they would, Congress could have exempted them from taxation. But Congress did not do it, any more than Congress exempted the Bank of the United States from taxation in express terms; and right there comes the difference. Because the issuing of bank notes by the United States Bank was one of the necessary and useful functions to which Congress had regard, therefore the Supreme Court of the United States said: "That is such an operation of the government of the bank that Congress could not have intended that the State could tax it." Why? Because if the State could tax that function of the particular instrumentality—to wit, a bank—it could drive it out of business; and so the States could drive these banks out of business if they could tax them, and they would.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from New Hampshire think that Congress would have the power to exempt from taxation the engines and cars and other rolling stock of the Union Pacific Railroad?

Mr. HOLLIS. I certainly do, and there can not be any case produced deciding the contrary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Because it never has been tried.

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The case never has arisen.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; it has not been tried. The Senator asked me for my opinion, and I gave it; and I am entitled to it, as much as anyone else is entitled to his opinion, until the court decides differently.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIS. Congress would not attempt to do it, of course; and I should not attempt to get the land exempted from taxation under this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not desire to interfere at all with the Senator's entertaining that opinion, but I ask the Senator this further question: I suppose the Senator concludes that Congress would have the power to exempt from taxation the property of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. because the Union Pacific Railroad Co., in certain aspects, was an agency of the Government?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. That is for Congress to decide, whether it is or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator recognizes that the Attorney General is an agency of the Government of the United States?

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I do not think the Attorney General is an agent of the Government of the United States. He is an official, with certain prescribed duties. He can not bind the Government of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think he is an agency of the Government?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think he is an officer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is he not an agency?

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, you may call him that. You may call him an instrumentality. I do not care what you call him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not the Government perform certain functions through him?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that the Congress of the United States could exempt from taxation any of the individual property of the Attorney General?

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, I do not think any such thing. I do not know. I never have seen it decided. I can not conceive of anyone raising such a question. I do not care to give an opinion on such a matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I personally can see very little difference in principle between the two things.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is because the Senator does not want to see the difference; and when a man does not want to see a difference, you can not make him see it. Knowing the Senator's drift of mind and his policy on public questions, I should not expect him to be able to see the constitutional power here, plain though it may be. I do hope the majority of the Senators will see it, and I am very confident the Supreme Court of the United States will see it if the bill is passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that I am very glad that I have not the ability to see some things as some people see them.

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, that is pleasant, and I am much obliged.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, whatever may be said about the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Iowa is not a narrow or an illiberal constructionist of the Constitution.

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, I do not entirely agree to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I rise to ask this question: Does the Senator from New Hampshire think that Congress could have given the State of Maryland the right to tax the notes of the United States Bank?

Mr. HOLLIS. If Congress had said, "The notes of the United States Bank shall not be exempt from taxation by a State authority," that undoubtedly would have been constitutional.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Supreme Court held, however, that the tax was unconstitutional because repugnant to the Constitution; and the substance of the Senator's answer seems to me to be that Congress can, if it desires, waive the Constitution.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I do not think that is at all so. Congress might have done it in this way, and it undoubtedly would, if it had acted. I am glad the Senator has raised that point, because it raises exactly the same question that was decided under the national-bank act. I say, and I believe, and the authorities sustain the proposition, that the Government might provide that the capital stock and the real estate of a national bank are exempt from taxation. I believe that. But Congress has said that the capital stock of a national bank may be taxed the same amount as the capital stock of other institutions of a like character in the State. Now, that is constitutional; and if it had made that same provision in the law under consideration in McCulloch against the State of Maryland that would have been constitutional.

I do not say that Congress can do anything repugnant to the Constitution. Of course it can not; and if it had made the same provision about the bank notes and had said that they should be subject to the same tax as bank notes issued by State institutions, that undoubtedly would have been constitutional.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the absence of any such statement as that, does not the Senator from New Hampshire think that an attempt on the part of the State to discriminate against the stock of a national bank or the property of a national bank would be invalid?

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator mean under the statutes as they are?

Mr. CUMMINS. Without any statute at all on that subject.

Mr. HOLLIS. Without any statute? I think it would have been discrimination.

Mr. CUMMINS. And would have been entirely invalid?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Even if Congress had not spoken at all?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so; certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am only trying to suggest that, in my opinion, whatever exemption from State taxation exists on the part of property within a State arises under the Constitution, and does not and can not arise under any law of Congress. Congress can neither add to nor take from the Constitution.

Mr. HOLLIS. Congress has acted in the national-bank act, however, which all concede to be constitutional.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the position suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is entirely logical, to my mind; but it seems to me that it is overthrown, or at least it is affected, by the decision of the Supreme Court sustaining a tax placed upon State bank currency for the avowed object of suppressing it and making such issues impossible.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to mention that case, that is an authority arising under the power of the Federal Government to tax. It laid the tax. Of course, the power to tax need not be exercised by the General Government in every instance in which it has the power to tax. It is not so exercised now. The Federal Government has the right to tax every business concern in the United States, if it pleases, simply because it is carrying on that particular business; but it does not do so. It is a power in abeyance. So when the Federal Government came to lay a tax upon State bank circulation it did not involve the exemption of property from taxation under the Constitution.

The Senator from New Hampshire has not stated fully the reasons given by the Supreme Court in sustaining that act on the part of Congress. I think he will remember that there were a good many objections made against the tax. Among others, the question of direct and indirect taxation arose; and the Supreme Court finally sustained the Federal power, because it held that it was a function of the Federal Government to provide the people of this country with a circulating medium, and that the State bank circulation interfered with the power of the Government to provide the people of the country with a stable circulating medium, and therefore the Federal Government could designedly drive the State circulation out of existence.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is merely a matter of policy. That is not a matter of right; it is a matter of policy. Congress did that as a matter of policy. We are passing this bill as a matter of policy; but our right to pass it rests on a very different thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Supreme Court has decided that the right to pass the national-bank act rests on the authority of McCulloch against the State of Maryland.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. In the case of McCulloch against Maryland the question was, Can the State impose a tax upon a Federal instrumentality? There was nothing in the law which either gave the State the right to do it or withheld from the State the right to do it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have not said there was. I said the national-bank act was decided constitutional on the authority of McCulloch against the State of Maryland, and it is true.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite think so; but, then, that is——

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, if the Senator will do me the honor to read the case I cited to him, I think he will find it stated there in terms.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will read, however, the last paragraph in the opinion, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me.

Mr. HOLLIS. Which one?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is the case of Veazie Bank against Fenno. It is the case to which the Senator from New Hampshire referred a few moments ago.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. The case I referred to as establishing the constitutionality of the national-bank act was Farmers' National Bank v. Deering (91 U. S., 29).

Mr. CUMMINS. In the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire addressed to the Senator from Utah I am quite sure the Senator referred to that opinion.

Mr. HOLLIS. I did refer to it, but for another purpose—not for the constitutionality of the national-bank act, but for the power of the United States Government to tax State bank notes out of existence.

Mr. CUMMINS. To tax a State instrumentality.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes. They are very distinct.

Mr. CUMMINS. And this is what the Supreme Court said in closing this opinion:

> Having thus, in the exercise of undisputed constitutional powers, undertaken to provide a currency—

I interpolate, through the national banks—> for the whole country, it can not be questioned that Congress may, constitutionally, secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation. To this end Congress has denied the quality of legal tender to foreign coins and has provided by law against the imposition of counterfeit and base coin on the community. To the same end Congress may restrain, by suitable enactments, the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its own authority. Without this power, indeed, its attempts to secure a sound and uniform currency for the country must be futile.

The Supreme Court, in truth, did not treat the enactment which levied the tax as a part of the taxing power for revenue at all. It treated it as though it was an exercise of the power to destroy the State-bank circulation; and it could have done it in some other form quite as effectually and quite as constitutionally as it could have done it through the power of taxation.

Mr. HOLLIS. If the Senator will permit me, the case from which the Senator has read had nothing whatever to do with the constitutionality of the national-bank act, which set up the national banks as instrumentalities of this Government. It dealt with the power of the Congress of the United States to tax out of existence the State bank notes. There is no doubt about that. They decided, in the words of the opinion, that Congress had undertaken in a constitutional way to act through national banks; and in the case of the Farmers' National Bank against Deering, which called directly in question the constitutionality of the national-bank act, the decision was put precisely on the authority of McCulloch against State of Maryland, and not at all on the power to provide a suitable currency for the United States. That was the only point I wanted to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senators are talking about different things.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not differ at all with the Senator from New Hampshire with regard to the reasons which underlie the power of the Government to establish national banks. I do not question the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that the national banks of the country rest upon the same constitutional authority that was invoked in the case of the United States Bank in the early part of the century.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very glad the Senator understands that. I did not want the other Senators to be misled.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was simply calling the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that because the United States could tax, or destroy in any other method, State bank circulation, that was not even a step toward the argument that Congress could exempt these land banks and their property, their bonds, their stock, from State taxation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Congress had enacted a law for the purpose of protecting its own issues of currency and in order to give the Nation a general system of currency circulation by prohibiting the issue of currency by State banks, I never should have questioned its authority to do so, in view of the decisions up to the time the statute taxing the State bank currency was passed. But it has always seemed to me that the decision in the case just referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was opposed in principle to the doctrine of McCulloch against Maryland, which recognizes the exemption of State instrumentalities from Federal taxation quite as vigorously as it insists upon the exemption of the national instrumentalities from State taxation. Indeed, the statement of the one thing necessarily includes the statement of the other. But it did not legislate directly in prohibition of the issuance of currency by State banks.

There was a time when there were State banks in the true sense of the term—that is, banks which were organized by the State for the State, and which were controlled by and run in the interest of the State government. Of course, they did a general banking business. Now, the Federal Government, through Congress, for the purpose of protecting the currency of its own banks and giving it that national quality which it possesses, and which was desirable, in the exercise of its taxing power placed a tax upon the instrumentalities and the currency of the States and made it prohibitory. If we can conceive that State banks, or banks organized by authority of the States, notwithstanding such 10 per cent tax, had continued to issue their currency, it would have been good in the States of issue, at least. In other words, the enforcement of the tax does not of itself destroy the circulating quality, so to speak, of the bank note against which it was aimed.

That has been held, nevertheless, by the Supreme Court of the United States to be the exercise of a proper authority. If that be so, then it seems to me that if this bill sought to accomplish the same purpose by providing for prohibitory tax upon all other mortgages and all other bonds issued by or under State authority—we will say 10 per cent upon the amount which they represented—certainly that would necessarily be upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States if Congress has the power to enact this rural credits legislation at all; and inasmuch as that case has determined that Congress may, by the exercise of its taxing power, destroy a competitor, certainly it is not going too far to say that it may accomplish the same purpose by providing exemptions upon its own instrumentalities, its own currency, its own circulating medium.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado a question? I am not entirely sure that I apprehend the position that the Senator takes with reference to the Veazie Bank case. Does the Senator think that in that case the act was justified by the court upon the ground that it was a naked exercise of the taxing power?

Mr. THOMAS. I never have thought so, although, of course, I realize that the power to tax is the power to destroy. In fact, the Chief Justice says so. He uses that expression in McCulloch against Maryland.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Veazie Bank case, as I said in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire when he asked me about it, has never entirely satisfied my own judgment, which, however, does not matter very much.

Mr. THOMAS. I never have been able to reconcile it with previous decisions of the same court, but it is the law just the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But I take occasion, with the permission of the Senator, to incorporate in the RECORD, so far as it deals with this question, the syllabus of that case, Veazie Bank against Fenno, in Eighth Wallace, at page 533:

> Congress having undertaken, in the exercise of undisputed constitutional power, to provide a currency for the whole country, may constitutionally secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation, and to that end may restrain by suitable enactments the circulation of any notes not issued under its own authority.

Mr. THOMAS. With that I agree, provided the power is exercised directly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

> The tax of 10 per cent imposed by the act of July 13, 1866, on the notes of State banks paid out after the 1st of August, 1866, is warranted by the Constitution.

It appears from that, taking those two syllabi together, that the decision of the court was based upon the proposition, not that it was a legitimate exercise of the taxing power per se, but that it was a law passed for the protection of the currency of the United States for which the Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional power, had provided. Notwithstanding that, there is a very strong dissenting opinion, as the Senator knows, and I think nobody can read the dissenting opinion without coming to the conclusion that it is the better reasoned of the two opinions.

At the conclusion of that opinion, Mr. Justice Nelson, speaking for the minority, said (p. 556):

> Even if this tax could be regarded as one upon property, still, under the decisions above referred to—
> Those, among others, were the United States Bank cases—> it would be a tax upon the powers and faculties of the States to create these banks, and, therefore, unconstitutional.
> It is true that the present decision strikes only at the power to create banks, but no person can fail to see that the principle involved affects the power to create any other description of corporations, such as railroads, turnpikes, manufacturing companies, and others.

And, taking the dissenting opinion all through, I think the Senator will agree with me that it is a remarkably well-reasoned opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. I think it is unanswerable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The majority opinion can only be justified, as it seems to me, upon the single ground that the law is passed for the protection of the currency of the United States; and it is justified by the court just as they would have justified a law which had expressly declared that no such State notes should be issued at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. The Supreme Court having sustained the legislation, of course we must assume and also concede that the legislation was entirely within the purview of congressional authority; but its application here, to my mind, seems appropriate, provided it would give authority to Congress in this bill, by providing for a tax upon all other mortgages to the extent of 10 per cent, or a prohibitory tax, practically to do away with all possibility of competition in the operation of this law. If that be so, then it seems to me that the power exists to exempt, although they may be instrumentalities or may not be, those things which are provided for in this law, since that practically accomplishes the same purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado a question with regard to the last suggestion, which I think is absolutely sound, if I understood him correctly? We have the same right to levy a tax of 10 per cent or any other proportion upon every mortgage issued in the States, and thus compel the land banks to do all the business, that we have to exempt the mortgages of the land banks or their bonds from taxation, and in that way drive other mortgages out of existence. I understood the Senator to say that both would rest upon the same constitutional authority, and I think he is right about that. If we could do either—if we could do what we now propose to do, exempt these things from taxation—we could accomplish the same purpose by imposing a direct tax upon mortgages that are not issued by the land banks.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. In other words, it is a choice of method of procedure.

Mr. CUMMINS. So the Senator from Colorado believes that we could, if we desired to do it, put a tax of 10 per cent, or any other sum, upon every mortgage issued upon farms in the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. I would not want to go so far as to say I think we have that power. The decision to which the Senator referred seems to give it. If we have the power, then if we can accomplish the same end by exemption from taxation of mortgages and bonds provided for by this act, we have the power to do it. Now, whether Congress has the power to enact legislation of this kind, to place a prohibitory tax on all bonds and mortgages, I do not want to commit myself. This decision goes a long way in that direction. I think, however, I can say with perfect safety that if we have the power to enact this bill at all, if Congress has the power to create a system of rural-credit banks, then it has the power to enact all the legislation necessary for the protection and for the operation of the system; and upon the assumption that we have that power, coupled with the decision to which the Senator refers and the other decisions that have been quoted here, it seems to me that the provision which is now the subject of consideration is within the power of Congress.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to the question, if the Senator from Utah will allow me. I happened to come into the room while the controversy upon the legal aspect of this bill was being indulged by the Senator from Utah, the Senator from New Hampshire, and the Senator from Iowa. I heard the Senator from Utah quote the concluding paragraph from the opinion in Ninth Wallace. Am I right in this?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I referred to Ninth Wallace. I do not remember whether what I read was the concluding paragraph.

Mr. LEWIS. I make the inquiry of the Senator, knowing him to be a skilled lawyer, living as he does in Utah and knowing the litigation involved in the Union Pacific Railroad Co. My mind reverts to the case of Peniston against Union Pacific Railroad Co., in Eighteenth Wallace, where, if I am not in error, the Supreme Court there held, touching the Union Pacific, that whether a tax levied upon governmental agency was good or whether one could be exempted as righteous, turned rather on the effect the tax worked than upon the designation of it by name or purpose.

I will ask the Senator from Utah does he not think that that so modifies the rule laid down in Ninth Wallace as to leave it as follows: That the right of the Government to exempt the tax, the legality or not, the validity or not, will turn upon the effect that the courts will give as to how far such stimulates circulation or restrains, to leave it rather a question of fact than one of law. Would not the Senator conclude that such must be the result of the ruling to which I allude, if I am right in my memory?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is entirely due to my dullness, no doubt, but I do not well get the point the Senator makes.

Mr. LEWIS. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Utah, and I am anxious to see if I did. Does the Senator from Utah contend that an attempt by the Federal Government to exempt this proceeding, this State bank issue, from State taxes, was per se illegal?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My point is that the Government has no power to exempt property lying within the limits of a State from State taxation simply because the property happens to belong to an agent of the Federal Government or an agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. LEWIS. In reference to that last point, then, I ask the Senator if his mind reverts to the case against the Owensboro Bank, in One hundred and seventy-third United States? I think there it was held that it was in the power of Congress to make a reservation by its own act of a right of a State to impose a tax on a Federal institution. Am I right about that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not recall the case the Senator refers to, but no doubt the Senator has stated it accurately.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me call your attention, for I am anxious myself about this, and I must be free to say to the Senator I trust I am not intruding. This question of taxes we are now discussing fell under me in a professional way, and the whole field of it I had to go through with. I argued the contention of the right of the city of Chicago to levy a tax upon certain instrumentalities of the Federal Government by virtue of municipality. I wish to say to the Senator I argued that case with such power and capability, with such irrefutable logic, that the court, at the conclusion of my argument, decided it for the other man without hearing him at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not blame the court a particle.

Mr. LEWIS. But in this pursuit my mind was especially addressed to the distinction, and I am very much interested in the point the Senator suggested, and particularly the distinction which he presented, and which the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Iowa sought to sustain. I ask the Senator if he can see the distinction in the case of Owensboro against the National Bank. I will read only a part of the syllabus, where the court say—and they went very far, as the Senator says, in opposition to what appears as a general principle:

A State is wholly without power to levy any tax, either direct or indirect, upon national banks, their property, assets, or franchises, except when permitted so to do by the legislation of Congress.

I am strongly impressed with the idea that previous to this decision and previous to the decision that followed it in 180, a case that came from the West, there was a general idea that the State had no such power, and the creation by Congress of a Federal institution of this kind promptly placed it within constitutional protection, and within that Federal constitutional immunity it was safe and secure.

But I state to my able friend from Utah here is where I am embarrassed. If it is in the power of an act of Congress to subject an institution to State taxation, is it not equally in the power of Congress to waive the right and exempt it from taxation?

Let me reverse myself and make it shorter and make it plain to the mind, because if it is not legal we ought not to pass it. I am for the measure generally, but I do not wish to vote for what is illegal, and I wish the Senator's opinion. If we can pass this measure and provide that there shall be an exemption, if we can provide that no State shall put a tax upon this property, do we not simply say to the State we have created an agency for the general use of the Federal Government, and therefore to that extent we deny the right of the State to burden it by that taxation? Would not that act of Congress prohibit the State within the meaning of this decision from levying that tax?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Illinois a question. This bill creates a so-called land bank, and among other things it provides that the Government of the United States may deposit funds in that bank, and that it may discharge—I do not remember what they are—fiscal operations for the Government of the United States. To that extent this bank may be regarded as an instrumentality of the Federal Government. But the association is made up of private stockholders, private individuals, who put their capital into the bank and take stock, and these private individuals operate the bank, and in the course of their operations they loan a farmer $1,000 and take from the farmer a mortgage upon his land. I ask the Senator from Illinois what governmental function the bank performs in making that loan?

Mr. LEWIS. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. LEWIS. My judgment would be this, Senator, that in his position as a citizen of the United States the United States is assumed to give him the right to enjoy the privileges of money and its circulation; that it has provided an agency to accomplish that purpose, and when it provided the agency by Federal legislation, the office of the Federal Government that was being discharged, was the opportunity to enjoy the circulation upon the security tendered which the Government had elected to select.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Illinois think that the loan of money is a governmental function or a private function?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator remits me now to the vexed discussion that has been with us from the founding of this Government. My judgment is this, that the lending of money by the Federal Government to the citizen is a governmental agency. The lending the Government by a private agent in exercising the privilege of the charter of the Federal Government is private business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator thinks that loaning money is a governmental function, there is no common ground for us to argue upon. The Senator thinks whenever the Government does anything that makes it a governmental function?

Mr. LEWIS. Otherwise the Government could never enforce it. The moment it attempted to enforce it any one of the sovereignties could step in and say, "It is not governmental for you to enforce it, because the doing of it is in the exercise of a private capacity, and therefore a Government can not enforce it." I take it that to avoid a punishment for a violation of the Government decree it would be answered that true you authorize it and carry it out, but as a Government you can not punish the disobedience. It would be impotent unless it was a Government act, from my point of view.

I should like to ask the Senator from Utah to look at this case which I hand to the Senator, and in this case of Peniston against the Union Pacific, Eighteenth Wallace. I should like to call the Senator's attention to that. A specific qualification of Ninth Wallace, read by him, is made; but I am not quite so sure to the extent. My mind is a little hazy. It has been some time since I had occasion to use this case.

May I read from page 30, Railroad against Peniston, which came from Utah and Kansas, and it involved the whole Government railroad line through, and the case from which the Senator read with much appropriateness a moment ago? On page 30 the Senator will find this:

There are, we admit, certain subjects of taxation which are withdrawn from the power of the States, not by any direct or express provision of the Federal Constitution but by what may be regarded as its necessary implications. They grow out of our complex system of government, and out of the fact that the authority of the National Government is legitimately exercised within the States. While it is true that Government can not exercise its power of taxation so as to destroy the State government or embarrass their lawful action, it is equally true that the States may not levy taxes the direct effect of which shall be to hinder the exercise of any powers which belong to the National Government. The Constitution contemplates that none of those powers may be restrained by State legislation. But it is often a difficult question whether a tax imposed by a State does in fact invade the domain of the General Government—or interfere with its operations to such an extent, or in such a manner, as to render it unwarranted.

The question the Senator asked me a moment ago—

A distinction I sought to make to the able Senator in my reply.

It can not be that a State tax which remotely affects the efficient exercise of a Federal power is for that reason a loan inhibited by the Constitution. To hold that would be to deny to the States all power to tax persons or property. Every tax—

And so forth.

Then they proceed:

Hence the Federal Constitution must receive a practical construction.

And the court discusses the correlative relation of taxation.

I respectfully urge upon the able Senator's attention this point. Would not the Senator conclude from this, and this opinion following, that the subject matter of tax, the method in which it operates, the effect it has upon the subject matter which must be the basis to determine whether it is legal or not—I ask the Senator, would not the tax be illegal if it shall be held that in its operation it does serve to retard the instrumentalities of the Federal Government? Would it not be held, therefore, illegal if we put one upon it and so served in its operation to retard the object? Are we, therefore, not back again to the question as to the effect of the operation of the tax that the State may or may not tax the Federal Government or may or may not grant the immunity, according to the purpose of the legislation, rather than to the mere distinction in powers of State and Federal Government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, my complaint about this exemption is that it interferes with the sovereign power of the State to tax within the limits of the State the same kind of property that it taxes in the hands of private individuals, simply because it happens to be held by an association which in an altogether different connection may act as an agency of the General Government.

Mr. STERLING rose.

NOMINATION OF LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is, I see, in his seat, and I want to call attention while he is here to an interview which purports to have been given by the Senator to the newspapers, as reported in the Washington Herald of this morning. In the course of that interview, the Senator from Arizona is quoted as having said—I read the article:

The session of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate held yesterday to consider the nomination of Louis D. Brandeis for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court was attended with some acrimony and Senator ASHURST, who is favorable to the confirmation of Brandeis, left the meeting in perturbed state of mind after telling the Republican members of the committee that they were deliberately filibustering against a report on the nomination.

I hope the Senator from Arizona was not responsible for giving that interview, because nothing of the kind occurred.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the first place, no Republican Senator is responsible for not having an immediate report made on the Brandeis case. On the contrary, so far as I am informed, the Republican members of that committee are quite ready to vote upon it at any time; and, second, if the Senator was in a perturbed state of mind, I did not observe it. In the third place, the Senator did not tell the Republican members of the committee that they were deliberately filibustering or that they were filibustering at all, because I was present during the whole of the meeting and nothing of that sort occurred.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me, I will state that I have never seen that interview. I never said in the Judiciary Committee that the Republican members were filibustering. I have never seen that interview. The interview which I saw in the New York World was one that is substantially correct. When I came out of the Judiciary Committee yesterday morning I did say something in response to questions about this case, and, Mr. President, as was my wont and my custom, I said what I thought. I am not of that character of public men who give an interview to a newspaper reporter and then when the newspaper man honestly and faithfully publishes the same, shifts the responsibility and say the paper garbled the statement.

What I said to the newspaper man was this. The reporter asked me, "Do you think the Republican members are filibustering until after the convention?" I said "Yes, sir"; and I did think it, and, upon the whole, I think it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say to the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will permit me a moment right there. I wish to say if the Senator thinks so the thought of the Senator is without warrant.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to know that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is not any other member of the committee, in my judgment, who will agree with the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I think that is quite true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Democrat or Republican.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator from Arizona had been as faithful in his attendance upon the hearings as the Republican Members and other Democratic Members have been, he would not have formed that notion, because I say for both the Republican and the Democratic members of the committee that they have proceeded with fair and honest purpose to reach a definite conclusion, and I can only regret that the Senator from Arizona has not honored the committee with his presence so as to assist them in that laudable purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, unlike some other members of the Judiciary Committee I do not pretend to deliberate when my mind is made up. I do not wish any members of the Judiciary Committee, of which I happen to be a member, to feel offended. A member of the Judiciary Committee told me this afternoon that I had violated the proprieties in stating what took place in the Judiciary Committee. Mr. President, you can remove me from the Judiciary Committee, but you can not seal my mouth.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator has reference to me. I did not make the statement. I said I thought retailing in public what occurred in executive session of the Judiciary Committee or any other committee was an impropriety, the same as it would be to reveal what occurred in an executive session of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I deny here and now that I retailed what took place. I do not say what took place. I assert here on my responsibility as a Senator, and I call the reporter to witness, that I never stated what took place. I said what I thought, and I should like to see the color of the person's hair who can imprison my thoughts. I can well understand the perturbation, indeed the astonishment, that must have greeted the Republican Party when the name of such a man as Louis D. Brandeis was sent in to be a justice of the Supreme Court.

If the nominee had been a man who all his life had been steering giant corporations around the law, there would have been a yell of approval from the Republican side, but there having been sent in the name of a man who has consecrated his life to the poor people of this country, casuistry must be resorted to, and then all the delay that can be conjured up is resorted to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment. As to whether or not there is a filibuster on the case can easily be determined next Monday morning by a vote on the matter. If all are willing to vote and do vote, then I shall believe there is no filibuster; but it must not be forgotten, in connection, that in your desperation to secure a candidate whom you think could win, in your desperation to overthrow Woodrow Wilson—not Republican Senators, they are above it—but their party has reached out its hands and attempted to grasp from the Supreme Court of the United States one of its members in order to mingle him in the debaucheries of politics, and so flagrant is your disregard of that great court that one of your own members, the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], an honored member of the Judiciary Committee, openly rebuked you in the Senate for that conduct.

I do not resent the resentment which you feel over my interview. I again assert I did not say what took place in that committee; I said what I thought and I stand by it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, Mr. President, I have nothing further to say than what I have said. Attention has been called by a Senator to an interview which was given out, and which the Senator from Arizona fathers. The interview states anything but the truth. The Senator himself is perfectly aware of that, because he has been informed of it, and he has reliance on the word of those who have informed him. All the tirade about political matter cuts no figure. The interview is denied.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment, please. I hardly know what effect that would have. The interview can not be denied, because I gave it. I gave the interview, and I assert I believed it when I said it. If the Senator wants to say he does not believe that I believed it, that is a different question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator, did the Senator give the interview I read?

Mr. ASHURST. No. I did not. The interview I gave was this——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator, does the Senator repudiate the statement in the Herald which I read?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me see what the Senator wants me to repudiate before I do any repudiating.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Pardon me just a moment. This paper, the Washington Herald, which is usually an accurate paper, says as follows—I omit the headlines, because headlines never mean anything in a newspaper:

The session of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate held yesterday to consider the nomination of Louis D. Brandeis for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court was attended with some acrimony.

That is not so; there was no acrimony displayed. I did not feel any acrimony, and do not feel any now.

Senator ASHURST, who is favorable to the confirmation of Brandeis, left the meeting in a perturbed state of mind.

Well, that is not so.

After telling the Republican members of the committee that they were deliberately filibustering against a report on the nomination—

That is wholly and purely a fabrication. I did not tell any Senator such a thing.

Later, after he emerged from the committee room, the Senator said that there was a disposition to postpone action on the nomination until after the national conventions. He charged that questions had been asked for the twentieth time in the committee—

That is true, though I did not charge that. The same question has probably been asked 20 times.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To what question does the Senator refer?

Mr. ASHURST. Like many things in this life, they are too numerous to mention.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not recall any such question as the Senator mentions. I would be glad if he would point it out.

Mr. ASHURST. The statement in the Herald continues—and old straw thrashed over, and the Senator intimated that if dilatory tactics were persisted in the matter might be taken up in the executive session of the Senate and a motion made to discharge the committee from further consideration of the case.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be stapled to this interview as reported in the Herald. I say again that what took place was this: As I emerged from the committee room I met a number of reporters. It has not been my habit to state what takes place in any executive session, although I am opposed to any kind of executive sessions. If I had my way, there would be no such thing as an executive session—the doors would be unlocked and open. I was asked by the reporters if I thought a filibuster was being conducted on the Brandeis nomination until after the conventions. The words were put to me in that way, and I said, "Yes; I think so, and I wish you would say so in your newspapers."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does not the Senator know that substantially the entire session of the committee to which he refers in the interview was consumed in an argument made by a Democratic member of the committee in favor of Mr. Brandeis?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Wyoming stated the truth when he said I had not been in attendance at all times upon the Judiciary Committee meetings.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator was present yesterday.

Mr. ASHURST. I was there yesterday, and I want to say that I have not been present because I had to attend conference meetings on the Indian appropriation bill, which have lasted a month and were only finished this morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then the Senator does not know what I have just stated in the form of an inquiry?

Mr. ASHURST. I can not answer that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator will be so assured by his fellow Democratic members of the committee. Does he know that three-fourths of the time that has been taken up since the nomination was reported to the full committee has been consumed by Democratic members of the committee?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and I deplore that. I deplore a Democratic filibuster even more than I do a Republican filibuster.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Arizona stated nothing about a Democratic filibuster.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I did not, because when I think of a filibuster I think of your party. It filibustered three months last winter to beat the ship-purchase bill, so that the Shipping Trust might get a greater advantage over the people; and when I think of a filibuster I think of Republicans.

Mr. CUMMINS. However, in this instance I should think the Senator from Arizona would want to be accurate about it.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, I do want to be; and I hope that I am reasonably accurate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does not the Senator know that the Republican Members have been ready to vote upon this nomination since the time it came in, and have offered over and over again to take a vote upon it; and it has so happened—and it might just as well be known now—it has so happened that the Republican Members have been in attendance and some of the Democratic Members have not been in attendance, so that if a vote had been taken it would probably have resulted at any time in an unfavorable report, so far as Mr. Brandeis is concerned?

Mr. ASHURST. That is all the more to be deplored.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ASHURST. In just a moment. I wish to say before I conclude, that if the Democratic President had sent in here the name of some corporation lawyer, whose life had been given up to steering corporations around the law, for instance, the former Senator from New York, I do not suppose there would be any of the simulated anger which has been manifested here because I said to a reporter of a newspaper what I thought.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will permit me just a moment, there is no "simulated anger" here; there is no anger at all. I for one resented what appeared to be an absolutely false statement, and one which the Senator himself now denies; that is all.

Mr. ASHURST. I deny that which the Herald has put into my mouth, and I regret it, because the Herald is usually an accurate paper. I want to put into the RECORD a clipping from the New York World, which I think very fairly states what I said. I ask that permission, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I think the Members of the Senate know what my views are respecting the appointment of Mr. Brandeis. I was on the subcommittee and have made a separate report, as other members of the subcommittee have done, expressing my views as clearly as I could state them. I have attended every meeting of the Judiciary Committee since that matter has been under consideration. I have not noticed any disposition on the part of any member of the committee on either side to filibuster or to prevent the committee from reaching a vote.

There are a number of charges which have been made and which were heard before the subcommittee. The evidence has been before the full committee, and some of those charges have been carefully considered and discussed by the different members of the committee. I think it is entirely proper that the committee in an important matter of this kind should do that very thing, and do it carefully and consistently, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not this appointment should be confirmed.

There was nothing in the proceedings of the committee at the last session that anybody could criticize. One of the members of the committee reviewed carefully the evidence bearing upon one of these charges, as he had a perfect right to do. He was a Democratic member of the committee, but what difference does it make whether he was a Democratic member or a Republican member in dealing with a question of this kind, involving the appointment of a man to the Supreme Court of the United States?

I resent the effort to make it a political issue at all. It ought not to be considered in any such way. I have the most kindly feeling for the Senator from Arizona, as I think he knows. I have not felt any resentment about it; but I am sorry that the Senator should in his zeal have permitted himself to give out a statement of this kind. Of course, he had a right to think what he pleased. No man's thinking ought to be controlled by anybody else; but I think it was unfortunate that he should have expressed his thoughts—if they are expressed in the interview—of what was going on before his own committee. I think that is a very unfortunate situation, and I am sorry.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, no rebuke that the distinguished Senator from California could administer to me could make me feel resentful, because I love him too much, and he is so often right that frequently I am inclined at times to agree with him; but this is not a political contest. It is not a contest between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party; it is a contest between that great inarticulate mass of people who, if war should be declared, would give their bodies to preserve this Republic—that is the issue on one hand—and the great, grasping corporations on the other, who want kept off the bench a man who will do all men justice. So long as that is the issue I shall refuse to allow my thoughts to be imprisoned, whether I entertain them at one place or another. I repeat that I hold no brief for Mr. Brandeis. So far as politics are concerned, he may have registered as a Republican, so far as I know, and I do not care whether he is a progressive Republican or a regular Republican or what not; the only thing that I measure him by is this: Is he honest and is he capable? I do not care anything about the political exigencies. It is your party and not mine that is reaching out its hands to get hold of somebody on the bench in your desperation for a candidate; it is not my party. I ask that there be printed in the RECORD the short clipping from the New York World to which I have referred.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to have it read.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do I understand that the clipping to which the Senator has referred represents his present view?

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read, and then I will state.

Mr. HUGHES. It is the interview that was in the New York World.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood the Senator to say that it substantially represented his views——

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read, and I will then answer that question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And therefore he asked to have it inserted in the RECORD. I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the article.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. BRANDEGEE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to make a comment in connection with the matter which has been read, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from North Carolina desires to speak, and he is ranking member of the Judiciary Committee at present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I only wanted to speak in connection with the matter concerning which I have spoken; but I am willing to wait until the Senator from North Carolina concludes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Arizona has not been more regular in his attendance upon the committee. If he had been, I think he would not have made these charges. He has been detained on other business of the Senate, as it has been his duty to attend the sessions of another committee having under consideration an appropriation bill. He has always been faithful in his attendance on the committee in so far as was possible, but during the course of the discussions in the Judiciary Committee he has been present very few times.

The truth of the matter is that two Democratic Senators, members of the committee, have been absent for some weeks; and the Senator from Arizona left word that he could be sent for at any time and would be ready to attend, but he was not present in the committee all the time when the discussions were going on.

Furthermore, I think, in justice, I should say that most of the discussion has been on the part of Democratic Senators. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], as has been stated in the clipping which has been read, did take nearly all the time at the last meeting at which the charge in connection with the Lennox case was under discussion. I have seen no disposition on the part of any Republican to delay a report on the nomination; in truth, I think I have heard several of them say they were ready to vote at any time, and I think that was the consensus of opinion of the Republicans on the committee.

Some Democrats wanted to go into this question and hear from the different members of the subcommittee in regard to three or four serious charges which have been made against Mr. Brandeis. The committee meets at half past 10 and the Senate meets at 12, when there is usually a roll call. It takes some time to examine into these charges. There are about 1,000 or more pages of testimony, and we have been going through the charges. We have now come to the Lennox matter, which took nearly all of yesterday, the time being occupied by the discussion of the Senator from Montana. After he concludes, there will be discussion on the other side. It is a matter that necessarily takes time, but I myself have never seen any disposition to delay.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have attended each of the meetings of the Judiciary Committee when the nomination of Mr. Brandeis has been under consideration, and I do not think I have been out of the committee room five minutes when it was under consideration. With the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I regret that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has been detained by his duties in connection with other committees and does not know the earnest consideration which the Judiciary Committee is giving to this nomination. He explained to us the urgency of other committee meetings that prevented his being present with the Judiciary Committee. I am sure if he had been present he would have appreciated fully what was really going on in the committee. He did not appreciate it, having been absent so much of the time.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the trouble with me. I do know what is going on in the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I repeat that I regret the Senator did not know what was going on. He misunderstood what was going on, or he would not have made the statement which he has made.

Now, I state that there has been no filibustering by anybody in that committee. Most of the time has been taken up by the Democrats, and there never has been a time when Mr. Brandeis could have obtained a favorable report from those present at a committee meeting. He may yet obtain it. Most of the time the Republicans have been in the majority; only once or twice have we had a majority of Democrats present. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is detained at home sick. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained by sickness in east Tennessee. I say frankly for myself that there never has been a time that I have been ready to vote for a report favorable to Mr. Brandeis. I have voted to postpone the consideration of the nomination because I have not reached a conclusion, and I wanted a further investigation and more information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has put into the RECORD an article from a newspaper which states that the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee are filibustering against taking a vote on the nomination of a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and he has given it out to the press of the country.

Mr. President, I have attended every meeting of that committee in which that nomination has been considered. There has been no time when the Republicans have made the slightest attempt to hinder coming to a vote. I myself the other day, when the debate seemed to languish, suggested that if nobody else cared to be heard, it was the duty of the Chair to order the roll to be called, whereupon some Senator commenced to discuss the case.

It does seem to me that the Senator from Arizona, having caused this article to be published all over the country, making a partisan charge, charging all the Republicans of the committee with an attempt to filibuster upon this nomination until after certain political conventions have been held, either ought to prove his charge or to withdraw it. I do not think myself that he ought to leave it in the RECORD, reasserting it by putting it in the RECORD, after he has heard the disclaimers of the Republican Members.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right. I ought to withdraw it after the disclaimer, because whatever I may have thought then, or whatever I may think now—and I repeat, nobody can imprison my thoughts, or censor what I say—I think there is force in the Senator's statement that Senators having disclaimed it, having asserted that they are not filibustering, I ask to withdraw that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is fine.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask to withdraw that statement upon their disclaimer, because while there has been some little heat manifested, although political ties sever us and this aisle divides us, I know that you are all gentlemen. In view of the disclaimer, I ask leave to withdraw that statement.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I just want to say a word for the RECORD, and that is that the nomination of Mr. Brandeis has been pending for about three months.

Mr. KERN. Three months to-day.

Mr. OWEN. And there apparently has been a concerted assault upon Mr. Brandeis, through various corporations of the country, who have falsely charged him with all kinds of things. He has been subjected to the most vicious and unjust assault ever brought against a nominee for a judgeship, and the fact that the members of the committee of the Republican persuasion appear to be unanimously disposed against him and to have approved these assaults and given the attacks such hospitable reception, even if not intentional encouragement, has probably caused this sentiment which led the Senator from Arizona to believe there was a Republican filibuster being unostentatiously engineered in committee. Certainly there has been a most ungenerous, unfair fight made against this man, who is distinguished by his learning and courage and his obvious desire to see justice done the common people by incorporated wealth. I am glad to see the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee now expressly deny any purpose of intentional delay and hope we may soon have a report.

RURAL CREDITS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, unless some other Senator desires to address himself to this particular subject, I desire to say that it was in the midst of my paragraph, just as I was concluding an illuminating lucubration upon this subject of constitutional farm-loan credits, that these eminent antagonists introduced their acerbity, which I desire now to attempt to mollify, through concluding my paragraph with the softening influence of the law.

I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] if he will not observe the concluding paragraph of this opinion in Eighteenth Wallace in order that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] may observe that the effect of the Ninth Wallace opinion has been seriously qualified by these last observations.

In Eighteenth Wallace the court, on page 34, says:

> It is, however, insisted that the case of Thompson v. The Union Pacific Railroad Co. differs from the case we have now in hand in the fact that it was incorporated by the Territorial legislature and the Legislature of the State of Kansas, while these complainants were incorporated by Congress.

And so forth, and so forth.

Then says the court, concluding:

> It is therefore manifest—

Referring to all these rulings, and particularly the one the able Senator most appropriately introduced—

> It is therefore manifest that exemption of Federal agencies from State taxation is dependent not upon the nature of the agents, or upon the mode of their constitution, or upon the fact that they are agents, but upon the effect of the tax; that is, upon the question whether the tax does in truth deprive them of power to serve the Government as they were intended to serve it or does hinder the efficient exercise of their power. A tax upon their property has no such necessary effect. It leaves them free to discharge the duties they have undertaken to perform.

I merely read this paragraph to the able Senator to see if he concludes with me that the later rulings clearly indicate that the test of whether these exemptions are legal or not is not whether they appear in letter to conflict with some provision of the Federal Constitution, but what would be the effect of the operation, which is to be derived from the facts of the case, and arrived at by the method of the operation of the tax rather than by a mere comparison of the verbiage of the statute clause on the one hand and a constitutional clause on the other.

I thank the Senator for allowing me to take this time.

STEAMER "NORMANIA."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a private bill (S. 4760) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Normania to William F. Stifel, which was reported yesterday, and is now on the calendar. There seems to be some special reason why its passage should be desired, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be placed upon its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Ottawa Transit Co., of Mentor, Lake County, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Normania, official No. 205017, to the William F. Stifel.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Friday, April 28, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 29, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we find ourselves involved in a moral order the laws of which are as inexorable as the physical laws which environ us, and we realize the weaknesses, the foibles, and the infirmities of human nature. Impart unto us, therefore, we beseech Thee, strength to resist wrong, power to overcome the temptations which doth so easily beset us, that we may adjust ourselves to that order and thus prove ourselves worthy of the trust Thou hast reposed in us. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES AND TRAVELERS ON RAILROADS.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider at this time the bill (S. 3769) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, and that a similar House bill (H. R. 9132) lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3769, and consider the same at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:
> "SEC. 3. That any such common carrier, or any officer or agent thereof, requiring or permitting any employee to go, be, or remain on duty in violation of the second section hereof shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each and every violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violations shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suit upon satisfactory information being lodged with him; but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of such violation; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorney information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge. In all prosecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have knowledge of all acts of all its officers and agents: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in any case of casualty or unavoidable accident or the act of God; nor where the delay was the result of a cause not known to the carrier or its officer or agent in charge of such employee at the time said employee left a terminal and which could not have been foreseen: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the crews of wrecking or relief trains."
> SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall affect, or be held to affect, any suit that may be instituted for recovery of penalty for violation of the act hereby amended occurring prior to the approval of this act, or any suit for such penalty or growing out of alleged violation of the act hereby amended which may be pending in any court at the time of the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar bill, H. R. 9132, on the House Calendar will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. DEWALT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RAKER, for the day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PRICE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. CONRY, for three days, on account of illness.

INCREASING CORPS OF CADETS AT WEST POINT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a conference report on the Military Academy bill, increasing the number of cadets, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the report is more illuminating than the statement, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 611).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4876) entitled "An act to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 4, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "twenty of whom shall be selected from among the honor graduates of educational institutions having officers of the Regular Army detailed as professors of military science and tactics under existing law or any law hereafter enacted for the detail of officer of the Regular Army to such institutions, and which institutions are designated as 'honor schools' upon the determination of their relative standing at the last preceding annual inspection regularly made by the War Department"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in number as nearly equal as practicable"; and the House agree to the same.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
H. A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on (S. 4876) entitled "An act to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy," make the following statement:

House amendment No. 1 strikes out the word "sixty" and inserts "eighty," and the Senate recedes.

House amendment No. 3 strikes out and inserts the same words, and the Senate recedes.

House amendment No. 4 inserts the words "congressional or" on page 1, line 10, and the Senate recedes.

House amendment No. 6 strikes out the words "two hundred" and inserts the words "one hundred and eighty," and the Senate recedes.

House amendment No. 2 was an amendment providing for appointment from honor schools of certain graduates of those schools; the House receded with an amendment changing the verbiage, but not the substance of the House amendment.

House amendment No. 5 read as follows: "In as near equal proportion as possible," and the House receded with the following amendment: "In number as nearly equal as practicable."

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. What will be the entire quota of cadets at the Military Academy at one time when the full maximum is reached under this bill?

Mr. DENT. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 1,300. My figures make the number 1,332, but I would not say that I was absolutely accurate about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. When will that maximum be attained?

Mr. DENT. I can not answer that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may take four years, at least?

Mr. DENT. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What capacity has the Academy at present, as far as buildings are concerned?

Mr. DENT. My recollection is that they can support about 1,200 there now, with the estimates made for the ensuing fiscal year to accommodate them. These estimates are as follows:

Estimate of cost to make the United States Military Academy able to accommodate 1,200 cadets.

Ordnance and quartermaster equipment	$56,932
Changes in camp grounds	41,000
Changes in academic buildings and additional furniture	42,000
Changes in mess hall and new mess-hall furniture	9,663
Changes in barrarks	2,000
For temporary construction for cantonment barracks, hospitals, and other temporary structures	108,405
Total ($41,662.70 already estimated for, House Doc. 432)	260,000

Mr. STAFFORD. So that it will not require any additional buildings in the near future to provide for this additional quota?

Mr. DENT. It will require some changes but not to any great extent.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is one question further, which was not in dispute between the two bodies; but I can not understand why it is that these appointees of the President from the National Guards are restricted, so far as age is concerned, to between the ages of 19 and 20, when other cadets are eligible for appointment between the ages of 17 and 22.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I will confess to the gentleman that I do not know myself why the Senate adopted that provision. I suppose it was in order to get men of some experience, but it was in the Senate bill as it originally passed, and I was not present in the Committee on Military Affairs when that feature of the bill was discussed. I do not know that that was brought up in the Military Committee of the House at all. I confess that I do not see any real good reason for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can see that it is of very little value to the National Guard to give them the privilege of appointment, if limited to age between 19 and 20 years. If they had the same privilege as to age as appointees to the academy generally—from 17 to 22—it might permit an eligible roll that could be considered for appointment from the National Guard.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman was present when this bill was passed, under suspension of the rules, the other day, was he not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I may have been temporarily absent.

Mr. DENT. I am sorry the gentleman did not call attention to that feature at that time when it might have been changed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought perhaps there was some good reason why the committee did not take action upon it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think the reason that was attributed was that those appointed for the academy not in the National Guard are usually in either high schools or academies preparing, and have not yet entered the National Guard. The National Guard could receive them that early, but usually does not, and if you did not extend the minimum age, so far as the National Guard is concerned, you would not get as good a choice.

Mr. DENT. That sounds like a very plausible reason.

Mr. COX. Section 4, I believe it was, that was stricken out in the House the day the bill passed the House is eliminated?

Mr. DENT. That is eliminated.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The question came to me as to why we did not make the full apportionment at once. Is that due to the fact that they are not prepared?

Mr. DENT. Not absolutely prepared.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask what is the total increase provided for in this bill?

Mr. DENT. It practically doubles the capacity.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And by whom are these cadets, whose increase is provided for in this bill, named?

Mr. DENT. They are named by the President, just as they are at the present time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They are named now, are they not, on nomination by Representatives?

Mr. DENT. That is a custom that the War Department has indulged in for many years, but the law authorizes the appointment to be made by the President, and this does not change the law in any respect whatever.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Has the gentleman information as to whether that custom will be retained?

Mr. DENT. I am sure it will be.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And these added nominations will be made——

Mr. DENT. By the Members of the House and the Senate, just as they have been heretofore.

Mr. ADAMSON. I simply wanted to suggest to my distinguished friend from Alabama, as to the question raised by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], that the action of the House took that matter out of issue between the two Houses.

Mr. DENT. It certainly did.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless some other gentleman desires to discuss this subject, I move the adoption——

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I have not been able to hear up to this time. When is a Member of Congress entitled to nominate a candidate or recommend him?

Mr. DENT. Under this additional appointment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DENT. That would be a matter that would have to be worked out by the War Department. When we increased the midshipmen at Annapolis we were authorized by the department to make the appointment, and my recollection is that we were given only about six weeks in which to have our young men who were nominated prepare for the examination. But we were told that we might wait until the next year in order to fill a vacancy, and I presume that the War Department will follow the same course.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there will be one nomination to each Representative this year?

Mr. DENT. One additional nomination.

Mr. CANNON. One additional nomination?

Mr. DENT. Yes, sir. It will be left to the War Department to work out the details.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ALFRED NOBLE MEMORIAL FOUNTAIN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes on the constitutional amendment granting suffrage to women.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 63 and put it on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. We want to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Let us have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 63, authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial fountain to Alfred Noble.

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the American Society of Civil Engineers for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the White House, of a memorial fountain to Alfred Noble, a civil engineer of distinguished ability in connection with Government work, whose services have been of conspicuous benefit to the country: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial fountain shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial fountain: Provided further, That if the erection of this memorial fountain shall not be begun within three years from and after the passage of this resolution the permission granted may, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, be revoked at any time.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wanted to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. This resolution contemplates that this memorial fountain will be erected by the American Society of Civil Engineers, without any appropriation?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; at their own expense.

Mr. BORLAND. Without any appropriation on the part of Congress, and the only request made is that we furnish the site on public ground. Now, that is true up to that point?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. But the memorial being a fountain, which requires continuous operation—a fountain, of course, must be supplied with water from some source or it is not a fountain—I assume that either the District government or the National Government is going to supply the expense of running that fountain. Is that true?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I presume that is true.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman recalls the fountain down here at the Station Plaza is now in dispute between the District and the Federal Government as to which Government ought to furnish the water. Is there any provision about this in the resolution?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I confess that that contingency has never crossed my mind. I had an idea that the water just flowed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. It is unfortunately true that even when people give us something, we have to pay a little something to keep it.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if he can give us any idea where it is probable that this fountain will be located?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that my information is that while they have not been officially requested to consider the matter, the Commission on Fine Arts, at a late session in this city, did consider it, and did examine the various possible sites, with a view to determining some place where this fountain could be put in harmony with the general landscaping and parking schemes of the city of Washington. They had in view a site that would in no way interfere with the beautification and development of Washington along that line; and they have reached the conclusion again, if I have been correctly informed, that it would be well to place it down somewhere near Continental Hall, the building of the Daughters of the American Revolution, somewhere in the rear of it.

Mr. MANN. In Potomac Park?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is there a place called McPherson Park down there?

Mr. STAFFORD. McPherson Square is at Fifteenth and K Streets.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not that. Is there one called Rawlins Park down there? I know where the Rawlins Statue is, but it is not there. My recollection now is that it is in Rawlins Place or Park.

Mr. MANN. In that connection I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The resolution refers to a memorial fountain. Is it to be really a fountain, or some form of statue such as those with which we are now somewhat overburdened in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to tell the gentleman that I have been assured that it will be a fountain. It will be a real fountain, not a statue such as those with which the District of Columbia is overburdened. There is a superabundance of ornaments of that kind already, if they are indeed ornaments. This is to be a fountain and a work of art.

When the matter was first brought to my attention the gentleman having it in charge did contemplate a different sort of memorial, but I told them I would not be in favor of it unless it took the form of a fountain. We have comparatively few fountains. I told them I was against any more statues and they assured me that they were glad to adopt the suggestion of a fountain, and I wrote the word into the bill myself. But the Senate adopted their measure before we got the resolution reported over here, a few days before.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Are we to construe the gentleman's statement to the effect that he is opposed to any more statues as indicating that he is opposed to the statue proposed to be erected to Ericsson?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am speaking only in general terms. In fact, the city of Washington is beginning to look somewhat like a petrified forest, owing to the superabundance of statues of bronze and marble intruding themselves on the vision of the people all the time. Some of them are memorials to men whose march toward oblivion no statue can arrest. Altogether too many statues are erected, and the appearance of Washington will be ruined if we do not forbid it on so prodigal a scale.

Mr. MADDEN. I was interested in the matter with special reference to the statue of Ericsson.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am only one-fifth of the Committee on the Library, anyway, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is more than one-fifth.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. The statue of Gen. Rawlins stood just a little to the west of the Corcoran Art Gallery—a little west of where that gallery is now located—but the statue was moved up to the park in front of the Center Market house. This fountain is to be practically on the site where the Rawlins Statue stood before it was removed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My information is that that is the place where the Commission on Fine Arts tentatively planned to locate it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does not the gentleman from Texas think we should leave part of the city of Washington open for the benefit of posterity, so that the people of the future may be accommodated?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I agree with the gentleman in a general way, and I should adhere rigidly to that rule unless this memorial had taken a form of art in which we are now very deficient.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Would it not be better to make a recommendation to carry out some of this "junk" that we have here, and put that and other works in place of it, if it is real art? Would it not be good, as a precedent, to put up a statue that has real value as an art object?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the gentleman's suggestion is valuable, and I hope he will introduce a resolution to remove a large part of what he has denominated "junk."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution be taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could make a motion. There is a similar resolution on the House Calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what I thought. I move to take it up, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to make the motion. Just ask the Speaker to submit it to the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House joint resolution 88, of the same tenor, is laid on the table.

There was no objection.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes on the constitutional amendment—the Susan B. Anthony amendment, so called. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, Wyoming is the original woman-suffrage State of the Union. The women of Wyoming have voted for all the elective officers in that Commonwealth, State and Territory, for 46 years. Their participation in the affairs of government has been highly helpful and beneficial, and has the approval and hearty and unanimous support of all of our people.

Naturally our people are greatly interested in the resolution now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, proposing a constitutional amendment granting suffrage to women throughout the Union.

As a part of my remarks I desire to have the Clerk read a resolution adopted by the Woman's committee of Albany County, Wyo., on the subject of that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

LARAMIE, WYO., March 28, 1916.

Resolved, That this meeting, the Albany County Branch of the Congressional Union, at Laramie, Wyo., March 28, 1916, calls upon the members of the Judiciary Committee to report immediately and favorably to the House of Representatives the Sutherland-Mondell resolution; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each member of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and also that it be sent to each Member of the congressional delegation of Wyoming, and that it be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Representative FRANK W. MONDELL, of the House, and Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, of the Senate.

ALBANY COUNTY COMMITTEE,
Mrs. M. C. BROWN,
Chairman, Member School Board.
Mrs. W. S. INGHAM.
Dr. GRACE RAYMOND HEBARD,
Professor Political Economy, University of Wyoming.
Mrs. ETTA ROACH.
Mrs. C. L. PATCHELL.
Mrs. MAY BAIRD CAMPBELL,
Secretary.
Mrs. FRANK D. SPAFFORD,
Treasurer.
Mrs. C. A. DUNIWAY,
Chairman Resolution Committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a similar resolution adopted by the women of Laramie County, Wyo., at the meeting held in Cheyenne April 15, to welcome the envoys from the nonsuffrage States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution.

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 15, 1916.

Resolved, That this meeting for the envoys from the nonsuffrage States, at Cheyenne, Wyo., April 15, 1916, calls upon the members of the Judiciary Committee to reconsider and report favorably to the House of Representatives the Sutherland-Mondell resolution; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each member of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives and also that it be sent to each Member of the congressional delegation of Wyoming, and that it be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Representative FRANK W. MONDELL, of the House, and Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, of the Senate.

Mrs. R. A. MORTON, Chairman.

This resolution was seconded by Judge W. S. Metz., of Sheridan, Wyo., Democratic floor leader of the Wyoming Legislature of 1915.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred House resolution 219, respectfully reports the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

House resolution 219 (H. Rept. 612).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 12717, a bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and in such further consideration it shall be in order to offer and consider as amendments thereto (the general rules of the House notwithstanding) the following:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution which is now being read, with the exception of the latter part, on pages 44 and 45, contains certain bills which were printed in the RECORD yesterday, being offered as amendments to the Agricultural bill. I ask unanimous consent that those parts which have already been printed in the RECORD be not read, that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the Clerk reading them very rapidly, but I think that, theoretically at least, they ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Part A.

That this part, to be known as the United States cotton futures act, be, and hereby is, enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"That this act shall be known by the short title of the 'United States cotton futures act.'

"SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of this act, the term 'contract of sale' shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. That the word 'person,' wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

"SEC. 3. That upon each contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton involved in any such contract.

"SEC. 4. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be in writing, plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract, and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved, without giving the weight, each bale shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

"SEC. 5. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

"First. Conform to the requirements of section 4 of, and the rules and regulations made pursuant to, this act.

"Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

"Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, and no other grade or grades.

"Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the actual commercial differences, determined as hereinafter provided.

"Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of good ordinary, or cotton that is below the grade of good ordinary, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of low middling, or, if stained, cotton that is below the grade of middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple or cotton that is 'gin cut' or reginned, or cotton that is 'repacked' or 'false packed' or 'mixed packed' or 'water packed,' shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

"Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that, on the fifth business day prior to delivery, the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that, on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade.

"Seventh. Provide that, in case a dispute arises between the person making the tender and the person receiving the same, as to the quality, or the grade, or the length of staple, of any cotton tendered under the contract, either party may refer the question to the Secretary of Agriculture for determination, and that such dispute shall be referred and determined, and the costs thereof fixed, assessed, collected, and paid in such manner and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase 'Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 5.'

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section, and his findings upon any dispute referred to him under said seventh subdivision, made after the parties in interest have had an opportunity to be heard by him or such officer, officers, agent, or agents of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties or their privies as prima facie evidence of the true quality or grade or length of staple of the cotton involved.

"SEC. 6. That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton of grades above or below the basis grade in the settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section five, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, established by the sale of spot cotton in the market where the future transaction involved occurs and is consummated if such market be a bona fide spot market; and in the event there be no bona fide spot market at or in the place in which such future transaction occurs, then, and in that case, the said differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton above or below the basis grade shall be determined by the average actual commercial differences in value thereof, upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, in the spot markets of not less than five places designated for the purpose from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as such values were established by the sales of spot cotton in such designated five or more markets: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton established by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That whenever the value of one grade is to be determined from the sale or sales of spot cotton of another grade or grades, such value shall be fixed in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed for the purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such, and of which he shall give public notice.

"SEC. 8. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets, the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton and of other grades of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places, in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton, of the same or different grades, in the markets selected and designated by him, from time to time, for that purpose, and in that event, differences in value of cotton of various grades involved in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the 'Official cotton standards of the United States,' and to adopt, change, or replace the standard for any grade of cotton established under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 251), and acts supplementary thereto: Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That subsequent to six months after the date section 3 of this act becomes effective, no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary.

"SEC. 10. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof, if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

"First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be brought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

"Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

"Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of 'set-off' or 'ring' settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

"The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words 'Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 10.'

"This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton.

"This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

"SEC. 11. That upon each order transmitted, or directed or authorized to be transmitted, by any person within the United States for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery, in cases in which the contract of sale is or is to be made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in any foreign country, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if the contract made in pursuance thereof comply either with the conditions specified in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5, or with all the conditions specified in section 10 of this act, except that the quantity of the cotton involved in the contract may be expressed therein in terms of kilograms instead of pounds: Provided further, That if at the time any such contract is entered into the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, shall have determined and, by declaration then unrevoked, in the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act, shall have publicly announced that its terms are the substantial equivalent, and sufficient to accomplish the purposes, of the conditions specified in the fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5 of this act, and the rules and regulations relating thereto, such contract shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to comply with the said conditions: And provided further, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any order mentioned in this section if, first, such order and the contract made in pursuance thereof be solely for hedging the purchase or sale of spot cotton shipped, or to be shipped, from the United States to any foreign country, or the shipment or consignment for sale of spot cotton from the United States to any foreign country, whether such order or contract be the one given or made originally, or be subsequently given or made for a purchase or sale to be substituted, for hedging the purchase, sale, or shipment or consignment for sale, of spot cotton, or be for the liquidation of any such transaction, and, second, a report of such transaction, including the shipment of the cotton involved, be made to the Secretary of the Treasury at such time or times and in such form as he may require.

"SEC. 11A. That upon each order received in the United States which shall have been, directly or indirectly, transmitted, or directed or authorized to be transmitted, by any person, from a foreign country in which there is any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which a contract of sale is made pursuant thereto at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in the United States, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery which may be made at, on, or in the exchanges, boards of trade, and similar institutions and places of business in such foreign country or countries comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of contracts of sale in foreign countries. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized from time to time to ascertain and determine in what foreign countries there are any exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, and whether any such contracts of sale which may be made at, on, or in such exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of such contracts of sale. He shall publish such determinations in his rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"SEC. 12. That the tax imposed by section 3 of this act shall be paid by the seller of the cotton involved in the contract of sale, by means of stamps which shall be affixed to such contracts, or to the memoranda evidencing the same, and canceled in compliance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The tax imposed by sections 11 and 11A of this act shall be paid by the sender of the order from the United States or the receiver in the United States of the order coming from a foreign country, as the case may be, and collected in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 13. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act which does not conform to the requirements of section 4 hereof and has not the necessary stamps affixed thereto as required by section 12 hereof shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by or on behalf of any party to such contract or his privies. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery, made in pursuance of any order mentioned in sections 11 and 11A of this act, shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by or on behalf of any party to such contract, or his privies, unless it conforms to the requirements of section 4 hereof, and the tax imposed by section 11 or 11A upon the order for such contract shall have been paid in compliance with section 12 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to collect the tax imposed by this act and otherwise to enforce its provisions. Further to effect this purpose, he shall require all persons coming within its provisions to keep such records and statements of account, and may require such persons to make such returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions mentioned in sections 3, 11, and 11A of this act, including the origin, making, execution, settlement, and fulfillment thereof; he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution for the purpose of clearing, settling, or adjusting transactions mentioned in section 3 of this act to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and correctly disclose all facts in their possession relating to such transactions; and he may appoint agents to conduct the inspection necessary to collect said tax and otherwise to enforce this act and all rules and regulations made by him in pursuance hereof, and may fix the compensation of such agents. The provisions of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, so far as applicable, including sections 3173, 3174, and 3175 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, are hereby extended, and made to apply, to this act.

"SEC. 15. That any person liable to the payment of any tax imposed by this act who fails to pay, or evades or attempts to evade, the payment of such tax, and any person who otherwise violates any provision of this act, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $20,000, in the discretion of the court; and, in case of natural persons, may, in addition, be punished by imprisonment for not less than 60 days nor more than 3 years, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 16. That in addition to the foregoing punishment there is hereby imposed, on account of each violation of this act, a penalty of $2,000, to be recovered in an action founded on this act in the name of the United States as plaintiff, and when so recovered one-half of said amount shall be paid over to the person giving the information upon which such recovery was based. It shall be the duty of United States attorneys, to whom satisfactory evidence of violations of this act is furnished, to institute and prosecute actions for the recovery of the penalties prescribed by this section.

"SEC. 17. That no person whose evidence is deemed material by the officer prosecuting on behalf of the United States in any case brought under any provision of this act shall withhold his testimony because of complicity by him in any violation of this act or of any regulation made pursuant to this act, but any such person called by such officer who testifies in such case shall be exempt from prosecution for any offense to which his testimony relates.

"SEC. 18. That the payment of any tax levied by this act shall not exempt any person from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State for entering into contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, nor shall the payment of any tax imposed by this act be held to prohibit any State or municipality from imposing a tax on the same transaction.

"SEC. 19. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated by the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., 1017), for 'collecting the cotton-futures tax,' or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act and any duties remaining to be performed by him under the United States cotton-futures act of August 18, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 693).

"SEC. 20. L., 1086), or so much of each of said unexpended balances as may be necessary, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the same purposes, in carrying out the provisions of this act, as those for which said sums, respectively, were originally appropriated, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out any duties remaining to be performed by him under the said act of August 18, 1914. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to publish from time to time the results of investigations made in pursuance of this act. All sums collected by the Secretary of Agriculture as costs under section 5, or for furnishing practical forms under section 9, of this act, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 21. That sections 9, 19, and 20 of this act and all provisions of this act authorizing rules and regulations to be prescribed shall be effective immediately; section 11A of this act shall become and be effective on and after the 1st day of August, 1917. "SEC. 22. That the act entitled 'An act to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes,' approved August 18, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 693), is hereby repealed, effective on and after the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any right or privilege accrued, any penalty or liability incurred, or any proceeding commenced under said act of August 18, 1914, or to diminish any authority conferred by said act on any official of the United States necessary to enable him to carry out any duties remaining to be performed by him under the said act, or to impair the effect of the findings of the Secretary of Agriculture upon any dispute referred to him under said act, or to affect any right in respect to, or arising out of, any contract mentioned in section 3 of said act, made on or subsequent to February 18, 1915, and prior to the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act, but so far as concerns any such contract said act of August 18, 1914, shall remain in force with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

"SEC. 23. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered."

AMENDMENT NO. 2.

Part B.

That this part, to be known as the United States grain-grades act, be and is hereby enacted, to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"That this act shall be known by the short title of the 'United States grain-grades act.'

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish, as soon as may be after the enactment hereof, standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as in his judgment the usages of the trade may warrant and permit, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to alter or modify such standards whenever the necessities of the trade may require. In promulgating the standards, or any alteration or modification of such standards, the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same shall become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

"SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any such grain which is sold or offered for sale by grade unless the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act and the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States: Provided, That any such grain not sold or offered for sale by grade may be sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce by sample or by type, or under any name, description, or designation which is not false or misleading, and which name, description, or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard of the United States: Provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may be shipped to or through any place at which an inspector licensed under this act is located, subject, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to be inspected at the place to which shipped, or at the place through which shipped for inspection, and subject further to the right of appeal from such inspection, as provided in section 6 of this act: And provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by any of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may, upon compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, be shipped without inspection from a place at which there is no inspector licensed under this act to a place at which there is no such inspector, subject to the right of either party to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine and certify the true grade thereof. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe, or in any way refer to, any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That no person shall represent that any grain shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of a grade fixed in the official grain standards other than as shown by a certificate therefor issued in compliance with this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act, and which has been certified to conform to any grade fixed therefor in such official grain standards, or which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved, and to the inspector thereof if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade, or has been sold or offered for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings.

"SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain which has been sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grade, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary and to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. In every such case the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge and assess, and cause to be collected, a reasonable fee in amount to be fixed by him, which fee shall be refunded if the appeal is sustained. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings.

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent, to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. No person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain for interstate or foreign commerce which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the official grades of the United States, unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That in any State which has State grain inspection established by law, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in issuing licenses, give preference to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given, the Secretary shall determine that any inspector has been found to be incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly or by any other standard than is authorized under this act, or has issued any false certificate of inspection, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has knowingly violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder. Pending investigation the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 9. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of sections 4 or 7 of this act, or any inspector licensed under this act who shall knowingly or carelessly inspect or grade improperly any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or shall knowingly or carelessly give any false certificate of inspection or grade, or shall accept money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, and any person who shall improperly influence or attempt to improperly influence any such inspector in the performance of his duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 11. That the word 'person' wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person.

"SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rent and the employment of such persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere."

AMENDMENT No. 3.

Part C.

That this part, to be known as the United States warehouse act, be, and is hereby, enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"That this act shall be known by the short title of 'United States warehouse act.'

"SEC. 2. That the term 'warehouse' as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure in which any agricultural product is or may be stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or, if located within any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in which any agricultural product is or may be stored. The term 'agricultural product' wherever used in this act shall be deemed to mean cotton, wool, grains, tobacco, and flaxseed, or any of them. As used in this act, 'person' includes a corporation or partnership or two or more persons having a joint or common interest; 'warehouseman' means a person lawfully engaged in the business of storing agricultural products; and 'receipt' means a warehouse receipt.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate the storage, warehousing, classifying according to grade and otherwise, weighing, and certification of agricultural products; upon application to him by any person applying for license to conduct a warehouse under this act, to inspect such warehouse or cause it to be inspected; at any time, with or without application to him, to inspect or cause to be inspected all warehouses licensed under this act; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses are applied for or have been issued under this act are suitable for the proper storage of any agricultural product or products; to classify warehouses in accordance with their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, conditions, and other qualities, and as to the kinds of licenses issued or that may be issued for them pursuant to this act; and to prescribe, within the limitations of this act, the duties of the warehousemen conducting warehouses licensed under this act with respect to their care of and responsibility for agricultural products stored therein.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him, to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse or warehouses in accordance with this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder: Provided, That each such warehouse be found suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product or products for which a license is applied for, and that such warehousesman agree, as a condition to the granting of the license, to comply with and abide by all the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"SEC. 5. That each license under sections 4 and 9 of this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding one year and shall specify the date upon which it is to terminate, and upon showing satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time be renewed or extended by a written instrument, which shall specify the date of its termination.

"SEC. 6. That each warehouseman applying for a license to conduct a warehouse in accordance with this act shall, as a condition to the granting thereof, execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a good and sufficient bond other than personal security to the United States to secure the faithful performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, and of such additional obligations as a warehouseman as may be assumed by him under contracts with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse. Said bond shall be in such form and amount, shall have such surety or sureties, subject to service of process in suits on the bond within the State, District, or Territory in which the warehouse is located, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe to carry out the purposes of this act. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that a bond approved by him is, or for any cause has become, insufficient, he may require an additional bond or bonds to be given by the warehouseman concerned, conforming with the requirements of this section, and unless the same be given within the time fixed by a written demand therefor the license of such warehouseman may be suspended or revoked.

"SEC. 7. That any person injured by the breach of any obligation to secure which a bond is given, under the provisions of sections 6 or 9, shall be entitled to sue on the bond in his own name in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages he may have sustained by such breach.

"SEC. 8. That upon the filing with and approval by the Secretary of Agriculture of a bond, in compliance with this act, for the conduct of a warehouse, such warehouse shall be designated as bonded hereunder; but no warehouse shall be designated as bonded under this act, and no name or description conveying the impression that it is so bonded, shall be used until a bond, such as provided for in section 6, has been filed with and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, nor unless the license issued under this act for the conduct of such warehouse remains unsuspended and unrevoked.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, issue a license to any person not a warehouseman to accept the custody of agricultural products and to store the same in a warehouse or warehouses owned, operated, or leased by any State, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder. Each person so licensed shall issue receipts for the agricultural products placed in his custody, and shall give bond, in accordance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder affecting warehousemen licensed under this act, and shall otherwise be subject to this act and such rules and regulations to the same extent as is provided for warehousemen licensed hereunder.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge, assess, and cause to be collected a reasonable fee for every examination or inspection of a warehouse under this act when such examination or inspection is made upon application of a warehouseman, and a fee not exceeding $2 per annum for each license or renewal thereof issued to a warehouseman under this act. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 11. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation of satisfactory proof of competency, issue to any person a license to classify any agricultural product or products stored or to be stored in a warehouse licensed under this act, according to grade or otherwise, and to certificate the grade or other class thereof, or to weigh the same and certificate the weight thereof, or both to classify and weigh the same and to certificate the grade or other class and the weight thereof, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder so far as the same relate to him.

"SEC. 12. That any license issued to any person to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products under this act may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied, after opportunity afforded to the licensee concerned for a hearing, that such licensee has failed to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products correctly, or has violated any of the provisions of this act or of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, so far as the same may relate to him, or that he has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose whatsoever. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 13. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall receive for storage therein, so far as its capacity permits, any agricultural product of the kind customarily stored therein by him which may be tendered to him in a suitable condition for warehousing in the usual manner in the ordinary and usual course of business, without making any discrimination between persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

"SEC. 14. That any person who deposits agricultural products for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"SEC. 15. That grain, flaxseed, or any other fungible agricultural product stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same under this act.

"SEC. 16. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep the agricultural products therein of one depositor so far separate from agricultural products of other depositors, and from other agricultural products of the same depositor for which a separate receipt has been issued, as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the agricultural products deposited; but if authorized by agreement or by custom, a warehouseman may mingle fungible agricultural products with other agricultural products of the same kind and grade, and shall be severally liable to each depositor for the care and redelivery of his share of such mass, to the same extent and under the same circumstances as if the agricultural products had been kept separate, but he shall at no time while they are in his custody mix fungible agricultural products of different grades.

"SEC. 17. That for all agricultural products stored for interstate or foreign commerce, or in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in a warehouse licensed under this act original receipts shall be issued by the warehouseman conducting the same, but no receipts shall be issued except for agricultural products actually stored in the warehouse at the time of the issuance thereof.

"SEC. 18. That every receipt issued for agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under this act shall embody within its written or printed terms (a) the location of the warehouse in which the agricultural products are stored; (b) the date of issue of the receipt; (c) the consecutive number of the receipt; (d) a statement whether the agricultural products received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order; (e) the rate of storage charges; (f) a description of the agricultural products received, showing the quantity thereof, or, in case of agricultural products customarily put up in bales or packages, a description of such bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification and the weight of such bales or packages; (g) the grade or other class of the agricultural products received and the standard or description in accordance with which such classification has been made: Provided, That such grade or other class shall be stated according to the official standard of the United States applicable to such agricultural products as the same may be fixed and promulgated under authority of law: Provided further, That until such official standards of the United States for any agricultural product or products have been fixed and promulgated, the grade or other class thereof may be stated in accordance with any recognized standard or in accordance with such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; (h) a statement that the receipt is issued subject to the United States warehouse act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder; (i) if the receipt be issued for agricultural products of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly or in common with others, the fact of such ownership; (j) a statement of the amount of advances made and of liabilities incurred for which the warehouseman claims a lien: Provided, That if the precise amount of such advances made or of such liabilities incurred be at the time of the issue of the receipt unknown to the warehouseman or his agent who issues it, a statement of the fact that advances have been made or liabilities incurred and the purpose thereof shall be sufficient; (k) such other terms and conditions within the limitations of this act as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture; and (l) the signature of the warehouseman, which may be made by his authorized agent: Provided, That unless otherwise required by the law of the State in which the warehouse is located, when requested by the depositor of other than fungible agricultural products, a receipt omitting compliance with subdivision (g) of this section may be issued if it have plainly and conspicuously embodied in its written or printed terms a provision that such receipt is not negotiable.

"SEC. 19. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards for agricultural products in this act defined by which their quality or value may be judged or determined: Provided, That the standards for any agricultural products which have been, or which in future may be, established by or under authority of any other act of Congress shall be, and are hereby, adopted for the purposes of this act as the official standards of the United States for the agricultural products to which they relate.

"SEC. 20. That while an original receipt issued under this act is outstanding and uncanceled by the warehouseman issuing the same no other or further receipt shall be issued for the agricultural product covered thereby or for any part thereof, except that in the case of a lost or destroyed receipt a new receipt, upon the same terms and subject to the same conditions and bearing on its face the number and date of the receipt in lieu of which it is issued, may be issued upon compliance with the statutes of the United States applicable thereto in places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States or upon compliance with the laws of any State applicable thereto in any place not under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That if there be in such case no statute of the United States or law of a State applicable thereto such new receipts may be issued upon the giving of satisfactory security in compliance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"SEC. 21. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act, in the absence of some lawful excuse, shall, without unnecessary delay, deliver the agricultural products stored therein upon a demand made either by the holder of a receipt for such agricultural products or by the depositor thereof if such demand be accompanied with (a) an offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien; (b) an offer to surrender the receipt, if negotiable, with such indorsements as would be necessary for the negotiation of the receipt; and (c) a readiness and willingness to sign, when the products are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered if such signature is requested by the warehouseman.

"SEC. 22. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall cancel each receipt returned to him upon the delivery by him of the agricultural products for which the receipt was issued.

"SEC. 23. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep in a place of safety complete and correct records of all agricultural products stored therein and withdrawn therefrom, of all warehouse receipts issued by him, and of the receipts returned to and canceled by him, shall make reports to the Secretary of Agriculture concerning such warehouse and the condition, contents, operation, and business thereof in such form and at such times as he may require, and shall conduct said warehouse in all other respects in compliance with this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder.

"SEC. 24. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any agricultural product stored in any warehouse licensed under this act. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the warehouseman conducting such warehouse, it is determined that he is not performing fully the duties imposed on him by this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder, the Secretary may publish his findings.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, after opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the licensee concerned, suspend or revoke any license issued to any warehouseman conducting a warehouse under this act, for any violation of or failure to comply with any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder or upon the ground that unreasonable or exorbitant charges have been made for services rendered. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 26. That the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time may publish the results of any investigations made under section 3 of this act; and he shall publish the names and locations of warehouses licensed and bonded and the names and addresses of persons licensed under this act and lists of all licenses terminated under this act and the causes therefor.

"SEC. 27. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized through officials, employees, or agents of the Department of Agriculture designated by him to examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses licensed under this act and of the warehousemen conducting such warehouses relating thereto.

"SEC. 28. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 29. That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with, or to authorize any conflict with, or in any way to impair or limit the effect or operation of the laws of any State relating to warehouses, warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers; but the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with such officials as are charged with the enforcement of such State laws in such States and through such cooperation to secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act; nor shall this act be construed so as to limit the operation of any statute of the United States relating to warehouses or warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers now in force in the District of Columbia or in any Territory or other place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

"SEC. 30. That every person who shall forge, alter, counterfeit, simulate, or falsely represent, or shall without proper authority use, any license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, or who shall violate or fail to comply with any provision of section 8 of this act, or who shall issue or utter a false or fraudulent receipt or certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 31. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and he is authorized, in his discretion, to employ qualified persons not regularly in the service of the United States for temporary assistance in carrying out the purposes of this act, and out of the moneys appropriated by this act to pay the salaries and expenses thereof.

"SEC. 32. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 33. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3 shall be read and considered separately, and on each amendment there shall be debate under the five-minute rule as follows: Amendment No. 1, one hour; amendments Nos. 2 and 3, one hour and a half each; during which debate amendments may be offered to the amendment then under consideration. All amendments offered, if any, shall be considered pending until the conclusion of the debate on the amendment to which they are offered, and at the expiration of the debate on each of the amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3 a vote shall be taken on all pending amendments and on the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the majority and minority members of the Committee on Rules agreed that 40 minutes on a side would be satisfactory. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose that was on account of the insignificance of the amendments that are to be offered.

Mr. HARRISON. It was because of the liberal length of time that the rule allows for the discussion of the amendments themselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I thought it was on account of their insignificance.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to 80 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and 40 minutes to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the debate on this rule be confined to 80 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by himself and 40 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Clerk read the resolution so rapidly that I was unable to follow him. [Laughter.] I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi, before unanimous consent is given, just what it was that we had printed in the RECORD this morning?

Mr. HARRISON. The bills that were offered yesterday as amendments to the agricultural bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was trying to follow the Clerk, and did follow him quite a while, but what he read does not correspond with what is in the RECORD this morning. I want some explanation.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman must have gone to sleep while the Clerk was reading. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was very wide awake while the Clerk was reading, and he was very lenient with the Clerk and the House in not insisting on the actual reading of every word. But what is it we have in the RECORD this morning? Are amendment No. 1 and the other amendments merely amendments to a bill the Clerk was reading? Is that the idea?

Mr. HARRISON. I was not paying attention to the Clerk, but I assume that he read the amendments as they are stated in the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I observe the gentleman was asleep; but I am asking seriously, because I am interested in this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. This resolution embraces the three amendments that were offered by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture yesterday that went out on points of order. One related to cotton futures, another to the standardization of grains, and the third to the warehouse bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that.

Mr. HARRISON. And they are printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And what was printed in the RECORD was not the cotton-futures bill, but the amendments thereto; is that correct?

Mr. HARRISON. What was printed in the RECORD is the cotton-futures bill, which the gentleman will have an opportunity to vote for presently.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Clerk referred to section 32, section 33, and so forth. What I want to find out is whether those sections 32 and 33, which I do not find printed in the RECORD this morning, are a part of the original bill?

Mr. HARRISON. They are in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. I desire to call attention to the fact that they are in the RECORD, on page 7904, second column.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 80 minutes the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, what we want in this Congress is legislation. What we are seeking to get by this rule is legislation, and what we hope to secure through the adoption of this rule is legislation upon three of the most important measures that will come before this House during this Congress.

One of these measures—the cotton-futures act—was passed by the last Congress. It passed by a large vote not only the House but the Senate, and became a law, but was knocked out by a decision of a district court upon a mere technicality. The purpose here is to reenact that legislation.

The second amendment is what is known as the grain-grading act. That, too, passed in this House in the last Congress. It was known then as the Moss bill. In this House it was passed under suspension of the rules, and there were only 17 votes against it.

In this country of ours there is raised annually grain to the amount of $3,500,000,000. The passage of the grain grades act will benefit the farmers from one end of the country to the other. This measure is indorsed by the farmers' organizations, by the grain men, by the millers, and, in brief, by everybody interested in grain, from the producer to the consumer. The third measure also passed the House during the last Congress and is what is known as the warehouse bill. Each and every one of these measures is for the benefit of the American farmer. We are endeavoring to secure legislation in the interest of the agricultural people of this great country.

The best way to get it is to bring it before the House in connection with the Agricultural appropriation bill and to provide this rule, which is not an unfair rule, but which gives to every man on the floor of the House the opportunity to offer amendments to each one of these measures. It provides for an hour's debate for the cotton-futures amendment, it provides one and a half hours for the grain-grades amendment, and one and a half hours for the warehouse bill. It gives to Members of the House the opportunity to offer as many amendments as they may desire. It provides for full and fair consideration of each of these measures, brought in here in connection with the Agricultural appropriation bill for the purpose of getting certain desired legislation which will be for the benefit of the farming communities throughout the length and breadth of the land.

I sincerely trust that there will be but little if any opposition to this rule. Men may make the mere technical objection that we are legislating by rule, but I do not care as long as we get the legislation. It matters not to me whether it be done by rule or in some other way, provided, of course, the rule is a fair one, and gives opportunity for debate and amendment. In this House at this time, with the congestion of legislation which we have before us, the only way to secure legislation upon these important measures is to adopt this rule and bring up for consideration these measures in connection with the Agricultural appropriation bill. It can be done, and every man will be given a fair opportunity. I trust that there will be little if any opposition to the adoption of the rule and to the passage of these amendments as they come up for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has stated that this rule makes in order on an appropriation bill three very important matters of legislation. That is not all this rule does, Mr. Speaker; it inaugurates a complete revolution in the legislative procedure of the House. It does more than that; it is a confession on the part of a majority of this House that they do not know how to get a measure through the House except by attaching it to an appropriation bill as a rider.

There is no question about the importance of the legislation proposed. All the more reason that the bill should be considered on its merits in the usual way that legislation is considered in the House of Representatives. If these matters of legislation were relatively unimportant it would not be so serious a matter to adopt a rule making them in order as amendments and riders on appropriation bills. But they are important legislation, each of them. Each of these three bills should engage the attention of this House in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule in order to be voted on as they are discussed, to be reported in the regular way to the House, with an opportunity to make a motion to recommit to the Committee of the Whole or to the Committee on Agriculture. All this procedure is denied by the adoption of this rule.

The gentleman from Missouri has stated that these measures have heretofore passed the House of Representatives. If so, why not pass them again in the House of Representatives, not as a rider on an appropriation bill but upon the merits of the measure? Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives for years has contended with another body against attaching irrelevant amendments to appropriation bills. Hereafter, if this resolution is agreed to, the Senate is invited to attach anything that it wishes to appropriation bills; any Senator may rise in his place and offer as an amendment to an appropriation bill any bill that has been introduced in the Senate, that is under consideration by any committee of the Senate, have it adopted, and the House conferees, if this resolution is agreed to, will be estopped from denying the Senate the right to have that legislation enacted in that way.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. Is it not a fact that the Senate rules are far more liberal than our rules in regard to amendments on appropriation bills?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The practice of the Senate does admit of offering amendments to appropriation bills. As one of the conferees on a bill I have been contending with the Senate for weeks over a matter now under consideration by another committee in this House. The matter was put on the appropriation bill to which I refer while under consideration in the Senate by another committee. If we are to ignore the ordinary rules of the House, the Committee on Rules becomes the great legislative committee of the House. As a member of that committee I do not invite, I do not encourage, and I protest against that authority being exercised by the Committee on Rules or that duty being imposed upon it. The Committee on Rules this morning, after a hasty consideration of less than 30 minutes, reported out three bills for the consideration of this House to be enacted into law before the House adjourns to-night.

Is it any wonder that one of these bills was declared unconstitutional by a nisi prius court recently, having been hastily and inconsiderately passed in another Congress as it now proposes to pass these bills. If this method of legislation is a sample of the capacity of the House under Democratic leadership, the country should know just what your measure is, what your capacity is for legislating, what your ability is to conduct the great business of this country.

You aided a short time ago in a revolution in this House because of the way in which important legislation was enacted. The method you are inaugurating to-day makes the methods that were then employed highly commendatory to the country. The gentleman from Missouri stated in opening this debate that what the country wanted was legislation, and they were not particular about the manner in which that legislation was enacted. The revolution in 1910 in this House was because of the methods by which legislation was enacted rather than because of the nature of the legislation that was enacted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to find western Republicans giving opposition to this measure. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], a member of the Committee on Rules, has opened the argument opposing this method of securing this legislation for the farmers of the country. All three of these measures provided for in the rule have passed this House before and failed in the Senate. It is necessary to enact them again. In two instances the bills passed the House, and in the other instance the question of the constitutionality of the cotton-futures law is pending in the Supreme Court, on the ground that the bill originated in the Senate when it should have originated in the House; and in order to have no question about it and not to wait until the court shall pass upon it it is necessary that a cotton-futures act be reenacted, and we propose to amend it in some particulars and try to improve it. Gentlemen, the whole South is interested in that bill. A billion-dollar product is at stake and a large portion of it is handled on the exchanges of the United States. Surely you do not want to deny us the opportunity of having these exchanges regulated by law. One of the other measures is advocated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], and it is in the interest of the grain growers of the West. It establishes honest grain standards. He comes here and asks you to vote for a bill that will give the grain growers a fair deal.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not the time to yield. The other proposition is in the interest of the farmers of both the North and the South, the warehouse proposition; and, gentlemen, you come here to-day, when we are begging you to give us speedy legislation for the farmers, and you are fighting a rule that will give it to them. [Applause.] The farmers of the South, the farmers of the North, want this legislation. This House, a body fresh from the people every two years, has twice enacted these measures with regard to the warehouse and the grain law, and the cotton-futures act is already a law, and we want to improve it by amendment and reenact it; and here you are, you old standpat Republicans, true to your record of service to special interest, fighting anything in the interest of the mass of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not the time to yield. That is what we see. It looks to me that you would profit by your experience in the past. We whittled you down to a minority, and if you keep up this sort of performance we will have 50 more from that side added to this after the November election. [Applause.] Those who put you up to make a fight on the floor of this House against measures like these are getting you in an ugly predicament. Do not let them impose on you in this fashion any more. It is dangerous, gentlemen. You are going to be winged and crippled worse than you are now in the fall campaign if you keep it up. [Laughter.] Do not let them lead you into that sort of a performance any more. These measures are meritorious. Let us put them on the Agricultural appropriation bill and pass them to-day. Gentlemen say, let us try them out in the regular fashion, and yet you stand here and filibuster and you will continue to filibuster to the end of this session. You can not fool the people. You have the opportunity now to vote for these measures. Are you in favor of giving the farmers of the West and South the benefit of the legislation proposed in these three amendments? [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I shall decline interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase a familiar hymn:

This is the day I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not.

I served in the Fifty-ninth, the Sixtieth, and the Sixty-first Congresses, when nearly every day some gentleman on the Democratic side of the aisle rose and talked about gag rules and Cannonism, and depriving the individual Member of his rights. Well, here we are. [Laughter.] There never was anything attempted in those three Congresses like passing a rule 45 pages long embodying three bills, attaching them to an appropriation act, so that the only way the President can veto the bills if he wants to is to veto one of the great appropriation acts. When you vote for the rule that is going to be passed you are not voting respecting any one of these three things. You are simply voting to get something to the Senate so that the Senate can amend it, so that it can go to conference, and so that the individual will never get a chance to vote on the final proposition.

I always liked Democrats, and I regret as a human being when I see them err. As a politician I do not mind it. [Laughter.] As a human being I want to talk to you, however, particularly you gentlemen from the Northern States where your election is not sure as it is in some of the other States; and I want to remind you just between ourselves, because we all of us were alive 10 years ago, of the fact that in the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, in New England, Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, and in the farther Western States, every Democratic orator went through them talking about the rules and gag rules and tying the hands of the House, and there are men sitting here to-day, I do not doubt, who are here because they made that sort of a campaign. You can never say anything about the rules any more after you do this, because nothing that you criticized was anything like this. I listened to the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] with pleasure, as I always do, and if he does not ever get any closer to the smallpox than he did to the question before the House, he is immune. [Laughter.] If nobody knows any more about what is in this rule than he does, then the four hours provided for discussion are tragically incomplete. [Laughter.] He says there is a grain-grading bill included here that is going to help the farmer.

It will take him more than four hours to demonstrate that there is anything of that kind in this bill. He talks about a Federal warehouse bill, and he forgot to tell you it was entirely optional; that you could license or not license, except for one thing. I have never said before on this floor, and I regret to state it now, because I do not sympathize very much with this talk that everything is aimed at New York, and I am charitable enough to think what they have done to New York in connection with this Federal warehouse bill is an accident. But in section 3 of the bill as proposed I will tell you what they have done. On the piers of our city there stand 70 miles of warehouses side by side, and you confer on the Secretary of Agriculture the power, without application on the part of the owner of any one of these warehouses for a license, without any desire to come into the system, to go into every one of those warehouses, because every one of them is capable of containing wool, cotton, flaxseed, or grain, and inspect it; and then you require him, by the bill, to publish the result of his inspection.

If I were still in practical politics I would know what this bill was. I would know that this was a proposition to come around about October, before a presidential election, and to say to those corporations and individuals who own those warehouses, "I am here to inspect your warehouse." The man would say, "I do not want it inspected. I am not going into your licensing system." And then somebody else would come around to tell him how he could avoid being inspected. But far be it from me to insinuate that there is any political purpose in this bill. It seems to me, though, if I were the owner of a warehouse in those 70 miles of warehouses in New York City, and this bill passed, as it ought not to do, I would be inclined, if I thought more of my money than I did of my principles—and men of large means are apt to appreciate their money—I would be inclined to hesitate before I took any part in politics other than on the Democratic side, when I knew that the Secretary of Agriculture could send any one man out to force himself into my warehouse any day, and he could rate it in any way he pleased, and that I had no appeal, and that he could do it whether I wanted it or not.

Gentlemen, it is this kind of legislation that is going to make this next House safely Republican. Everybody knows it is going to be Republican. There is just one outstanding fact about this House, and that is its sincere ennui. This side does not particularly care to do anything, because they are going out. Our side is a little bit cautious about raising any rumpus, because we do not want to make any bad precedents. But you are making it secure for us.

When I came here in 1905 the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, then and still a philosopher, said in my first week of service that the trouble with the Democratic Party was that all over the Union its emblem was the donkey, and that the truth was that the people were afraid of it, and that the reasons that they were afraid of it were such as the matters that were before the House and were usually little minor things.

It was the minor things that your party has done. It is the more or less of minor things that your party is doing now. The ruling of our distinguished Speaker the other day was probably within the letter of the law, but to the people of this country "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." And all over the country there are appearing headlines like the one I picked out of a paper this morning that came to me through the mails, saying, "Speaker forces bill into conference." That kind of thing that you are doing is going to put you out. You could not evolve any worse rule than this. But I think I will withdraw that, on reflection. You may. [Laughter.] If you can do this, nobody can put a limit on what you can do. You may put all the legislation in the House on an appropriation bill. But there is one thing you gentlemen have got to face when you go back into your districts. Your districts will ask you why you did not pass your legislation. You will say you could not get to it. They will say, "Mr. RUBEY and Mr. LEVER, who introduced the other bills, passed them—the grain-grading and warehouse bill." "Oh, yes; but that was under a rule. They put it on in an appropriation bill." They will say, "Those people had more power than you, did they not?" And you will have to say, "Yes." "Did you vote to permit that?" And you will have to say, "Yes." And you have destroyed Democratic equality as it affects your own people, and they will make you hear from it and suffer for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I think our friend from New York has somewhat missed the point in his attack upon the majority party with respect to the contention that we made while the Republican Party was in power. We did have a good deal to say about gag rule, but we charged that your party, while it had control of this House, used the gag rule for the purpose of suppressing good legislation rather than for the purpose of putting good legislation through. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that is the reason that the American people listened to the protests of the Democratic Party, put us in power, and turned you out. We sat here for 16 years and saw the Rules Committee, composed of the Speaker and two other Representatives, throttle the demands of the rank and file of the American people. It was no uncommon sight to see large delegations appealing in vain to be heard.

The American people are not going to turn the Democratic Party out of power until they have analyzed results. That is what the American people are concerned about more than the method of procedure. Now, if these three amendments are good legislation, the average man does not give a flip of his finger whether they are put through this House as separate bills or as amendments to the Agricultural appropriation bill. And the test is going to come in this House when the vote is taken, and I predict that when it is taken upon these three amendments you will find gentlemen voting for them on that side of the Chamber as well as on this, just as they have voted for every other important measure the Democratic Party has put through this House except one. We heard a great deal of protest about the currency bill. Dire predictions were made that ruin would come to the country if it should be passed

Yet when the great war in Europe was suddenly declared, a war that involves the whole world, the finances of this country were safe and steady and the credit of the Nation was strong as the rock of Gibraltar. But for the passage of that law there would have been a panic Nation wide. Everybody believes this is true. I wonder how many gentlemen on that side of the Chamber would stand up now and say they are willing to vote for a repeal of that currency legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman probably knows that if the bill had become a law as it was drawn originally everybody in this country would have gone into bankruptcy.

Mr. POU. It is true the bill was amended by a Democratic House and Senate. It became necessary for a Democratic Congress to act, for you gentlemen had sat here for 16 years and refused to act. And if that Democratic currency law had not been passed, and if the Republican laws affecting the currency had remained on the statute books there would have been the greatest panic the world had ever seen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. No; I can not yield. I have only a moment left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. POU. And so all down along the line. When the work of this Congress is put before the American people, I submit they are not going to stop to consider whether it was put through by a rule or whether it was put through by bill upon report of a committee. The substance of the legislation itself is going to be considered; and I submit that with the great record behind us and with the measures that we are going to put through in this Congress, we are perfectly content to accept the challenge of gentlemen on the other side, and submit this legislation to the arbitrament of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, if I have any.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as one of the new Members of the House, I beg to suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] that when the more recent membership on the Republican side select a mentor for their political acts, it will not be the distinguished gentleman who tendered his services in that behalf, nor will it be any gentleman from across the aisle until there is much more evidence of more popular approval of their statesmanship than has existed within the last few months. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] said, very truly, that the legislation which is proposed to be made in order by the rule now sought to be adopted is the most important legislation that has been pending before the present session of Congress.

I can go yet further, and add that this legislation is so comprehensive and all-embracing in its provisions that it affects every man, woman, and child within the confines and borders of our land.

When you provide, as is done by the proposed amendment, for the trading and dealing in cotton upon the great marts of commerce in the United States; when you give the Secretary of Agriculture the right arbitrarily to fix the standards for corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and every other commodity of the land that in his judgment requires such standardization; when you provide that every warehouse and elevator within the limits of the United States and every place where these commodities may be stored shall be under his supervision and control, how could you, in 45 pages of any bill, go further than you have attempted to go in this measure, the provisions of which are not fully understood or clearly comprehended by any man who sits within this House to-day?

Now, I know what the answer will be.

The answer will be that some of the provisions of these amendments are optional and some are permissive and that not all are mandatory. But the action which you seek to take to-day is laying the foundation for making them obligatory at the next session of Congress and placing within the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture all of the agricultural commodities, all of the grains, all of the warehouses and elevators, and all of the products of all of the farms within the United States.

I remember a few years ago, shortly before his election as Speaker, when the loved and revered Speaker of this House—and he is not more admired on the one side than he is on the other—came to the city where I reside.

I had the distinguished honor—and I esteemed it as such—to introduce him to our people.

I heard his classic discourse upon the evils that had grown up in Congress, and I heard him, in language that was chaste and beautiful and forcible, speak of the infamous Rules Committee, of their arbitrary action and of the reports that had been brought in by them, gagging, as he alleged, the minority of the House and putting in jeopardy the rights of the American citizens and endangering our Republic.

As he spoke, as none other can speak upon the platform, the people from this Republican community broke into cheers, as they were impressed with and thought of the evils and wrongs that had been visited upon the Democratic minority by the unscrupulous majority, and I confess I felt badly myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Did you get over it? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes; I got over it. We were rebuked by the electorate; we were chastened; and now we are spiritually refined.

At the present time we have done our penance, and our repentance is accomplished and complete.

The American people kicked us out of power because of their detestation of the same tactics and practices that you now invoke and seek to employ.

I am not foolish enough to think, or credulous enough to suppose, that anything that may be said here by any of us will make the slightest difference in the action of the majority upon this proposition, and I realize that it is "the voice of one crying in the wilderness."

But I have read in the RECORD of past sessions the wails and the denunciations, and the protests and the lamentations, and the shrieks of horror you uttered as you were being ravished by the Republican majority. [Laughter.]

I have seen in that RECORD, indelibly preserved, the tears you shed, and, in view of your action to-day, repudiating all you then said, you stand branded with the condemnation of rank hypocrisy in the utterance at those times of those wails and lamentations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You were not on the square then, and you are not now.

You believe just as much to-day that the practice you invoke to serve the purpose of the passing hour is as questionable and as wrong now as you believed it to be then.

But why the difference?

Simply because you desire to add these amendments to this appropriation bill, and to crowd them, by the use of this iniquitous rule, down the throats of the minority of this House, without giving to us opportunity for discussion or for consideration.

Here they are, these amendments—of nation-wide effect and importance.

On one of them you allow an hour's debate, and upon each of the others you allow an hour and a half of debate.

These are measures that affect every constituent within your districts, measures that are of the greatest importance to every man who is engaged in the production of any agricultural product, and yet you stifle debate and consideration of them and seek to tie them onto this appropriation bill in order that it may pull them through.

You give by this bill the power to the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a grade for all of these grains without reference to local conditions.

You give to him the power to supervise every warehouse and elevator.

You give him the power to change the grade of the grains of the country whenever it may appear practicable to do so.

And then you bring these measures, every one of which is sufficient for at least a week's consideration, into this House and you say to the House, "You must take them blindly, without sufficient debate or consideration, for they are to be forced upon you in defiance of the rules of the House, and only because we are numerically stronger than you." You say, by your actions at least, "We confess that the rules we have adopted to govern us this session are not practical or workable in their operation. We confess our inability to pass legislation in the ordinary way. We know no way to secure the enactment of these three laws in a regular manner, and so we brutally force them upon you in defiance of the rules that we have adopted. We utterly confess our impotence."

Now, you can do this. You probably have the votes to do it, but there is this much that can be said that is as certain as that the sun will rise to-morrow morning, and that is that the practices which you adopt to-day, which you formerly hypocritically reviled the Republican Party for adopting and using, will be submitted to the people at the polls in the coming November for their approval, and that such actions will not be approved. Oh, the gentleman [Mr. HEFLIN] said—and he was simply whistling while going through a graveyard—that there would be more Members taken from this side and added to that side in the coming November election. Gentlemen, in the next Congress of the United States, because of your stupendous failures in all the departments of the Government, a little child will be able to count the number of your Members then present without going beyond the most elementary stage of enumeration in arithmetic. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARRISON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on this question I have made perhaps a thousand speeches in the last 30 years. I have been very much interested in our friend from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD], who just left the floor. He talks about the Rules Committee in the past and the Rules Committee now. The difference between the two is that the Rules Committee under Republicans had a habit of blocking legislation in the farmers' interest and saddling a lot of trusts and combines on the farmers and the country, and I condemned them in every form of language I could use in a parliamentary way; but when the present Rules Committee has the courage to bring out legislation to help the farmers, three very important measures, to open the door of hope to that class who drink warm stick-worm water out of an old jug at the end of the row, while we men here drink ice water out of a cooler, my God, I want to congratulate the Committee on Rules! [Applause.]

In one of these measures we have the warehouse system. I have seen the apples in rows of trees a mile long on the Pacific slope, as beautiful as ever the human eye looked upon, rot and go to waste, while across on the other side of the mountains the people could not afford to eat apples, because some sort of a monopoly lay between the mouth of the hungry fellow and the fellow who had the apples. I have seen peaches and potatoes rot by the thousands of bushels, when they would not pay for the baskets and sacks to put them in, because there was no warehouse system to handle them, and a line of monopolies built up by the Republican Party stood between them and the fellow 300 miles away, who could not afford to eat them, because there were too many monopolies between the fellow that grew them and the fellow that was hungry. I have seen all those conditions, and I want to help remedy them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is another effort to fasten unnecessary law on the people of the country. I say "fasten law upon the people of the country," because that has been the practice of the party in power since it came into power. It has been nothing but law, law, law, regulation, regulation, regulation! Now we are coming to regulate the farmer of the country a little bit. And the farmer may soon feel it.

Our friends upon the other side assume that this bill is in the interest of the farmer. I have some information here which indicates that it is opposed to the interests of the farmer. If this grain-grading bill is put through under this rule, as you propose to put it through, and the farmers meet with bad climatic conditions and poor crops, they may, in the course of one year, by reason of the standards established here, stand to lose as much as $50,000,000 or $75,000,000. When the farmer begins to lose money under this expensive regulation system, some of you who are preaching special friendship for the farmer may not care to look him squarely in the face and tell him that you put this legislation through under a gag rule. The farmers of Montana are beginning to raise wheat to sell to the export trade. When these regulations are put into effect and full authority is given the Secretary of Agriculture and his inquisitors, go ask the farmers of Montana how they feel when their crop conditions will not permit them to enter into the foreign trade, because their grade of grain does not come up to a hard-and-fast legal standard.

Our friends upon the other side of the House talk about this being important legislation that ought to be passed under a rule. It is important legislation, three great bills that this Congress ought to carefully consider, but we are to do so only under pressure. The Speaker told us the other day that we ought to speed up; that we ought to get busy so we can get home. You have given us two weeks to discuss the details of the Agricultural bill, and in the last hours of that bill you bring in as riders these three important bills, any one of which ought to have the consideration of this House for a week. Yet under a gag rule you propose to pass these laws, which you do not care to have discussed in the open.

Gentlemen over there say Republicans suppressed legislation under the rules. Perhaps it was well for the country that some of the legislation which you have brought out since you have been in power was suppressed. It would have been for the welfare of the people of this country.

You boast about your legislation and ask whether we would repeal the currency act. You have already started to repeal that act yourself. You are already beginning to correct your errors. In a few days you are going to take back all you said about interlocking directorates. You have already started to correct your tariff law. You have taken back your repeal of the sugar tax. You are repealing here and there all along the line. Talk about your seaman's law, which drove the American flag from the high seas! You have already come in, under the pressure of the people behind you, the farmers included, and you have started to repeal that law. Go on with your kind of legislation, fasten your tentacles upon the business of this country, and the farmer will feel it along with the rest. Then will come the change.

The agricultural bill that is now pending is filled with appropriations which the farmers, along with their customers, have to pay for the employment of scientists and experts. We now have 16,000 of them, more or less, to go about the country to tell the farmers how to run their farms; now you are going to fasten a few more of these experts and scientists upon them. You have them in the cotton fields; fasten them upon the warehouses, upon the shipping agencies, upon the boards of trade; all these are among the farmers' best friends and must be relied upon if the farmer is to have a market. But go ahead and pile up the legislative burdens; it will hasten the day of reckoning. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields back half a minute.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] five minutes.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, the opposition to this rule is placed on high grounds. Men are opposed to it because of the principle involved. They are opposed to rider legislation. I am just as much opposed to rider legislation, where it is improper legislation, as anyone else; but, my friends, this rule has been used by both parties in the past, and perhaps always will be. My people know this just as well as you know it. They know that it has been used to pass improper legislation and to destroy good legislation, and now they are interested in some bills that they do not see any other way of passing except by this rule.

They say you can not use the rule against them; that it is not legitimate to use it. I have been told by men that the Progressive element is opposed to rider legislation, and yet, while my memory does not go back as far as that of some men, I remember some matters of legislation that passed as riders on an appropriation bill and was supported by the Progressives.

The public-utilities bill was passed as a rider on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The antimerger legislation was passed as a rider upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The Jones-Works excise bill was passed as a rider on the District of Columbia bill. The meat-inspection law was passed as a rider on the Agricultural appropriation bill in 1906, and was supported by Progressives, including Senator LA FOLLETTE, who ought to be a sufficiently radical Progressive to suit anyone.

Now, this is only a partial list. The fact of the matter is that you men who oppose this to-day are opposed to the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] both indicate that they are opposed to the legislation which is proposed, and they have a right to be opposed to it. My friends, I want to tell you that this is a serious matter. It is serious for the consumer as well as for the producer. Our foreign exports are in such a condition that they have to be remedied. The principal opposition comes from Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and other export centers. They brought out the fact that they were shipping No. 3 and No. 4 grain as grade No. 2. The price of grain is based on Liverpool prices less the cost of sending it there. That practice has taken not millions but billions of dollars away from the farmers of this country. [Applause.]

Now, from Boston, where the exporters are tremendously opposed to the standardization of grades, comes a resolution which was sent to me the other day. It is too long to read in full, but I will print it in the RECORD. The Chamber of Commerce of Boston is very much in favor of this legislation. They say:

In an attempt to help remove the stigma which has attached to the American grain trade with foreign countries ever since last fall, when shipments of wheat were sent to Europe from Chicago and were of such poor quality that cargoes of it had to be thrown overboard, the Boston Chamber of Commerce to-day is forwarding to Washington a formal approval of the Rubey bill now pending in Congress and aiming to prevent such abuses of inspection as permitted this wheat to go abroad.

At a largely attended meeting of the grain board of the chamber the following vote was passed:

That it is the sense of the grain board that it favors the passage of the Rubey Grain Grades Act, and recommends to the directors that they request our Senators and Congressmen to favor the passage of the bill; and that the chairman of the grain board be authorized to appoint a committee of three members to draft a report to the board of directors giving the reasons why the chamber should favor the passage of the Rubey Grain Grades Act.

In accordance with this vote, Harry Hamilton, Bernard J. Rothwell, and Charles A. Rache were named to draw up the reasons. They now have presented their summary of the abuses which led to the move for a radical change and these have been approved by formal action of the directors, so that the whole report will go forward to the Massachusetts Senators and Congressmen this afternoon, as follows:

The undersigned, having been appointed in accordance with the above vote, respectfully submit the following reasons why the Boston Chamber of Commerce, through its board of directors, should favor the passage of the Rubey Grain Grades Act.

1. The Rubey bill provides for the establishment of uniform standards for the various grades of the different grains, such uniform standards to be maintained throughout the United States.

All grain sold by grade must be inspected and graded in accordance with these standards, but grain may be sold by sample under trade names adopted by individual sellers, as, for example, "Victory" Oats, "Winner" Wheat, etc.

It further provides that all inspection shall be under Federal supervision. There would be no interference with the machinery of existing inspection systems, as, for example, that of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and competent inspectors recommended by the various exchanges would be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is understood that these inspectors would be placed under civil-service rules, so that while performing their work honestly and efficiently they could not be disturbed for political reasons.

2. The need for this legislation has for many years been most urgent. Abuses resulting from present conditions have been flagrant, reaching their culmination during the present crop year.

Inward inspection has been rigid at the expense of the shipper. Outward inspection has been elastic at the expense of the buyer.

Grain has at times been inspected out from elevator into cars. These cars run around a belt line back to elevator within a few days and inspected in a grade or two grades lower.

Not only has the one grade, say, No. 1 northern spring wheat, meant one thing in one market and another in another, but it has meant several different things in the one market, for example:

In Minneapolis for months during the present crop year there was, day after day, a variation based on quality of from 8 cents to 16 cents per bushel in the selling price of No. 1 northern spring wheat; that is, at the same time and in the same place various lots of wheat, each bearing the same official grade, sold at from 8 cents per bushel difference on some days to 16 cents per bushel difference on others.

In Kansas City during the same time the difference, day after day, for months was from 3 cents to as high as 20 cents per bushel; that is, at the same time and in the same place various lots of wheat, each bearing the same official grade, sold at from 3 cents per bushel difference on some days to 16 cents per bushel difference on others.

These were wholly quality differences. There was no other reason for the variation in price.

As one-eighth of a cent per bushel will turn a trade in grain, the extent of the manipulation of grades may easily be seen.

The oats crop of 1914 affords striking example of fraudulent manipulation of grades.

In the early months of the crop movement the average moisture content of oats in eight principal oat-shipping States was 11.1 per cent. In January, 1915, oats of the same grade in one of our eastern markets showed an average moisture content of 13.7 per cent, showing an average added moisture of 2.6 per cent, which meant that the consumer paid 2.6 per cent of his money for water instead of for oats.

Seizures were made by United States officials during the spring of 1915, with the result that the moisture content of the same grade dropped within a month to an average of 11 per cent.

"Doctoring" of oats, in other words, adulteration, is a constant fraud against which under present conditions buyers and consumers have no redress.

In August and September, 1914, in one of the large markets oats contained an average of 2.8 per cent of other grains and foreign materials. In April, 1915, in the same market the same grade of oats showed 10.3 per cent of other grain and foreign seeds, an increased adulteration of 7.5 per cent.

In wheat, however, during the summer and early fall of 1915 occurred the most extraordinary abuse of inspection ever perpetrated.

Grain houses in one of the large central markets of the West, prior to harvest, sold in foreign markets enormous quantities of "No. 2 hard" and "No. 2 red winter" wheat for shipment from Chicago during July, August, and September, 1915.

Almost incessant rains at harvest, and for months afterwards, totally destroyed many millions of bushels of wheat and damaged to an unprecedented extent the entire crop. The result was that not over 10 per cent of the receipts of wheat in principal markets during the months named graded "No. 2"; comparatively little graded "No. 3"; the bulk was "No. 4" or "No grade."

The total receipts of No. 2 in Chicago during these months were probably considerably less than 1,000,000 bushels. Notwithstanding this, several million bushels of wheat were inspected out and certificates issued as "No. 2 hard" or "No. 2 red winter" and were shipped in fulfillment of the contracts above mentioned.

When some of this wheat reached the seaboard local inspection graded it "No. 4" or "Unmerchantable." However, it had been sold on western certificate and went forward to European buyers.

On arrival across the ocean much of this wheat was hot and caked and actually had to be chopped out of the holds of vessels at Liverpool and London.

At Italian ports the Government confiscated several cargoes and they were thrown overboard as unfit for any use.

The reputation of the American grain trade, which had suffered for many years from lesser infractions of the rules of fair trading, was now smirched as never before. For probably the first time in such matters the intervention of the United States ambassadors was sought and the whole matter, involving 30,000,000 bushels and several million dollars, is now in the hands of the Department of State.

3. Efforts to eliminate these abuses, which have involved enormous loss year after year to grain shippers, to millers, to domestic grain distributors, to consumers, and to foreign buyers of American grain, have been persistent for the past 10 years.

In the last session of Congress the Moss Grain Grades Act, almost identically the same as the Rubey bill, passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously, but the Senate Calendar was so crowded and the fight over the shipping bill was so prolonged that it was not reached; consequently a new bill had to be introduced at the present session.

There is good prospect of the passage of this bill, but it will require the indorsement of all organizations who favor putting this enormous business upon a reputable and responsible basis.

Among the organizations that have favored this legislation are:

(A) Grain Dealers' National Association of the United States, made up of 3,300 members in practically every State of the Union, 17 States being represented upon its board of directors.

(B) Millers' National Federation, embracing thousands of flour millers in every flour-milling State in the Union.

(C) The principal grain-trade organizations in all the prominent grain-trade cities of the West.

The demand for it is almost universal.

4. Opposition to the Rubey bill, aside from State-inspection departments, which are under political control and are in a large measure responsible for the abuses herein recited, comes from exporters in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston.

Their reasons for the most part are illogical and easily refuted. In Boston, for example, the principal argument of the exporters who are opposed to uniform inspection is that in the case of corn it would do away with the climatic advantage which Boston, by reason of its cooler temperature, holds over southern ports.

This argument is specious, because it is obvious that if corn containing a high percentage of moisture can safely be exported via Boston, whereas shipment via southern ports would be decidedly risky, that corn will be exported via Boston and the port will receive the full benefit of its natural advantage. There is no sound reason, however, why corn that is in reality "No. 3" or "No grade" should be graded and certificated in any market as "No. 2."

Summary: The Rubey bill and the movement which it represents is designed to safeguard the interests of all concerned in the growth, the milling, and the distribution of grain. It is designed to protect the honest dealer from the unscrupulous; it is designed to remove grain inspection from local, political, or other influence which can be used for private advantage; it is designed to enable the grain buyer, large or small, to know with reasonable exactness what he is buying and paying for and what he is entitled to and will receive. As stated by the Grain Dealers' National Association:

"We are in favor of Government supervision of grain inspection for the same reason that the honest shippers of the country favored the abolition of the rebate. It makes for better, more honest business. It gives the consumer a square deal, and that in the long run benefits the individual dealer who wishes to conduct his business without constant infractions of the law of common honesty."

As this bill is now under discussion in Congress and a vote is likely to be reached immediately, we respectfully urge the indorsement of the bill by the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the immediate notification of such indorsement to Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY, chairman Subcommittee on Agriculture, and Hon. THOMAS P. GORE, who has entered in the Senate another exactly similar bill, as well as the Senators and Representatives of all the New England States.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Yes.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman know how many complaints have been made by foreign shippers, or at least foreign recipients of the grain as to grain shipments from Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York?

Mr. HELGESEN. They have made complaints every year.

Mr. COADY. Does the gentleman know that those ports have shipped 46,000,000,000 bushels of grain and that there were very few complaints of any kind?

Mr. HELGESEN. I do not know that, nor does the gentleman know it. They have made persistent complaints and have appealed to this Government before this year. This is not the first case; it has been year after year, and was admitted by the exporters from the four cities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read this rule very fast. I suspect he left out a very large proportion of it, which was well. I have the idea that it is much easier to vote for the rule if you do not know what is in it. The rule provides for the consideration of three bills covering some 44 pages. These bills are to be passed in four hours, without one minute of general debate. The only debate permitted is under the five-minute rule, and that part of the rule is constructed in such a way that a man can not get a vote upon his amendment at the end of his argument, but must get his vote at the end of the entire debate, when everybody has forgotten what he has said. That is the kind of a rule that you propose to put over on us. It would be difficult to imagine a more severe commentary upon the methods of legislating in this House than this situation presents. Already in this session of Congress, although we have passed only five of the great appropriation bills, we have passed seven special rules, and there are some five or six rules pending before the Rules Committee which have not been reported. In the short session that preceded this we passed 8 special rules, and at the long session that preceded that we passed 17 special rules—more special rules in these three sessions than were passed in the entire régime of the distinguished former Speaker of the House when chairman of the Rules Committee.

The gentleman from Alabama talks about the regulation of grain exchanges. If anybody else in this House knows as little about what is in the resolution as the gentleman from Alabama, we shall need more than four hours' debate. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. How many speeches remain on that side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Only one more on this side.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] seven minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, the House is brought face to face with a practical proposition. It might as well realize what the proposition is. The rule under consideration makes in order on the appropriation bill which will be under consideration shortly certain bills that have been passed upon by the Committee on Agriculture having jurisdiction of the subjects and which are now pending on the calendar in this House. Each of these three bills—the cotton-futures bill, the grain-standardization bill, and the Federal-warehouse bill—has passed, two of them both branches of the American Congress in the last session of Congress, and the grain-standardization bill passed this House under a suspension of the rules by over a two-thirds vote.

Now, the criticism is that we are attaching to an appropriation bill a rider, and therefore that you are asked to vote down the rule, because it is asserted that the practice of attaching riders to appropriation bills has in the past led to bad legislation. On the general proposition of attaching riders to appropriation bills I may agree that under ordinary circumstances it were best that that method of legislation should not be employed. But I take it that whatever evils have resulted from this method of legislation have been due to the fact that the body considering them was taken by surprise, and that there could not be, that there had not been, full consideration of the legislation proposed. This is a different situation. We are asking you to attach to this bill three propositions which have been considered thoroughly by the committee having jurisdiction.

The rule making these three propositions in order was introduced by me a week ago, so that the Congress has had due notice. We are not surprising anybody. We have given you fair notice. We are only asking you to do in a practical way what we fear we will not be able to do under the existing situation in this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do we want this legislation? Do you gentlemen, representing great agricultural constituencies from the West and the East and the Middle West and the South, desire to represent the will of those people? Are you honestly in favor of giving this great remedial legislation to the toiling farmers of the country? Are you in earnest in your protestations? I say very frankly, knowing some of the men from the West, on that side and on this side, that they are earnestly in favor of legislation of this character, and I do not believe that they are going to stand on this mere quibble of a technicality and deny their people this relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I have not the time, I am sorry to say. It is a question of getting consideration. Will you defeat this rule, deny consideration of this legislation, and then have the hardihood to go to your people who have demanded it, and in whose interest it is proposed and say, "I could not give you that legislation, boys, because a technical rule of the House stood in the way"? I do not believe your people will excuse you upon that ground. I believe the people of this country have made up their minds that they want this legislation, and I do not believe they give a tinker's damn how they get it, just so they get it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me say another thing. Take your grain-grading bill. There is not a single line of opposition to that legislation from the grangers or from the farmers, from the milling interests, or from any interests involved, except probably the chambers of commerce of one or two exporting points on the Atlantic coast.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, if I were looking only to political advantage, I would content myself with making a formal protest against this rule and then letting this majority adopt it, but there is so much more involved here in the rule than politics that I would not be true to my duty if I let it rest there. You propose to destroy the greatest safeguard that this House has against legislation of the most vicious character. Every Member of this House who has been here for any length of time knows that two-thirds of the legislation that has been vicious which has crept into the laws enacted by Congress has been through riders on appropriation bills, and it has not been put there by this House, but by another body, and the conferees of this House have accepted it. For the past few years this House has stood like a rock against riders of that character, and, as a result, legislation that has been found upon appropriation bills in the form of riders has not been of that vicious character to which I refer. Pass this rule, however, create this precedent, and the conferees of the House no longer will be able to say to the conferees of the Senate, "It is against the practice and the rules of the House to carry new legislation upon appropriation bills," and this House will then be helpless.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word with reference to the speech made by my friend from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN], a valuable Member of this House. This is the first time that he has gone seriously wrong upon any proposition. He was elected as a progressive Republican, and one of the cardinal principles of those who belonged to that group was that they were opposed to gag rules, that they were opposed to rules of this character, and yet he proposes to vote for it. This rule is not only a gag rule, but it is a rule that will prevent the House upon the final coming of this legislation before the House from having a vote upon it. I have a little different conception of the duties of a Member of this House than that he is to base his action upon vital issues on the question of whether or not he happens to be for or against the legislation.

What will happen if this rule is adopted? I am not against these bills, any one of them. They have been amended to meet the objections I have heretofore made with reference to them. But these are not the bills that will come out of conference. The conferees will finally frame these bills and put them into a great appropriation bill, and there will be no opportunity for a separate vote upon them; and we will be compelled, if the bills are not as we think they ought to be, to vote down a great appropriation bill for the carrying on of the expenses of this Government in order to defeat legislation that we may then think to be vicious. Mr. Speaker, it can not be defended from any standpoint or from any theory; and the Democratic leaders, if they believed for a moment that they would control the next House, would never have dared to set this precedent for themselves. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Many times the plea has been raised that there should be no sectionalism in this House, and I have agreed with that. I have never since I have been a Member of this House raised the issue of sectionalism, but there comes a time when it is the duty of Members of the House to call a spade a spade, and that time has come now. What is behind this most extraordinary procedure? What is the reason for destroying this great safeguard that we have against vicious legislation? There is only one answer, Mr. Speaker, and that is cotton.

Cotton is king. The South is in the saddle. The South controls this House, and they are willing to sweep away every safeguard we have, they are willing to destroy every principle necessary to the orderly conduct of this House wherever cotton is involved. And you Democrats from the North are willing to meekly follow them, thereby demonstrating to the country that you are not following your own convictions. You are willing, for the purpose of aiding a few Southern States, to destroy the greatest bulwark we have in this House against legislation of evil character.

There is a sop thrown to the farmers of the West, and that is why my friend from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] has favored it; but it is only a sop. There is nothing substantial in it. I am willing to vote for it in a separate bill. It does neither good nor harm, but I want to say it will not help his farmers of North Dakota one iota. You talk about the regulation of grain exchanges, as the gentleman from Alabama did. There is not a syllable about that in these bills. What is the evil in the Northwest that has been complained of? It is the elevators. And in this bill there is not a line of regulation as to a single warehouseman or elevator man, unless he chooses to come under it, and this means, and means only, that if the Federal regulation is more to his advantage than the State regulation he will take the Federal regulation and not the State. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has 11 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at that side of the House opposing this resolution. It is in keeping with the practice and policy of the minority to obstruct and delay beneficent legislation. It is very consistent upon the part of you Republicans to find fault with and criticize this rule. Your party has sunk to the unenviable position of mere fault finding and criticism. You say this rule is drastic and unprecedented. But I hope before I have closed to convince you that it is neither drastic nor unprecedented. I listened to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] when he said that when these bills were offered as amendments in Committee of the Whole he expected to vote for them, but that he was going to vote against this rule. His views are the views of practically all of you and clearly show the hypocrisy and insincerity of your position. If you intend to vote for the amendments when offered in the committee, why do not you vote now for the rule? The rule is not different, except it is not so drastic, from rules that your side forced through this House time and time again. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says that the Senate has practiced putting on riders to appropriation bills but that the House has not. I say the House, too, has done it time after time. While you employed this method of enacting much bad legislation the Democratic minority forced you to pass some of the best legislation now upon the statute books by embodying it in general appropriation bills. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The parcel-post bill was enacted in that way. [Applause.] The rural carriers provision was enacted in that way [applause], and there are many other provisions that I could cite the gentlemen on that side to that to-day might not be on the statute books if it were not for the fact that they were tacked as riders on general appropriation bills.

Now, let us see whether or not this rule is so drastic. Let us see if it is sectional. On the Agricultural Committee of the House there are men from every section of the country—only 6 out of 21 from the South. This grain-standardization bill was voted unanimously out of the committee. The men on that committee who came from the West, and who are vitally interested in this legislation, disagree with my friend from Wisconsin and are enthusiastically supporting this bill. There is nothing sectional in this matter. Representatives from the South are for the grain-standardization bill because they believe it will help the farmers of the North and West, and because northern Representatives want it. Ah, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] need not become alarmed at the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I believe that when he goes before his people and shows to them that there was no way of procuring the passage of the grain-standardization bill except by voting for a rule making it in order for consideration on this bill, they will approve and applaude his action. And when the constituency of the gentleman from Wisconsin and constituencies of other gentlemen of the minority ascertain that through voting against this rule they prevent the consideration of the grain-standardization bill, which means its defeat, they will disapprove and denounce their action. [Applause.]

Sectional? There is nothing sectional about this resolution. The grain-standardization bill was introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss]. But let us see about the drasticity—if I may manufacture or employ that word—of this rule. It only provides for the consideration of these three amendments as they are offered in the Committee of the Whole. It does not prevent any amendment from being offered to any of the three amendments. It provides for more debate than any of the bills along this line previously considered in this House. The cotton-futures bill, the standardization of grain bill, and the warehouse bill were all passed under a suspension of the rules, which, under the general rules of the House, prevented amendments being offered and allowed only 20 minutes of debate on a side, and yet under this rule an hour's debate on the cotton-futures amendment, an hour and a half on the grain-standardization amendment, and an hour and a half on the warehouse amendment is permitted. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he wants to offer any amendments, notwithstanding the fact that he says he is going to vote for them anyhow——

Mr. LENROOT. I did not say I was going to vote for these amendments. If they were separate bills that would be a different proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment he may do it, and any other gentleman on the floor of this House may do it. When you were in control of this House you did not follow that practice. You brought rules into this House and said that no amendments could be offered to the bills, and not only that, but oftentimes you said that no debate should be allowed in the consideration of the bills. Here we allow you both, and no one can rightfully say that this is a drastic rule. It merely grants the right to consider these measures, allows freedom of amendment and reasonable debate, and yet for these reasons, and not because you are against the amendments, you oppose the rule. Gentlemen, your constituents will neither approve your reasoning nor your course. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me cite you to some precedents proposed by your Republican Rules Committee and passed by your Republican majority when in control of this House. Oh, you can smile. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] will smile, although the two distinguished gentlemen that are on the Agricultural Committee from his State voted for all of these propositions.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry my time is limited, and I can not yield just now.

In the Sixtieth Congress, first session, page 2660 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you adopted a rule providing for new legislation on the Army appropriation bill.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, page 9152 of the RECORD, you adopted a rule allowing certain new legislation in order on an appropriation bill, unreasonably limited debate under the five-minute rule on the new legislation, and permitted no debate under the five-minute rule on any of the other provisions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet you talk about this rule being drastic and without precedent,

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HARRISON. Not right now.

Mr. LENROOT. Just for one question.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman will just abide his time with patience, I will give him as much information as it is possible in a short time. [Laughter.] In the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, page 3709 of the RECORD, the Committee on Rules made in order new legislation on the Post Office appropriation bill.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, page 897 of the RECORD, the Committee on Rules made in order new legislation on the Army appropriation bill.

In the Sixty-first Congress, first session, page 4554 of the RECORD, Mr. Walter I. Smith, a Republican, from the Committee on Rules, reported a special rule—and your party passed it in this House—making in order a provision on the urgent deficiency bill a section pertaining to surety bonds.

In the Fifty-second Congress, second session, a provision for creating a commission to investigate the executive departments of the Government was made in order on an appropriation bill.

In the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, a rule was brought in providing for an increase in rural carriers' salaries on the Post Office appropriation bill.

In the Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, a rule was brought in making in order on the District appropriation bill a provision for levying a personal tax in the District of Columbia.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, Mr. Dalzell reported a rule and forced it through the House making in order on the Post Office appropriation bill several paragraphs that were not in order under the general rules of the House.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, page 4398 of the RECORD, your majority under a rule made in order every section of the bill of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill that was subject to a point of order, and made it in order, further, upon the motion of the Committee on Appropriations, to insert in any part of the bill any provision reported as a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which had theretofore been ruled out on points of order. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] permit me to say that that rule passed by your Republican majority affected 47 provisions of that bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman know what happened to the Republicans who brought in that rule? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; but the reason why it happened to them was that you thwarted by your rules beneficent legislation and passed by your rules iniquitous legislation, prevented amendments being offered, and refused freedom of discussion. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not. In the Sixty-first Congress, second session, page 7578 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you adopted a rule relating to the postal savings banks which allowed one amendment and you designated what that amendment should be, refused further right to amend, and provided for an immediate vote at the end of a certain time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the kind of legislation you put through. Ah! and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted for that rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But that is not all. In the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, page 1947 of the RECORD, the Committee on Rules reported a rule for the consideration of an amendment to the act regulating commerce. A time limit was fixed for closing general debate, no debate was allowed under the five-minute rule, and only one amendment was allowed to be offered, and that was in the nature of a substitute. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet you say the resolution under discussion is drastic and without precedent. You had better read the record of your party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the Sixtieth Congress, first session, page 6244 of the RECORD, the Vreeland banking bill was considered. How? Ah! It was so cruel I dislike to recall it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You knew you had the votes and you passed it under a motion to suspend the rules; you allowed only one amendment, a substitute, to be offered and you specified what it should be; you limited debate, and you discharged the committee, who had not considered it, from consideration of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And while that action was bad, that did not surpass your action in the Sixty-first Congress, when your Rules Committee and your Republican majority passed your Payne tariff law under a rule that allowed only five amendments to the whole tariff bill being offered, and shut off discussion under the five-minute rule. And you who say we are returning to the days of Cannonism, let me ask you to again consider the liberality and justice of this rule, and compare it with the one you passed in the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, found on page 3755 of the RECORD, when your Rules Committee forced through the House a rule relating to the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, that not only made in order six amendments to the bill but, mind you—listen to me—in the rule you agreed to the six amendments; you passed the bill as amended, and in that same rule you sent the bill to conference and appointed the managers on the part of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves the previous question. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 89.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution embodying the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HULBERT, Mr. CAMPBELL, and Mr. MANN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the resolution will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 136, answered "present" 3, not voting 110, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I have a general pair with my colleague Mr. SCULLY, who is absent. I wish to withdraw my vote and to be recorded "present."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I have a general pair with my colleague Mr. DIXON. He did not vote, and I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I came in just after my name had been called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an amendment, on page 77, after line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 77, after line 2, by adding the following:

AMENDMENT No. 1.

Part A.

That this part, to be known as the United States cotton-futures act, be, and hereby is, enacted to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"That this act shall be known by the short title of the 'United States cotton-futures act.'

"SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of this act, the term 'contract of sale' shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. That the word 'person,' wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office, shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

"SEC. 3. That upon each contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business, there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton involved in any such contract.

"SEC. 4. That each contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be in writing plainly stating, or evidenced by written memorandum showing, the terms of such contract, including the quantity of the cotton involved and the names and addresses of the seller and buyer in such contract, and shall be signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf. If the contract or memorandum specify in bales the quantity of the cotton involved, without giving the weight, each bale shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to weigh 500 pounds.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. Will we have to wait until each section is read in full before we can offer amendments to it?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule no amendment to the amendment will be in order until after this amendment is reported in full.

Mr. SIMS. The whole amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The whole amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Then we can return to the proper place?

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment, of course, will be open to amendment, but not until after the amendment is reported in full.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under the rule is discussion permitted under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until after the amendment is reported in full. The Chair construes the rule to mean that the amendment must be reported in full, and then one hour's debate under the five-minute rule will be permitted, during which time amendments may be offered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That means that while the first amendment is being read we will not be permitted to offer any amendments or to make any remarks until the conclusion of the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. This whole amendment No. 1 is now being read by the Clerk, and can not be interrupted for amendment or debate until after the reading of it has been completed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. During the discussion of the rule it was stated by several gentlemen, notably the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that there would be opportunity for the freest discussion of these amendments. Now is it understood that under the rule the discussion can be had only at the conclusion of the reading of these 21 pages of the cotton futures act?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule just adopted by the House the Clerk is now reading amendment No. 1, and at the conclusion of the reading there will be one hour of debate on that amendment No. 1, during which time any member may seek recognition for the purpose of offering an amendment, and at the end of one hour a vote will be had on the amendments, if any are offered, and upon the amendment now being read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I understand the Chair correctly, then there will be one hour of general debate only?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour only.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At the conclusion of the reading of amendment No. 1, and that there will be no debate on the amendments to be offered to amendment No. 1?

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen may offer amendments during that time under the five-minute rule, if they desire.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But only one hour is permitted for the offering of amendments and for the discussion of amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's construction of the rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then as a matter of fact all discussion under the five-minute rule is barred under the special rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to pass upon that now. The Chair will pass upon that question when it arises.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The fact is that the Chair refuses to allow Members at this time to discuss the amendments paragraph by paragraph under the five-minute rule or to discuss amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is bound equally with the gentleman under the rule just adopted by the House, and by reason of that fact can not now recognize him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that. I am not finding fault with the Chair. I want to get the ruling of the Chair. Will the Chair recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania at this time to discuss a paragraph of the amendment under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. However glad the Chair would be to do that, he can not do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Chair refuses to recognize the gentleman for that purpose. I thank the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 2 hereof if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the requirements of section 4 of and the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture, except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know that I quite understand the ruling of the Chair. At what period does the reading under the five-minute rule begin?

The CHAIRMAN. After the Clerk finishes the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, it will be read under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Then it will not be read under the five-minute rule. It will have been read already.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It will have been?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desires to offer an amendment immediately on the conclusion of the reading of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. He can offer it, provided he receives recognition from the Chair.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How long would he be entitled to debate it?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the five-minute rule he can talk five minutes, unless the committee desires to extend his time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, I think I misunderstood the Chair. The five-minute rule begins at the conclusion of the reading of this amendment, does it?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is read as one amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely. Now, when does the five minute-rule begin?

The CHAIRMAN. After the Clerk has completed the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And then the five-minute rule continues for one hour—is that it?

The CHAIRMAN. Then the debate under the five-minute rule continues for one hour.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh! I did not get that.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is one hour's general debate on the bill, and then the five-minute rule applies.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask the Chair another question?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, according to the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it, there would be the possibility of offering only 12 amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. How many amendments?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Twelve—5 times 12 make 60 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not want to say that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose there were 20 amendments offered?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman could get five minutes' time, he might offer five amendments, or one every minute. There is no limit on the number of amendments that the gentleman might offer during that time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If that is the case, where does the time come from?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the committee to the rule just adopted, which seems to be plain:

And amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3—

The Clerk is now reporting amendment No. 1—

shall be read and considered separately, and on each amendment there shall be debate under the five-minute rule as follows: Amendment No. 1, one hour; amendments No. 2 and 3, one hour and a half each; during which debate amendments may be offered to the amendment then under consideration. All amendments offered, if any, shall be considered pending until the conclusion of the debate on the amendment to which they are offered, and at the expiration of the debate on each of the amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3 a vote shall be taken on all pending amendments and on the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then the physical fact is that during this hour any gentleman may offer an amendment, which he can debate for five minutes; then some one on the other side could oppose the amendment for five minutes. Is that true?

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That would make 10 minutes; there would be 50 minutes remaining. The physical fact is that not over six amendments could be offered to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to figure out mathematically how many amendments can be offered. The Chair is bound by the rule. The amendment must be reported as a whole, and after that there is not exceeding one hour's debate under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of that one hour a vote shall be had on the pending amendments to the amendment, if any.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Ohio precisely understands the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BENNET. In the nature of a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Does the Chair understand that the attitude of the gentleman from Ohio is that the amendment comprises 21 printed pages; that that must all be read; and that no amendment or debate can be had until it is completed; and then there shall be an hour, and during that hour not only is there to be all the debate that there is to be, but within that hour all the amendments must be reported from the desk? So the gentleman from Ohio, if he got the impression that he seems to have got, has an erroneous impression, because there is not one entire hour for debate; there must be deducted from that the time required to report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the committee understands the rule adopted and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will submit a parliamentary inquiry, but I will not ask the Chair to answer it now. I understand the rule and the rule is not explicit on one point. The rule provides that amendments to the amendment may be offered during the one-hour debate. That is a provision contrary to the usual rule—to have an amendment offered and pending. It does not provide definitely either one way or the other whether at the end of the hour's debate it would still be in order to offer an amendment without debate. That question will arise and I ask the Chair to consider it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, but I will ask it of the Chair as a parliamentary inquiry—whether or not the time consumed in reading the amendment will be taken out of the hour or hour and a half of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the time will be taken out of the hour.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; a Member who has five minutes is allowed that time for debate and the reading of his amendment is not taken out of that five minutes. Now the rule provides for one hour debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that he was in error as to that and that the gentleman from Illinois is correct. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with reading of the amendment, read as follows:

SEC. 5. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof, if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the requirements of section 4 of, and the rules and regulations made pursuant to, this act.

Second. Specify the basis grade for the cotton involved in the contract, which shall be one of the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section, the price per pound at which the cotton of such basis grade is contracted to be bought or sold, the date when the purchase or sale was made, and the month or months in which the contract is to be fulfilled or settled: Provided, That middling shall be deemed the basis grade incorporated into the contract if no other basis grade be specified either in the contract or in the memorandum evidencing the same.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to give the Chair an opportunity to rule directly on the proposition. At the end of the paragraph just passed I move to amend by striking out the last word of that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be recognized for that purpose at this time. Under the rule this amendment must be reported as a whole.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the amendment, read as follows:

Third. Provide that the cotton dealt with therein or delivered thereunder shall be of or within the grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture except grades prohibited from being delivered on a contract made under this section by the fifth subdivision of this section and no other grade or grades.

Fourth. Provide that in case cotton of grade other than the basis grade be tendered or delivered in settlement of such contract, the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for such grades other than the basis grade shall be the actual commercial differences, determined as hereinafter provided.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the statement of the Chair that the time for reading the amendment will be taken out of the hour of debate, would the Chair entertain a motion that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did make the statement but immediately corrected it. The Chair does not hold that the time for reading the amendment will be taken out of the time for debate. The Chair made the statement inadvertently but immediately corrected it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Chair had corrected that statement.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to expedite the matter I will submit a request that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I simply wanted to get the Chair's opinion in the matter.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the amendment, read as follows:

Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects, is reduced in value below that of Good Ordinary, or cotton that is below the grade of Good Ordinary, or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of Low Middling, or, if stained, cotton that is below the grade of Middling, the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States, or cotton that is less than seven-eighths of an inch in length of staple, or cotton of perished staple or of immature staple, or cotton that is "gin cut" or reginned, or cotton that is "repacked" or "false packed" or "mixed packed" or "water packed," shall not be delivered on, under, or in settlement of such contract.

Sixth. Provide that all tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein, except that such variations of the number of bales may be permitted as is necessary to bring the total weight of the cotton tendered within the provisions of the contract as to weight; that on the fifth business day prior to delivery the person making the tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery, and in advance of final settlement of the contract, the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same a written notice or certificate stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered, and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade.

Seventh. Provide that in case a dispute arises between the person making the tender and the person receiving the same as to the quality or the grade or the length of staple of any cotton tendered under the contract either party may refer the question to the Secretary of Agriculture for determination, and that such dispute shall be referred and determined, and the costs thereof fixed, assessed, collected, and paid in such manner and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The provisions of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 5."

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the seventh subdivision of this section; and his findings upon any dispute referred to him under said seventh subdivision, made after the parties in interest have had an opportunity to be heard by him, or such officer, officers, agent, or agents of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties or their privies as prima facie evidence of the true quality or grade or length of staple of the cotton involved.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of section 5 of this act the differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton of grades above or below the basis grade in the settlement of a contract of sale for the future delivery of cotton shall be determined by the actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract, established by the sale of spot cotton in the market where the future transaction involved occurs and is consummated if such market be a bona fide spot market; and in the event there be no bona fide spot market at or in the place in which such future transaction occurs, then, and in that case, the said differences above or below the contract price which the receiver shall pay for cotton above or below the basis grade shall be determined by the average actual commercial differences in value thereof upon the sixth business day prior to the day fixed, in accordance with the sixth subdivision of section 5, for the delivery of cotton on the contract in the spot markets of not less than five places designated for the purpose from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, as such values were established by the sales of spot cotton in such designated five or more markets: Provided, That for the purposes of this section such values in the said spot markets be based upon the standards for grades of cotton established by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That whenever the value of one grade is to be determined from the sale or sales of spot cotton of another grade or grades such value shall be fixed in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed for the purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the only markets which shall be considered bona fide spot markets shall be those which the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, after investigation, determine and designate to be such and of which he shall give public notice.

SEC. 8. That in determining, pursuant to the provisions of this act, what markets are bona fide spot markets the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to consider only markets in which spot cotton is sold in such volume and under such conditions as customarily to reflect accurately the value of middling cotton and the differences between the prices or values of middling cotton and of other grades of cotton for which standards shall have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That if there be not sufficient places in the markets of which are made bona fide sales of spot cotton of grades for which standards are established by the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to designate at least five spot markets in accordance with section 6 of this act, he shall, from data as to spot sales collected by him, make rules and regulations for determining the actual commercial differences in the value of spot cotton of the grades established by him as reflected by bona fide sales of spot cotton of the same or different grades in the markets selected and designated by him from time to time for that purpose; and in that event differences in value of cotton of various grades involved in contracts made pursuant to section 5 of this act shall be determined in compliance with such rules and regulations.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the "Official cotton standards of the United States," and to adopt, change, or replace the standard for any grade of cotton established under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 251), and acts supplementary thereto: Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That, subsequent to six months after the date section 3 of this act becomes effective, no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare practical forms of the official cotton standards which shall be established by him, and to furnish such practical forms from time to time, upon request, to any person, the cost thereof, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by the person requesting the same, and to certify such practical forms under the seal of the Department of Agriculture and under the signature of the said Secretary, thereto affixed by himself or by some official or employee of the Department of Agriculture thereunto duly authorized by the said Secretary.

SEC. 10. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof, if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description, specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be effected by means of "set-off" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words "Subject to United States cotton-futures act, section 10."

This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton.

This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

SEC. 11. That upon each order transmitted, or directed or authorized to be transmitted, by any person within the United States for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which the contract of sale is or is to be made at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in any foreign country, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if the contract made in pursuance thereof comply either with the conditions specified in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5 or with all the conditions specified in section 10 of this act, except that the quantity of the cotton involved in the contract may be expressed therein in terms of kilograms instead of pounds: Provided further, That if at the time any such contract is entered into the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, shall have determined and, by declaration then unrevoked, in the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act, shall have publicly announced that its terms are the substantial equivalent, and sufficient to accomplish the purposes, of the conditions specified in the fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of section 5 of this act, and the rules and regulations relating thereto, such contract shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to comply with the said conditions: And provided further, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any order mentioned in this section if, first, such order and the contract made in pursuance thereof be solely for hedging the purchase or sale of spot cotton shipped, or to be shipped, from the United States to any foreign country, or the shipment or consignment for sale of spot cotton from the United States to any foreign country, whether such order or contract be the one given or made originally, or be subsequently given or made for a purchase or sale to be substituted, for hedging the purchase, sale, or shipment or consignment for sale, of spot cotton, or be for the liquidation of any such transaction; and, second, a report of such transaction, including the shipment of the cotton involved, be made to the Secretary of the Treasury at such time or times and in such form as he may require.

This act shall not be construed to lay any tax on cotton exported from any State.

SEC. 11a. That upon each order received in the United States which shall have been, directly or indirectly, transmitted or directed or authorized to be transmitted by any person from a foreign country in which there is any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, for the making of any contract of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery in cases in which a contract of sale is made pursuant thereto at, on, or in any exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business in the United States, there is hereby levied an excise tax at the rate of 2 cents for each pound of the cotton so ordered to be bought or sold under such contract: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under this act on any such order if contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery which may be made at, on, or in the exchanges, boards of trade, and similar institutions and places of business in such foreign country or countries comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of contracts of sale in foreign countries. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized from time to time to ascertain and determine in what foreign countries there are any exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business at, on, or in which contracts of sale of cotton grown in the United States for future delivery are customarily made, and whether any such contracts of sale which may be made at, on, or in such exchanges, boards of trade, or similar institutions or places of business comply with the conditions specified in section 11 of this act for exemption from taxation under this act of orders sent from the United States for the making of such contracts of sale. He shall publish such determinations in his rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

SEC. 12. That the tax imposed by section 3 of this act shall be paid by the seller of the cotton involved in the contract of sale, by means of stamps which shall be affixed to such contracts, or to the memoranda evidencing the same, and canceled in compliance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The tax imposed by sections 11 and 11a of this act shall be paid by the sender of the order from the United States or the receiver in the United States of the order coming from a foreign country, as the case may be, and collected in accordance with rules and regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 13. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act which does not conform to the requirements of section 4 hereof and has not the necessary stamps affixed thereto as required by section 12 hereof shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by or on behalf of any party to such contract or his privies. That no contract of sale of cotton for future delivery made in pursuance of any order mentioned in sections 11 and 11a of this act shall be enforceable in any court of the United States by or on behalf of any party to such contract or his privies unless it conforms to the requirements of section 4 hereof and the tax imposed by section 11 or 11a upon the order for such contract shall have been paid in compliance with section 12 of this act.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to collect the tax imposed by this act and otherwise to enforce its provisions. Further to effect this purpose, he shall require all persons coming within its provisions to keep such records and statements of account, and may require such persons to make such returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions mentioned in sections 3, 11, and 11a of this act, including the origin, making, execution, settlement, and fulfillment thereof; he may require all persons who act in the capacity of a clearing house, clearing association, or similar institution for the purpose of clearing, settling, or adjusting transactions mentioned in section 3 of this act to keep such records and to make such returns as will fully and correctly disclose all facts in their possession relating to such transaction; and he may appoint agents to conduct the inspection necessary to collect said tax and otherwise to enforce this act and all rules and regulations made by him in pursuance hereof, and may fix the compensation of such agents. The provisions of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, so far as applicable, including sections 3173, 3174, and 3175 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, are hereby extended and made to apply to this act.

SEC. 15. That any person liable to the payment of any tax imposed by this act who fails to pay, or evades or attempts to evade the payment of such tax, and any person who otherwise violates any provision of this act, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $20,000, in the discretion of the court; and, in case of natural persons, may, in addition, be punished by imprisonment for not less than 60 days nor more than 3 years, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 16. That in addition to the foregoing punishment there is hereby imposed, on account of each violation of this act, a penalty of $2,000, to be recovered in an action founded on this act in the name of the United States as plaintiff, and when so recovered one-half of said amount shall be paid over to the person giving the information upon which such recovery was based. It shall be the duty of United States attorneys to whom satisfactory evidence of violations of this act is furnished to institute and prosecute actions for the recovery of the penalties prescribed by this section.

SEC. 17. That no person whose evidence is deemed material by the officer prosecuting on behalf of the United States in any case brought under any provision of this act shall withhold his testimony because of complicity by him in any violation of this act or of any regulation made pursuant to this act, but any such person called by such officer who testifies in such case shall be exempt from prosecution for any offense to which his testimony relates.

SEC. 18. That the payment of any tax levied by this act shall not exempt any person from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State for entering into contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, nor shall the payment of any tax imposed by this act be held to prohibit any State or municipality from imposing a tax on the same transaction.

SEC. 19. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated by the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. L., 1017), for "collecting the cotton-futures tax," or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act and any duties remaining to be performed by him under the United States cotton-futures act of August 18, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 693).

SEC. 20. That there are hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, the unexpended balance of the sum of $150,000 appropriated by section 20 of the said act of August 18, 1914, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the unexpended balance of the sum of $75,000 appropriated for the "enforcement of the United States cotton-futures act" by the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (38 Stat. L., 1086), or so much of each of said unexpended balances as may be necessary, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the same purposes, in carrying out the provisions of this act, as those for which said sums, respectively, were originally appropriated and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out any duties remaining to be performed by him under the said act of August 18, 1914. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to publish from time to time the results of investigations made in pursuance of this act. All sums collected by the Secretary of Agriculture as costs under section 5, or for furnishing practical forms under section 9, of this act, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 21. That sections 9, 19, and 20 of this act and all provisions of this act authorizing rules and regulations to be prescribed shall be effective immediately; section 11a of this act shall become and be effective on and after the 1st day of August, 1917. All other sections of this act shall become and be effective on and after the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to any contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act which shall have been made prior to the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 22. That the act entitled "An act to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 693), is hereby repealed, effective on and after the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any right or privilege accrued, any penalty or liability incurred, or any proceeding commenced under said act of August 18, 1914, or to diminish any authority conferred by said act on any official of the United States necessary to enable him to carry out any duties remaining to be performed by him under the said act, or to impair the effect of the findings of the Secretary of Agriculture upon any dispute referred to him under said act, or to affect any right in respect to or arising out of any contract mentioned in section 3 of said act made on or subsequent to February 18, 1915, and prior to the 1st day of the calendar month next succeeding the date of the passage of this act, but so far as concerns any such contract said act of August 18, 1914, shall remain in force with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 23. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer the following amendments to the amendment:

On page 3, line 8, after the words "no tax," insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

On page 10, line 14, following the words "no tax," insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

On page 12, line 4, at the end of the words "no tax," add the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

On page 14, line 2, after the words "no tax," add "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. SIMS:

Page 3, line 8, after the word "tax" insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

Page 10, line 14, after the word "tax," insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

Page 12, line 4, after the word "tax," insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale"

Page 14, line 2, after the word "tax," insert the words "in excess of 10 cents per bale."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman has submitted four amendments.

Mr. SIMS. No; it is only one amendment in several places, and a vote on the first will settle them all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota is not well taken.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill, on the face of it, is to put a tax on the sale of cotton of $10 a bale of 500 pounds. The general proposition is a tax of $10 a bale when sold on the exchanges, and then follows exemptions providing that if a certain form of contract is used no tax shall be collected. Now, my amendment does not change the bill in any shape whatever but wherever the contract provided in this act is used then instead of taxing it $10 a bale we only tax it 10 cents a bale.

Such a tax is not burdensome and will enable any legitimate future dealing to be done where the cotton is intended to be delivered or where it is intended to be used for hedging purposes. It will not prevent the use of the exchanges in all legitimate business, but it will prevent the buying and selling of options merely as a gambling transaction where neither party intends to at the time they make the contract to deliver the cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, would that apply to spot deals?

Mr. SIMS. It would have no effect whatever upon spot deals.

Mr. HEFLIN. Spot deals on spot markets.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, not at all; it must be through the exchanges; but it will amount to the collection of a large sum of money, because they buy and sell cotton by the hundreds of thousands of bales where no delivery is expected or intended or desired—purely fictitious transactions—and if they want to do so they can still do that under this bill with this 10 cents a bale, reducing the tax from $10 to 10 cents a bale. They can still gamble, but they will have to pay some revenue for the privilege of doing it, which will very greatly reduce such dealings. When we are seeking all sorts and sources of taxation in order to collect revenue to prepare this country for its defense, and this is a small revenue tax, perfectly legitimate, bringing in a large sum of money, and it will not prevent any legitimate use of the cotton exchanges. The Democratic platform calls for the suppression, not for the regulating, of this kind of dealing. This 10 cents a bale will not suppress it absolutely, it will not prevent a legitimate use of it, but it will have a tendency to reduce fictitious dealing on the exchanges where men buy in the morning and sell in the afternoon of the same day or the next minute. It will prevent "ringing" out, it will tend to prevent running of corners; but if you do it you must pay for it, must pay this tax into the Public Treasury at a time when the Public Treasury needs every cent it can get. I think my friends who live in the South can better justify voting for this bill with this amendment than they can without it, because every cotton exchange for every kind of dealing, gambling, real or otherwise, will use the contract provided in this Lever amendment. They will all be printed forms, and no other sort will be used, and without some amendment of this bill your pretended 2 cents a pound tax will produce no revenue; you will not get a cent under it; but it is using the taxing power for other purposes, which a great many Democrats are very much opposed to.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman for my own information what he thinks of the provision of this bill as compared with the old bill?

Mr. SIMS. It is practically the same thing. I voted against the old bill because they would not accept an amendment of this sort, and will do it again unless it is amended. But if we tax it 10 cents a bale it means a large amount of revenue and a great deal less gambling, and then we will have a real record made by an officer of the United States which will show accurately the amount of future dealing done in the cotton exchanges of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Tennessee having offered four amendments and having consumed five minutes in the discussion of one of them, is he now entitled to 15 minutes more for a discussion of the other three?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled that the gentleman's amendment is one amendment. He has occupied his five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. And he does not ask for any more.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out section 11.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean section 11 or section 11a? One deals with orders coming in and the other with orders going out.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I will limit myself for the time being to try to strike out all that is going out—section 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BENNET moves to strike out, on page 11, beginning with line 20, all of section 11 down to and including line 12, on page 13.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, without assuming the highest degree of familiarity with the cotton trade, but simply applying ordinary business principles, it seems to me that this is an attempt, after the present war closes, to transfer the business of the cotton exchanges of the United States to Liverpool. I am not particularly versed in the comparative morality or immorality of cotton exchanges. I never was on one in my life and never bought or sold any of these futures or hedges, whatever they are called. I absolutely disagree with the morality of the position of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], however. For instance, he regards these transactions as gambling, but is perfectly willing that the gambling shall continue as long as the United States gets a part of the rake-off.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. I said the Democratic platform called for the abolition of gambling, and the way to abolish it is to tax it out of existence.

Mr. BENNET. But the gentleman says do not abolish it, but let us get some of the money.

Mr. SIMS. I said you can go ahead with your legitimate dealings because the tax is light.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, did not the gentleman urge this as a revenue-producing measure?

Mr. BENNET. Of course.

Mr. KELLEY. And how could you get revenue unless the gambling continued?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly. It is simply another way of licensing a gambling house. The contention is made by the men who deal on these exchanges, however, that it is a legitimate business, and I am inclined to think it is. If it is a legitimate business, it ought not to be driven from the United States. What section 11 does is to drive the business of making contracts for the future sale of cotton grown in the United States and contracts for future delivery from the exchanges of the United States to the exchange at Liverpool, because, of course, we can not impose any tax on the sale of futures on the exchange in Liverpool. I realize that this method of discussion of my amendment is very futile. We talk now, and 50 minutes from now, under this rule, when the gentlemen who are now at lunch and who comprise a large majority of the House come back, we will vote on what we have now offered in the way of amendment.

That is simply one of the beauties of this rule. But I discharge my duty to gentlemen who live in the city which I have the honor to represent in part, and I make my protest both in behalf of my city and the city of New Orleans against driving this business out of the United States and over to Great Britain. I do not know why we are so particularly fond of Great Britain in all of our manifestations. I was glad yesterday when we showed a little kindly feeling toward Roumania, because it was a modification of our usual rule; but we are getting more and more British in this practice of putting legislation on appropriation bills. It is what? British. What is the Speakership of this House now? It is British. Ten years ago we had an American system under which the Speaker had power. Now we have the British provision, and by this rule we have taken one further step toward turning the American House of Representatives into the British House of Commons. I know that the Sixty-fifth Congress will be Republican and we will reverse it, but I would not be surprised if in the second session of this Congress we would have to call the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture "the right honorable gentleman from South Carolina, in charge of the Agricultural appropriation bill," and use all those other forms that go with the British aristocracy and all those other matters that we were brought up—rightly, I think—to believe inferior to American institutions.

I am sorry I have to discuss this bill in this way, but that is the manner in which it comes before the House, and I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will see his way clear to accept the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that this cotton-futures bill is not properly before the Committee on Agriculture; that——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that point is not well taken and is evidently dilatory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to bring it up, even if it is disposed of by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the committee that the House by rule has made this special bill in order at this time; and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, section 11 of the cotton-futures bill was made a part of that bill for two purposes, one to prevent the evasion of the law, and the other to provide, if possible, an international standard of grade and contract. There has been a great deal of misrepresentation of the effect of section 11.

Now, what is that section? We have provided in this cotton-futures bill a method for the control of the operations of our own future-cotton exchanges. In the same bill we are undertaking by legislation—indirectly, I admit—to bring about a universal system for handling cotton contracts. We attempt to get other exchanges of the world—Liverpool, Bremen, Havre, and the recently established exchange at Rotterdam—not only to adopt our standard of measurement of the grades, but at the same time to adopt our contract, as far as possible, so as to protect the farmers of this country, who export 66 per cent of their cotton, from improper grades and improper and depressed contracts.

Now, it has been asserted very frequently that this section 11 as it appeared in the old law was a discrimination in favor of the British operator. Theoretically there may be something to that statement, but in practical effect there is nothing to it. But that criticism does not lie in this bill, because we have recommended section 11a, which makes it impossible for the operator on a foreign exchange to have executed for him an order on an American exchange unless the contract and the grade of the foreign exchange meet substantially the requirements of the American standard of grade and contract.

Now, then, I assert that it means greatly to the benefit of the farmers of this country if we can say to them, "You produce the cotton that is sold in the world, and we are going to give you the right under law in this country and abroad, if we can, to fix for yourselves what the standard of measurement shall be of that which you produce and likewise the character of contract upon which you sell your product." Is that a bad undertaking? Is not that a carrying out of the desire of the cotton producers of this country? I think there is no question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 6, after the word "receipts," add the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall report to Congress before July 1, 1916, the names of all persons appointed by him to carry out the purposes of this act, the dates of such appointments, the purposes for which such persons were appointed, and the salaries paid to them."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I raised the point of order a moment ago that this bill was improperly before the Committee on Agriculture, and the Chair ruled that the point was not well taken. In the few moments I have I want to refer to the permanent rules of the House, which provide that all matters "pertaining to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means." Those matters to be referred to the Committee on Agriculture are "agriculture and forestry," "which committee shall receive the estimates and report the appropriations for the Agricultural Department." There is nothing in the permanent rules of this House which gives the Committee on Agriculture the right of jurisdiction over tax bills. That is clearly a function of the Committee on Ways and Means, and this bill is improperly before this Committee of the Whole now, because it provides—section 3 on page 2—for a tax of 2 cents per pound on the cotton involved, and so forth, and in subsequent paragraphs it provides for taxes all along the line. Hence the rules of the House are overridden, and a purely revenue proposition is taken from the great Committee on Ways and Means, and jurisdiction over the matter of revenue is assumed by the Committee on Agriculture, which has absolutely nothing to do with that question. But the Chair has ruled, and I shall say nothing further about it for the present.

I have offered an amendment which proposes that the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Congress what he does in the way of appointing people to serve under this act. It is important that we should have that sort of information in this House, if we are to uphold the limitations that have been imposed by law upon other departments of this Government. As this bill now stands, and as most of the provisions providing appropriations for salaries in the Department of Agriculture now stand, that department is a law unto itself. Those rules and limitations and legal restrictions which bind other departments do not bind the Department of Agriculture.

Yesterday we had an evidence of this when discussing the appropriation for carrying out the law which this amendment is to be attached to, with respect to the government and control of the cotton exchanges of the country. It developed then that we were employing 26 men, the total appropriation for all purposes being $150,000. We were employing 26 men who had no special work to do, because the law under which they were employed had been declared unconstitutional.

Now, in the matter of the migratory-bird act, it appeared upon inquiry by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that we were appropriating $50,000 for a large number of assistants and specialists and experts who were apparently performing, when the law under which they had been appointed had been declared unconstitutional.

I wish I had time, in the five minutes to which we are restricted under this rule, to go into this matter of the specialists and the experts that the Secretary of Agriculture can appoint at will, without restriction or limitation as to the salary, under this appropriation, but the five minutes is up. However, we find the salaries run up to $3,000, not fixed by law, as in every other department, but fixed in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to review the history of this legislation. Since I have been in Congress this House has passed what is known as the Scott bill twice. The Scott bill prohibited gambling in cotton futures. The year previous to the investigation by the Committee on Agriculture of this question which resulted in the production of this bill the House passed what is known as the Scott bill almost unanimously. There was scarcely a protest on the floor of this House against it.

The exchanges, Mr. Chairman, saw the end of the cotton exchange and the gambling in futures. What did they do? The next year after the passage of the Scott bill almost unanimously by this House, the cotton exchanges, through their officials—the president and ex-presidents of the cotton exchanges—appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and changed the attitude in regard to cotton-future legislation.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is one of the best men in this House, he is thoroughly conscientious in supporting this bill, and I regret that I can not agree with him on this bill. I will read from the hearings, first from Mr. Hill, who has been in the cotton-exchange business 30 or 40 years, and who has been appearing periodically in Washington for 21 years on this question. He says:

I feel quite sure that the political powers, were we to show this sort of spirit, would be satisfied with these changes and that these changes would add substantially to the volume of our business rather than to change it or reduce it.

Mr. Hill is not the only one who testified. I read:

I like the initial clauses of this bill, and I like the tax idea rather than the prohibition of the mails. I think the business can stand a small tax.

Yes, gentlemen, they fought the Scott bill to a finish. They fought it to where they were lost, and they knew they were lost. They knew this House had passed it twice. They knew the House had passed it once unanimously, and they knew that the Senate could not stand out against the Scott bill any longer. You will notice Mr. Hill said:

I think the business can stand a small tax.

That is what the bill is; and, as I understand the hearings, he approved legislation along the line of this bill.

Another man, a president of the New York Cotton Exchange, Mr. Marsh, also appeared before the committee, and here is what he says:

I want to begin by saying that I do not appear here in opposition to legislation in regard to the cotton exchanges.

Then he added:

Consequently it can not be said that I am, or that the New York Cotton Exchange is, opposed to legislation on this subject in principle. On the contrary, we believe in legislation on this subject.

The man who had fought it so vehemently and the crowd that had tried to defeat it and had been run over in this House twice again appeared before this committee and, as I understand the hearing, approved the principles contained in this bill before the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 12, line 21, after the word "conditions," strike out the words "And provided further" and the rest of line 21, lines 22, 23, 24, and 25; also on page 13, lines 1 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture what the word "hedging" means in line 24 of page 12. I want to get some information about the method of "hedging" in the cotton business, as permitted in line 24, page 12. What does "hedging" mean?

Mr. LEVER. "Hedging" means sale on a future contract against a contemplated spot delivery of cotton.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not that a form of gambling?

Mr. LEVER. It is not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is an effort to protect a sale by another sale?

Mr. LEVER. "Hedging" is defined by those who know this business as an insurance against accident in the course of transportation of the product from the point of shipment to the point of delivery and a protection against fluctuations in the value of spot cotton. It is the antithesis of gambling.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How is the insurance made?

Mr. LEVER. The insurance is made through these operations on the exchange. For instance, if I were to sell a thousand bales of cotton to a firm in Manchester, England, for delivery next January, in order to protect myself against any fluctuations in the market in the meantime I would buy on the Liverpool exchange a future contract for 1,000 bales of cotton, January delivery.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would both deals be consummated?

Mr. LEVER. Both deals would be consummated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the actual cotton delivered in both cases?

Mr. LEVER. When I delivered the cotton I would sell my future contract, and that would consummate the deal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 20, at the end of the line, I move to strike out "seven-eighths" and insert "three-fourths."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment that the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 4, in line 20, by striking out the words "seven-eighths" and inserting the words "three-fourths."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to talk to you gentlemen who are not familiar with cotton growing. Amendment No. 2 is a grain bill. I do not know anything about that, and when we reach that I shall be largely governed by your views. You will pardon me for going just a bit into my history, merely to acquaint you with the conditions and to show that I know something about cotton. When I was first able to lift a hoe I went to work in the cotton fields, and as a hired hand, as a share cropper, as a tenant, and in later years as a landlord in a moderate way, and a ginner of cotton, I have learned something about cotton.

Last year when this bill was before this House I did not vote. I was then rather persuaded that it was a splendid bill for the spinner and a disastrous bill for the cotton grower. However, in deference to the Committee on Agriculture—for I have the very highest regard for all the members of that committee—I would not put my judgment against theirs. But we have had one year of experience now, and we know about it. Notwithstanding the fact that there were 5,000,000 bales less cotton grown in 1915 than in 1914, and notwithstanding the fact that there was an increased consumption of cotton up to the 31st day of March, 1916, over the 31st day of March, 1915, spot cotton—that is, the actual cotton—has sagged from the opening day of the market to the present time.

This bill provides that a man who wants to purchase cotton, a spinner, can go to an exchange and make a binding, valid contract with that exchange to deliver to him so many bales of cotton of a certain grade at some fixed time in the future. That being true, he knows what his cotton is going to cost him. He does not then have to put his money into it. Cotton costs considerable if you carry many bales of spot cotton. He does not have to pay insurance or commission or storage. He simply makes a contract with somebody who agrees that at some future date agreed upon between the two he may have as many bales of cotton of a certain grade as he wants. Under the system that existed before that time he could not make such a binding, valid contract, and the result was that if he wanted cotton he had to buy it when it was in the market to be sold.

We commence to gather cotton about the middle of August and continue up to the first of the year, but in the months of September, October, and November three-quarters of all the cotton that is grown is put on the market. That cotton is grown by people who are compelled to sell, and in the common parlance we say that is the "distressed" cotton. That is cotton grown by people who are unable to carry it. Some merchant has furnished them the money to make it. Somebody has advanced them the money to gather it. They even have to have the ginning paid for in many instances, and the consequence is that as soon as they get their cotton gathered they must sell it. Heretofore spinners went into the market at that time and actually bought spot cotton, but under the provisions of this bill they do not do so. They can say to the exchange man, "I am going to need 20,000 bales of cotton of a certain grade next summer to spin." The cotton exchange man says, "All right, I will let you have it at, say, 10 cents." Instead then of going into the market and becoming an active bidder for 20,000 bales of spot cotton, when the people who have grown it are compelled to sell it, this spinner puts his hands in his pockets and sits back in his office, and leaves a market in which there are thousands and thousands of bales of cotton that must be sold with nobody to buy it. The result is that the cotton grower is beaten out of his cotton.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] has been recognized once and can not be recognized again——

Mr. TRIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to introduce a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. CARAWAY] may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has surrendered the floor and the committee by unanimous consent has granted to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] permission to offer an amendment.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I move to strike out all after the first word and insert the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out all after the word "that," on page 1, and inserting the following:

"Certain words used in this act and in proceedings pursuant hereto shall, unless the same be inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows: The word 'message' shall mean any communication by telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country. The word 'person' shall mean any person, partnership, joint-stock company, society, association, or corporation, their managers and officers, and when used with reference to the commission of acts which are herein required or forbidden shall include persons who are participants in the required or forbidden acts, and the agents, officers, and members of the boards of directors and trustees, or other similar controlling or directing bodies of partnerships, joint-stock companies, societies, associations, and corporations. And words importing the plural number, wherever used, may be applied to or mean only a single person or thing, and words importing the singular number may be applied to or mean several persons or things.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to send or cause to be sent any message offering to make or enter into a contract for the purchase or sale for future delivery of cotton without intending that such cotton shall be actually delivered or received, or offering to make or enter into a contract whereby any party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, requires the right or privilege to demand in the future the acceptance or delivery of cotton without being thereby obligated to accept or to deliver such cotton; and the transmission of any message relating to any such transaction is hereby declared to be an interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations. Any person who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, or shall be imprisoned for not more than six months nor less than one month, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and the sending or causing to be sent of each such message shall constitute a separate offense."

Mr. LEVER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, enough of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia has been read to enable me to make a point of order against it. I know what the amendment is—it is the old Scott bill, and it will take half an hour to read it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then the gentleman admits that it is the old Scott bill.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. I am not trying to conceal anything. I make the point of order that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia is not germane to the amendment under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia want to be heard?

Mr. TRIBBLE. It is the same subject as is the amendment under consideration. The amendment under consideration is to regulate cotton futures, and this proposition is along the same line—exactly the same question involved.

Mr. HOWARD. If the Chair will permit one additional statement to that made by my colleague. The Scott bill—and it is admitted that it is the Scott bill—was regulatory of the cotton-future business. That was the intent of the law, to regulate cotton futures.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is very much mistaken.

Mr. HOWARD. What was the purpose of it?

Mr. LEVER. The Scott bill was enacted as the gentleman from Goergia [Mr. TRIBBLE] intends this to be, to absolutely put the cotton exchanges dealing in futures out of business.

Mr. HOWARD. And you propose to do it by taxation.

Mr. LEVER. We do not propose to do it.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, this bill before the House regulates the question of exchanges and future sales of cotton by taxation. The other, the Scott bill, regulates it by prohibiting it and forbidding them the use of the mails or interstate commerce; both of them deal with the exchange. The subject matter of the Scott bill is the subject matter of this bill, namely, the cotton exchanges and the control of them. It is germane and in order, I respectfully submit. This is the way to get rid of the devil and that is what we are after. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: The amendment under consideration is an effort, through the taxing power of the Constitution, to regulate the operation of the cotton-future exchanges of this country. There is no attempt in this amendment, I say very frankly, to abolish cotton-future trading in this country. The purpose of this bill is solely to regulate the conduct of these exchanges so that their contracts, which are quoted from morning to morning, upon which the price of spot cotton is based in all markets, shall really represent the true average value of spot cotton in the United States at that time. That is the purpose of the amendment, and we rely on the taxing power to do that.

Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia—and I am quite familiar with it, because I was on the subcommittee which helped to draw it and on the full committee that reported it out—the purpose of the old Scott bill was, and if it had gone into operation the effect would have been, to absolutely close the doors of the exchanges. There was no purpose to regulate future sales in that bill; the only purpose was to destroy the exchanges and the bill relied upon the commerce clause of the Constitution and the control by Congress of the postal facilities to accomplish this end.

Now, I submit that on a bill, the purpose of which is to regulate by certain methods a transaction another proposition intended to destroy absolutely, that transaction through other methods can not be germane.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The provision in the Scott bill was that unless the transaction was accompanied with an affidavit that it was a bona fide transaction and that it would be delivered, it was an unlawful act. That did not destroy the legal transaction, but it destroyed the illegal transaction.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman knew as much about this as the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. HOWARD. I admit that I am powerfully ignorant. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. If he knew as much about it as the gentleman from Tennessee knows about it, he would know that there is not a cotton-future exchange in existence which could live for a minute if everyone of these contracts had to be fulfilled by delivery and if the Scott bill went into operation. It would absolutely destroy the exchanges, and every man on the committee knew it.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman will admit that the Supreme Court of the United States has determined time and again that the power of Congress to regulate carries with it the power to destroy.

Mr. LEVER. That may be; but I am discussing the point of order before the House.

Mr. HOWARD. I am, too.

Mr. LEVER. And I submit that the bill which seeks to destroy a thing absolutely is not germane to a proposition which seeks only to regulate its conduct.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized on the point of order. We are dealing with a very serious problem. The Supreme Court has decided definitely—and it is an accepted proposition of law—that the power to regulate, the power to tax, is the power to destroy, and I hope it will have that effect in this amendment. I am now more determined than ever in respect to this amendment, since I have heard the chairman's explanation. The whole issue is involved in this one fact: That if we accept the chairman's position we leave the exchange with the full power to control the absolute spot market of the United States, with no competition by the actual buyer or spinner down among the ranks of the cotton growers, and hence they have a legalized unscrupulous monopoly in touch with the exchange in Liverpool, and they can put a final price on every bale of cotton in the United States six hours before the farmer gets out of bed in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is not discussing the point of order. The Chair will be glad to hear him on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am discussing the reasons why the point of order ought not to exist. We are dealing with the power to regulate.

The power to regulate carries with it the power to kill, and I want to kill these exchanges and then kick them to show them there is punishment after death. The power to tax carries with it the power to kill. The Scott bill may kill it, but, my God, if it is to be left with the monopoly that the chairman admits, I hope it will, and it is absolutely germane, because it regulates. If it regulates unto death, that is their misfortune and the farmers' good fortune.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it has been so long since the Scott bill was before the House that I would not undertake to state positively its terms. That is the reason why the bill should be read, and I think now it ought to be read before we discuss the point of order. The Scott bill made it unlawful to make fictitious deals, and all you had to do was to make an affidavit that your contract was genuine, that you intended to deliver if you sold it or intended to accept delivery if you bought. It seems to me it is absolutely regulatory, because a man could not swear he intended to receive delivery unless he intended to do so. It was cumbersome and would have been hard to execute. The taxing power is much better and a more convenient way to abolish gambling contracts.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amendment ought to be read. If there is any doubt about what the provisions are, we would at least like to have it go into the RECORD for the preservation of parliamentary procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon it, the Clerk will read.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do insist upon it. This will not be taken out of the time, will it?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of any person sending any message relating to a contract or to the making of a contract for future delivery of cotton to furnish to the person transmitting such message an affidavit stating that he is the owner of such cotton and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that such cotton is at the time in actual course of growth on land owned, controlled, or cultivated by him and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that he is at the time legally entitled to the right of future possession of such cotton under and by authority of a contract for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such cotton, giving the name of the party or names of parties to such contract and the time when and the place where such contract was made and the price therein stipulated, and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton; or that he has the intention to acquire and deliver such cotton; or that he has the intention to receive and pay for such cotton: Provided, That any person electing to do so may file with the telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, or cable company an affidavit stating that the message or messages being sent, or to be sent, for the six months next ensuing by such person do not and will not relate to any such contract or offers to contract as are described in section 2 of this act, and any such company shall issue thereupon a certificate evidencing the fact that such affidavit has been duly filed, and such certificate shall be accepted in lieu of the affidavit herein required at all the transmitting offices of such company during the life of said affidavit. Any person who knowingly shall make a false statement in any affidavit provided for in this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 nor less than $500, or shall be imprisoned for not more than two years nor less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. And in any prosecution under the provisions of sections 2 or 3 of this act the proof or failure to make any affidavit herein required shall be prima facie evidence that said message or messages related to a contract prohibited by section 2 of this act, and the proof of failure to deliver or receive the cotton called for in any contract for future delivery of cotton shall be prima facie evidence that there was no intention to deliver or receive such cotton when said contract was made.

SEC. 4. That any agent of any telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, or cable company to whom messages herein described may be tendered is hereby required, empowered, and authorized to administer any oath required to be made under the provisions of this act with like effect and force as officers having a seal, and such oaths shall be administered without any charge therefor.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning or operating any telegraph or telephone line, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication, or any officer, agent, or employee of such person, knowingly to use such property or knowingly to allow such property to be used for the transmission of any message relating to such contracts as are described in section 2 of this act. Any person who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $500, and the sending of each message in violation of the provisions of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 6. That every book, newspaper, pamphlet, letter, writing, or other publication containing matter tending to induce or promote the making of such contracts as are described in section 2 of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be carried in the mail or delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Any person who shall knowingly deposit or knowingly cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery any matter declared by this section to be nonmailable, or shall knowingly take or cause the same to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing thereof, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 nor less than $500, or shall be imprisoned not more than five years nor less than one year, or both. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section may be proceeded against by information or indictment and tried and punished either in the district at which the unlawful publication was mailed or to which it is carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereof, or at which it is caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it is addressed.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Why can not this whole thing be printed in the RECORD? Nobody is paying any attention to what the Clerk is reading.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that it be put into the RECORD without being read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to himself that any person in sending through the mails of the United States any matter declared by section 6 of this act to be nonmailable, may instruct the postmasters in the post offices at which such mail arrives to return all such mail to the postmaster in the post office at which it was originally mailed, with the word "unlawful" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such mail, when returned to said postmaster, shall be returned to the sender or publisher thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

SEC. 8. That in any proceeding under this act all persons may be required to testify and to produce books and papers, and the claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the persons giving such testimony or producing such evidence shall not excuse such person from testifying or producing such books and papers; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or punishment whatever for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence of any character whatever.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is not well taken. The amendment introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina is in order only by reason of a special rule making in order "legislation to regulate exchanges." In order for the Chair to determine what then would be in order under such rule, the Chair must of necessity determine what is the meaning of the term "regulate." The Supreme Court has uniformly held that power to regulate carries with it the power and the right to prohibit. If that be the meaning of the word "regulate" as interpreted by the Supreme Court in cases that are strictly analogous, certainly the same would hold in interpreting the meaning of the word in the rule under which we are here acting. But it is not necessary for the Chair to adopt such conclusion in order to hold that this amendment is in order, for the reading of the substitute which the Chair has just listened to clearly shows that it authorizes contracts on the exchange and seeks to specify a class of contracts that are not lawful. It is clearly then germane and within the general purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. The reading of the substitute, it seems to me, can leave no doubt in the mind of the Chair that the insistence of the gentleman from South Carolina that the substitute is a bill to destroy, even if the Chair should hold that the rule was not sufficiently broad to authorize such an amendment, is not well taken. The substitute does not go that far. It simply regulates, just as the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina seeks to do, and for that reason there can be no question as to the point of order not being well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman see any distinction in this fact, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina seeks to attempt to regulate certain proceedings by the process of taxation, while the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia seeks to perhaps accomplish the same thing, but in a different way entirely, by the imposition of fines, in the nature of criminal procedure?

Mr. OLIVER. I can not understand that there could be any difference when the primary purpose of both bills is to regulate and to define what contracts are lawful and permissible, even though it might be sought to accomplish such regulation by different methods in the two bills. Both of these bills provide a criminal penalty for violations. The position of the gentleman from South Carolina is that while the Scott bill, which is the substitute, does not in fact prohibit exchanges by its terms, yet he would have the Chair, for the purpose of sustaining his point of order, conclude that because of his statement that he believes the effect of the Scott bill would be to close down the exchange, that such is its purpose and effect.

Certainly the Chairman would not determine the purpose and effect of this substitute by considering a statement made on the floor to the effect that perhaps it may not be profitable, if this law is enacted, for exchanges to continue business under it. The belief of the chairman of the committee does not determine, if you please, what is the nature and purpose of a law, but only the reading of the language of the law can be looked to by the Chair in order to ascertain its purpose and effect.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, now, of course, the present amendment to the Agricultural bill starts out by proposing a tax of $10 a bale—2 cents a pound. That is a proposition simply and singly by itself, but which is followed by providing a sort of a contract by which, if executed, no tax at all is to be collected, but it also has many other provisions in it besides the one with reference to taxation. The Chair will see by examining the bill that there is much in this amendment besides the taxing provision, and he will see by the Scott bill that there is much in it besides simply preventing the buying and selling where there was no intention to deliver or accept delivery.

The underlying purpose of this bill is to legalize dealing in futures where no delivery is intended, where no cotton is to be delivered and none to be accepted, by simply complying with the form of contract mentioned therein, but it also refers to grades and legislates concerning a number of things besides taxation, just as the Scott bill did, and making it a misdemeanor or crime to buy that which you do not want and sell that which you have not got and do not expect to deliver. But the main object is to prevent fictitious trading in cotton upon the various exchanges of the country, to which each of these bills applies. Of course the taxing power is used in one instance and the criminal statute in another, but the Scott bill provides that certain kinds of contracts shall be absolutely void, and it provides how valid contracts shall be made; that is, by making an affidavit to accompany the contract; and then it can be executed under the law and be protected, and it only makes the so-called fictitious contracts where the parties to them do not intend to comply with the terms of them; and this $10 a bale tax will not absolutely destroy the cotton exchange not only where delivery is not intended, but where it is, from the fact that no legitimate business could be done on the cotton exchange if dealers had to pay $10 a bale tax.

Now, avoiding the tax by using a certain form of contract is a mere subterfuge to legalize fictitious dealing where all the parties to the transaction have not the slightest idea of doing anything except to settle by way of margin, the loser paying the difference and the winner getting what the loser loses, which has always been called a gambling or wagering contract, where the whole purpose and object of the deal is that I am to get your margin or you are to get mine.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to section 3 of the so-called Lever amendment. It says:

There shall be levied a tax in the nature of an excise tax of 2 cents for each pound of cotton involved in any such contract.

That would be $10 a bale on the cotton. Of course, that is prohibitive. If there was not a subsequent section in the bill by availing himself of the provisions of which the dealer can get around the provisions of section 3, it would close every exchange in America the day it went on the statute books.

Now, the Scott bill provides that if they make a contract and do not do certain things in connection with it, they are in violation of the law, and its penalties are so harsh that it would close the exchanges. Each one gets its jurisdiction to deal with the matter by a provision of the bill that would absolutely close the exchanges. Then each in a different way provides the means by which those who deal on the exchanges may avoid the penalties of the bill, the object being the same in each, each starting out with the provision that would close the exchanges, and each having subsequent provisions by means of which those who deal with them may avoid the penalties of the statute. And, therefore, if one is in order the other would necessarily be, under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Naturally the Chair would like to have had more time to consider this matter, and it may be that he may not be of the same opinion to-morrow as he is to-day; after he has had time to look this matter up carefully he may change his opinion.

I think it has been the experience of every Chairman who has had to deal with these many matters that it is very difficult to determine sometimes just what is germane and what is not. It is not always true that things pertaining to the same general purpose or object are germane, one to the other. But in this case it seems to me that the only difference that I have been able to detect, only hearing the two amendments read, is that one seeks to accomplish a certain purpose through the process of taxation, and the other by a little different method, to wit, by the imposition of fines for the violation of certain provisions of the amendment.

The Chair is reminded of this fact, however, that in 1904 the House had under consideration a bill carrying an appropriation for an enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act. There were certain provisions in that bill that changed existing law. The Chairman, who was then Mr. Theodore Burton, held that if a point of order had been raised to those provisions it would unquestionably have been sustained, but the point of order not being raised, was therefore waived, and the matter was in consequence properly before the committee.

In this case the matter under consideration offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is made in order by a special rule, so that point can not be raised as to his amendment. Then the matter made in order by special rule, or permitted to be in order by reason of the fact that no point of order is made against it, stands the same as any other matter that is naturally in order before in the bill; but Chairman Burton laid down this rule that if a paragraph was included in the bill which had a taint of illegality, or which was contrary to existing law, that paragraph can be perfected or corrected by an amendment; but if a further paragraph proposed as an amendment carries a further illegality, affecting the whole paragraph, it is not in order.

It appears to the Chair that that is pretty sound doctrine. What has been bothering the Chair is whether the Tribble amendment does not go beyond the amendment made in order by special rule and introduce a new and further encroachment upon existing law. Yet the Chair recognizes and realizes that in the main both amendments are intended to accomplish practically the same purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet concluded. The Chair would like to have had ample time to consult precedents, but the Chair has thought upon it, and inasmuch as it is necessary to rule now, the Chair is going to overrule the point of order.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] has the right to discuss his amendment for five minutes if he desires to do so. If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a request. When the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] had the floor a while ago, his time expired when he was making what was to me a very illuminating statement. I do not know about the effect of this legislation upon cotton, and I would like to vote, of course, to benefit the cotton producers; and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas be given five minutes more in which to continue the statement he was making when his time expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes remain.

Mr. LEVER. I imagine a goodly number of gentlemen here would like to discuss the matter. I have no objection to the gentleman from Arkansas going on, because he always makes a good statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the Chair did not submit any proposition. I could not hear what the conversation was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did submit the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] be permitted to proceed for five minutes, and then later the Chair inquired if there was objection to that request.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair asked if there was any objection, but I did not hear what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois objects——

Mr. MANN. I did not know what the proposition was, and I do not know yet. I knew there was a conversation going on there, but I did not know what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] may have five minutes more time. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how much time is there left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Is that applied for?

The CHAIRMAN. Not to the Chair.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the request is that this five minutes shall be in addition to the time fixed by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it comes out of the general time. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] for his kindness in this matter.

I was discussing with gentlemen on this side of the House the possibilities of this bill with reference to the man who grows cotton. Now, as I said before, the cotton crop is gathered principally in the months of September, October, and November, and three-fourths of the crop is sold in these months. We sell it in this way: A man picks his cotton and carries it to the gin, and there it is ginned and wrapped in bales of approximately 500 pounds each, and the man who owns it usually owes the merchant in that town all that it is worth. He delivers to the merchant his gin ticket, as it is called, which entitles the merchant to that bale of cotton, and the price is fixed usually by the prevailing price in the market on that day, less the price of transportation and commission for selling. For instance, if cotton is worth 12 cents on the market in Memphis, the price of that grade of cotton at my home town, 60 miles from Memphis, would be about 11¼ cents. It varies from day to day. Now, there are two classes of people who buy cotton. There is the man who buys the spot cotton, who actually intends to manufacture the cotton, the spinner; and there is the man why buys the future cotton, who says, "I will buy a thousand bales of cotton, March, April, or May." The future-cotton price, of course, is governed not by the conditions existing at the time he buys, but by the conditions existing at the time the cotton is to be delivered—which is never to be delivered, as a matter of fact.

The man who has spot cotton must sell according to the demand. He has a product, and he must sell it from day to day. There is but one legitimate source to which he may look for a buyer, and that is the spinner. Heretofore the spinner has gone eagerly into the market while the cotton was in the hands of the grower, because the history of cotton is that ordinarily when it is out of the hands of the grower it has gone up. The spinners have gone actively into the markets at every cotton-selling center in the United States, and you will find hundreds and hundreds of buyers of cotton, not only from all the spinners in America but from the spinners all over the world. That cotton is sampled in large allotments, and these buyers from day to day buy that cotton. But under the provisions of this bill they do not have to do that. Usually the man on the cotton exchange is what we call a bear. He wants the price of cotton to be as low as possible. The spinner agrees with him. Under this bill they can make a binding contract, and all the dealer on the cotton exchange has to do is to say to the spinner, "Well, there will be for sale to-day on this market a hundred thousand bales of cotton. You want 20,000 bales. You do not need it until next summer. Now, you stay out of that market and I will agree that I will deliver to you all the cotton you want next August—that is, 20,000 bales of cotton—at a certain fixed price." The spinner has nothing to lose, because under the provisions of this bill, if the exchange man does not deliver to him that particular cotton, he can collect the commercial difference and go into the market and buy that many bales of cotton. He has nothing to lose, and therefore he will readily agree to do it. Here are a hundred thousand bales of cotton, owned by poor people who can not carry it. The spinner is the only man to buy it. He will not buy it, because it costs $60 or $70 or $80 a bale to carry spot cotton, and it only costs a dollar a bale to carry future cotton. He therefore stays out of the market, and the market sags, and the man who grew the cotton and put 12 months of toil into it has no one to buy it. He has to sell, and therefore it drops in price from day to day, as it has done every day this year.

Pass this bill and every grower of cotton must suffer and every spinner will profit, and the gamblers will continue to rob the producer of the fruits of his toil. Pass it and little children must grow up in poverty and in want. Pass the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and millions of the toiling poor of our Southland will bless you for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. I am glad the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is interested in this proposition. I desire to call to his attention some of the facts involved in it.

The amendment that I have offered has not been hastily drawn. It has not been crudely drawn, but it has been drawn by the greatest experts that the Secretary of Agriculture could assemble in the Department of Agriculture. Every line of this bill has undergone the closest scrutiny of the best experts that the Government has been able to put its hands on.

Now, this law was in effect for more than 12 months, and what happened? Let us see if the bill works out in the interest of the farmer or not. Immediately after the opening of the European war the exchanges closed and remained closed until November 16 following. The cotton-futures act became effective February 18 following that. When the exchanges opened they opened with two contracts in force—one the old contract, under which they had operated for years, and against which this legislation was directed, and a new contract, drawn in anticipation of the law which was to go into effect on the 18th of February. I would like these farmers to give me their attention for a moment. I hold in my hand a comparison of the relative value of these two contracts during the period when they were both in use. Without going into the details, because that would cover several pages of the RECORD, you will find that the contract drawn in compliance with the provisions of this amendment which I have offered sold each day from 20 to 40 points higher than the old contract. [Applause.]

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield. Translating that into dollars and cents it means from $1 to $2 a bale on each bale of cotton in the South, or from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000 more to the southern farmer. That is what it means.

Now, let me call the attention of my friend to another thing. On the 13th of September last the cotton-futures act was held unconstitutional by District Judge Hough, of the southern district of New York. We should expect that if this law had not been a good thing, if it had depressed the market, when that decision was announced the price of cotton would promptly have gone up. Would not that be what you would expect if this bill had not been doing what I claim for it? But what happened? I read from the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of the morning after the law was declared unconstitutional:

It was a day of surprises Prices advanced early 30 points or more and then two things hit the market hard, so hard that it came down to something like the traditional thud. These two blows were first the failure to predict killing frost over last night, none having occurred over the holiday, and, second, and hardest of all, the fact that Judge Hough, of the United States district court, had handed down a decision declaring the Lever bill unconstitutional on the ground that it was a violation of the Constitution of the United States, as the measure originated in the United States Senate and not in the House.

I quote again:

EXIT LEVER BILL?

Looks like it from a decision in the United States district court, if upheld by the Supreme Court. It caused heavy selling and a rapid reaction after a rise of 30 to 33 points.

Again I quote:

The rumor that the Lever bill had been declared unconstitutional caused selling around 12 o'clock, and January fell to 12.70 cents after being up to 13.08 cents on the early trading.

The fact is that while the market that morning had been a bull market, having gone up 33 points, or a little more than $1.50 a bale, within 10 minutes after the rumor reached the New York Exchange membership that this law had been declared unconstitutional the market broke 30 points, or $1.50 a bale, representing a loss of $22,500,000 to the cotton farmers of this country.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Inasmuch as the committee allowed the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] five minutes additional, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. How much time will remain?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. MANN. I shall object unless I have some time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, it is always with deep regret that I am forced to differ with the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, the chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture, but on this issue I must disagree with him.

I have ever been opposed to the measure which he to-day advocates. I am a cotton grower myself, and I have the honor of representing a large agricultural cotton-growing district, and the second great cotton-growing State in this Union.

The Scott bill passed this House almost unanimously twice, and I wish to say that I believe I speak the sentiments of the cotton growers of the great State of Georgia when I say that they approve the Scott bill. I went over the State and discussed this proposition with them, and when the Scott bill was presented they showed their almost united approval.

I sincerely hope that this substitute will be adopted. I believe it should be, because it is in the interest of the cotton growers of this country. Mr. Chairman, the cotton growers of this country feel that their great crop of cotton should not be priced by two great cities—one New York and the other New Orleans. The cotton growers of this great country are willing to comply with the calls of supply and demand.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman know that six presidents of the Farmers' Union have taken the position that this law ought to be reenacted at the earliest date, with the exception of section 11?

Mr. HUGHES. Anything that the gentleman from South Carolina states is the truth. They may favor it; but I tell you, my countrymen, that the majority of the cotton growers of this country do not favor it. They feel that they have been swindled and robbed by these speculators in their cotton. They expect the representatives of the cotton growers to defend their interests on the floor of this House. Now, I acknowledge that there are some good points in the gentleman's bill. I agree to that; but there is enough that is injurious and wrong and detrimental to the farmers of the country to more than offset the good that there is in it, and because of that I shall vote against it.

It has been said, and perhaps it is true, that the bill presented by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina is a far better measure than the plan upon which these exchanges are to-day operating. That may be true, Mr. Chairman, but whereas that may be true we are willing to kill the better of the two so as to be sure to kill the worse at the proper time, and we propose to fight this to the finish and ultimately give the cotton growers of this country the right to control the price of their cotton. [Applause.]

Now, how can they do this? It has been said from the very fact that the cotton exchange in New York was closed in 1914, when war was declared in Europe, there was and could be no sale for cotton. The gentlemen who make that statement are mistaken. I was in Georgia at that time, and before the New York Exchange opened and saw fit to give the farmers an opportunity to sell the great money crop of this country cotton was selling at my own little town for 6 and 7 cents a pound. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember whether I objected to the extension of remarks of the gentleman from Georgia two years ago or not. I objected to a lot of extensions at that time on this bill in order to show the House that there was a very important bill, with only 20 minutes of debate on a side. Now we have 30 minutes' debate in reference to this bill, supposedly on a side. It is a very important proposition. At that time the bill passed 4 to 1 in favor of it, with less than 25 per cent of the membership of the House present.

Now what is the situation? The Committee on Agriculture has reported a bill, which is before the House, H. R. 11861. Members have had an opportunity to examine that bill. Here is a rule which makes the provisions of that bill in order as an amendment to the Agricultural bill. Not many of us know very much about that bill, although it was enacted into law, with the exception of a very small portion of it. But now, during the middle of an hour's debate, when more than half of the time has expired, an amendment is proposed to be inserted containing something entirely different. Gentlemen say that the original proposition will be detrimental to the farmers raising cotton, and other gentlemen say that the substitute is absolutely essential. Why, nobody has had any opportunity to examine it. There is no consideration of it. This is no proper method of legislation. I do not know how meritorious the substitute may be; I can not vote for it. I do not know what it is, and I am not willing to take legislation on the theory of a pig in the poke.

I do know what the Lever bill is, reported from the committee. I am willing to vote for that, although I am not enthusiastic about it. I do not think we ought to be asked to vote in the House for a matter which gentlemen say is so very important without knowing anything about it. The Lever bill is now the law, depending on whether it is constitutional or not.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No. I voted against the rule and the gentleman from Tennessee voted for it.

Mr. SIMS. The Scott bill passed the House twice, as the gentleman will remember.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it did or not. I will take the gentleman's word for it. I probably did not vote for it, although I do not remember. The Lever bill is brought in here with an hour's debate and seeks to enact into law that which Congress tried to enact, but missed it by a technicality. We ought not to be expected to vote for a proposition of as great importance as this, seeking to abolish the present method of dealing in one of the great products of the country, without any knowledge of it whatever. I can not do it. [Applause.]

Mr. TRIBBLE and Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, haven't I got five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not five minutes, unless he gets it now.

Mr. HEFLIN. How much time is there left?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes; and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] having proposed an amendment, and the committee consenting to his being recognized at that time, the Chair feels that he is entitled to speak.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the gentleman from Georgia has already addressed the committee. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes that, and that is the embarrassing fact; but the gentleman from Georgia having proposed an amendment, it occurs to the Chair that he ought to have the time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HEFLIN. He has already spoken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama, then, is recognized—a member of the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer an amendment to this bill, and I send it to the desk and ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "corporations," add the words: "who produce or deal in actual cotton; that contracts on the cotton exchanges of the United States for the future delivery of cotton shall be confined and limited to individuals, corporations, or associations who produce, buy spot cotton, and consume cotton in manufacturing establishments, or persons who purchase hedge sales made by producers, spot buyers, and spinners."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill regulating cotton exchanges as reported by the committee—the Lever bill—is already the law, with the exception of the changes made in section 11. It has some very valuable provisions in it, provisions not contained in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. His substitute passed the House a few years ago. It is the old Scott bill. I supported that bill when it was up for consideration then. But that bill could not pass the Senate then and it could not pass that body now. This bill has four or five provisions in it that are not contained in the Scott bill, offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Georgia, and one of them is that whenever a dispute arises on the exchange as to the grade of cotton tendered on the contract, either one of the parties can call upon the Secretary of Agriculture to decide that question. Under the old law there was no appeal from the decision of the exchange. When its committee said that the grade was this or that there was no appeal from that decision, and that situation alone cost the cotton producers millions of dollars every year. I suggested the provision which gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to decide the grade when called on to do so. The committee on fixed differences on the exchanges used to determine what the difference was between good ordinary and strict middling, and there was no appeal from that, and that committee could change in one night the difference that it had announced just a day or two before, and injure one of the parties to the contract by its arbitrary action. [Applause.] That committee on fixed differences is put out of business by the provisions of this measure, and the commercial difference between the grades is now provided for in this bill, and the Secretary of Agriculture is required to find out what the commercial difference is, by going to five spot markets in the South. [Applause.] I submit to gentlemen that those two provisions alone are sufficient to warrant the support of a measure of this sort rather than a return to the old system. I take pride in the fact that I suggested that the commercial difference should be required, as the law now provides.

Not only that, but this bill requires the exchanges to adopt the nine grades of cotton standards fixed by the Congress and now in use in the Agricultural Department and in the exchanges in the United States. The Scott bill, offered here as a substitute, contains none of these provisions, and I submit to my friends from the cotton-growing States that no bill should be seriously considered with these important provisions left out.

The Scott bill can not pass here and it could not pass the Senate. Now, then, if the Supreme Court should declare the present law unconstitutional, why the exchanges would return to the operation permitted under the old law when dog-tailed cotton and fixed differences ruled the price. If the cotton exchanges can be properly regulated, and I believe that they can, so that they will really help to distribute the crop and become a legitimate institution, serving buyer and seller both in the matter of aiding the law of supply and demand, well and good. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] wants to kill them outright. I will say frankly that if I had my way I would establish spot-cotton exchanges all over the South. I think that we will have them some day, but until we do get them established we must not destroy any legitimate agency that deals in cotton. If we adopt my amendment, it will confine these dealings in cotton futures to the producer, to the spot buyer and the spinner and those who buy their hedge sales. These are the persons to whom dealing in futures should be confined. The producer is making, we will say, 20 bales of cotton. Let him go upon the exchange and sell 20 bales if he wishes. The merchant buys 20 bales, and he says, "I do not know what the price will be in two weeks or a month from now and I will go on the exchange and hedge." He ought to have the right to do that. The spinner buys 50,000 bales, and he says, "I ought to be permitted to hedge." Let him go on the exchange, and let him use the exchange to help him carry any loss that may come in fluctuation in the price. The spinner contracts to sell 5,000,000 yards of cloth, and buys real cotton with which to make the cloth. He does not want the price to go down after he buys, then let him go on the exchange and protect himself if he so desires. Under my amendment all contracts have behind them real cotton. It will confine speculation, in the main, to hedging transactions, and that is the object of it. If we make 10,000,000 bales and 10,000,000 bales are sold for hedging purposes, only 20,000,000 bales are handled in both spot sales and future contracts. Now, many times that amount is sold in a single season. My amendment will confine contracts to actual cotton and the hedge sales that they represent. You can keep track then of all the contracts and know exactly what is going on in the cotton business. Vote for my amendment and the exchanges can be made useful and serviceable to all persons who are really interested in the cotton business. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman intends to take all my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not any time more than any other Member of the House.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman stated before this argument began that "the gentleman from Georgia was entitled to five minutes," and I relied implicitly upon his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Georgia was recognized, but took his seat and did not occupy the five minutes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did not so understand it. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will also remind the gentleman from Georgia that he was very anxious to recognize him.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the time was fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent——

Mr. LEVER. Just one minute. I reserve the right to object. If we extend it to the gentleman from Georgia, we are bound in all courtesy to the gentleman from Texas who was here a moment ago and asking for time. With the distinct understanding that I will object to any further——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, how much time is there remaining under the one-hour arrangement?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can not the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] get through in two minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The Committee of the Whole can not change a rule adopted by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it could if by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. The House fixed the time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to bring to the attention of the gentlemen from the South particularly in these two minutes the attitude of the farmers of the South as that attitude is expressed in certain resolutions which have come to me. I read from the resolutions signed by the marketing committee of the farmers' union, composed of presidents of the following State farmers' unions and representing the national organization:

O. P. Ford, president and member of the marketing committee, Farmers' Union of Alabama, McFall, Ala.

J. L. Shepard, president and member of the marketing committee, Farmers' Union of Florida, Greensborough, Fla.

O. W. Taylor, president and member of the marketing committee, Farmers' Union of Oklahoma, Roff, Okla.

I. N. McCollister, president and member of the marketing committee, Farmers' Union of Louisiana, Many, La.

H. N. Pope, president and member of the marketing committee, Farmers' Union of Texas, Fort Worth, Tex.

I can not read all of these resolutions, but they say this:

We most respectfully urge that you immediately reenact into law the Smith-Lever bill, omitting section 11 and section 11a, thereby saving an untold amount to the producers of this country.

In another resolution of this same marketing committee it is said:

Resolved further, That attention be called to the fact that the Alabama law is an indorsement of the act of Congress known as the United States cotton-futures act, which act is the result of years of study in the interest of the producers of cotton by the best brains and the ablest men representing the Southern States in both branches of Congress; further, that its practical trial during the past year has demonstrated that (excepting section 11, which restricted business with foreign countries) it meets the needs of the cotton growers, eliminating evils which have heretofore been complained of.

Furthermore, I desire to read from a letter from Mr. McCollister, president and member of this farmers' union marketing committee, addressed to me under date of March 10, as follows:

We take the view that the Smith-Lever bill as originally drawn, with the exception of section 11 and section 11a——

Mr. ASWELL. What have you done with those?

Mr. LEVER. They are in the bill. I will be frank with the gentleman. I disagree with that view of it. It says further:

If eliminated, is the most constructive legislative act that has ever been placed on the statute books of our country.

This is what the representatives of the farmers are saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask that the gentleman have the privilege of an extension of five minutes for the purpose of addressing the House?

Mr. LEVER. I object to the privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMS.

Page 3, line 8, after the word "tax," insert "not less than 10 cents per bale."

Page 10, line 14, after the word "tax," insert "not less than 10 cents per bale."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 2, offered by Mr. BENNET: Page 11, line 20, strike out all of section 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BENNET. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 56.

Mr. BENNET. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. LEVER and Mr. BENNET to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3, offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 20, line 6, after the word "receipts," add the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall report to Congress before July 1, 1916, the names of all persons appointed by him to carry out the purposes of this act, the dates of such appointments, the purposes for which such persons were appointed, and the salaries paid to them."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4, offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5, offered by Mr. CARAWAY: Page 4, line 20, after the word "than," strike out "seven-eighths" and insert "three-fourths."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. LEVER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report No. 7.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report No. 7. The amendment No. 6 is in the nature of a substitute, and we will perfect the text of the original bill first by voting on amendment No. 7.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the Heflin amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7, offered by Mr. HEFLIN: Page 2, line 9, after the word "corporations," add the words "who produce or deal in actual cotton. That contracts on the cotton exchanges in the United States for the future delivery of cotton shall be confined and limited to individuals, corporations, or associations who produce, buy spot cotton, and consume cotton in manufacturing establishments, or persons who purchase the hedge sales made by producers, spot buyers, and spinners."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. HEFLIN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the committee desire to have this amendment reported again?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that instead of reading the amendment, I may have two minutes in which to explain it.

Mr. MANN. It has already been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not absolutely necessary to read the amendment. It has been read once. It could, in fact, only be read by unanimous consent. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 2, line 1, by striking out the word "act" and inserting the word "part."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think that change will have the effect the gentleman thinks it will have.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate is exhausted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer amendment No. 2, to be inserted immediately following the amendment that has just been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

"AMENDMENT No. 2.

"Part B.

"That this part, to be known as the United States grain-grades act, be, and is hereby, enacted, to read and be effective hereafter, as follows:

"'That this act shall be known by the short title of the "United States grain-grades act."

In promulgating the standards, or any alteration or modification of such standards, the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same shall become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

"'SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

"'SEC. 4. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe, or in any way refer to, any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

"'SEC. 5. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved, and to the inspector thereof if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade, or has been sold or offered for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings.

"'SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain which has been sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grade, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary and to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. In every such case the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge and assess, and cause to be collected, a reasonable fee in amount to be fixed by him, which fee shall be refunded if the appeal is sustained. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings.

"'SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. No person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain for interstate or foreign commerce which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the official grades of the United States, unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That in any State which has State grain inspection established by law, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in issuing licenses, give preference to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given, the Secretary shall determine that any inspector has been found to be incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly or by any other standard than is authorized under this act, or has issued any false certificate of inspection, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has knowingly violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder. Pending investigation the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"'SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"'SEC. 9. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of section 4 or 7 of this act, or any inspector licensed under this act who shall knowingly or carelessly inspect or grade improperly any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or shall knowingly or carelessly give any false certificate of inspection or grade, or shall accept money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, and any person who shall improperly influence or attempt to improperly influence any such inspector in the performance of his duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 11. That the word "person" wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person.

"'SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rent and the employment of such persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere.'"

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the committee, I would like to present a request for unanimous consent.

This rule provides for one hour and a half of debate. I ask unanimous consent that that one hour and a half debate under the five-minute rule be divided into two parts, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who is a member of the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks unanimous consent that the hour and a half of debate permitted on this amendment under the rule be divided into equal parts, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if the gentleman from Minnesota is in favor of the amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the gentleman that I did not vote to report this particular amendment out of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to the gentleman from Minnesota apportioning the time if he is opposed to the amendment. I am opposed to the amendment and desire some time to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair will be very glad to have such an agreement made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit that if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and the gentleman from Minnesota

[Mr. ANDERSON] are both in favor of the amendment they ought not to apportion the time.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not care who may control the time on the other side. If it is agreeable that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] shall control the time, that is satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ANDERSON. I will yield some time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to know whether the gentleman who will control the time is opposed to the amendment or not. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not care anything about controlling the time on this side of the House. If gentlemen who oppose the amendment desire to control the time or make any other arrangement than that suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], I shall not object.

Mr. BORLAND. I suggest that if the Republican member of the committee [Mr. ANDERSON] controls the time on his side he will probably be willing to yield to gentlemen on the Republican side, whichever position they take on the amendment, and I am sure the gentleman on this side [Mr. RUBEY] will yield to any Democrat.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am opposed to the amendment. I am satisfied to have any member control the time who is opposed to the amendment. Otherwise I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. RUBEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time be controlled one half by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] who is opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks unanimous consent that the time allotted for debate on this amendment be controlled one half by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is the proper way to apportion the time, and I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] does not desire recognition now, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to offer the amendment which he sends to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a moment, I would like to make one further proposition, and that is, that the time be controlled one half by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have no desire whatever to control the time. It seems to me that always in matters of this kind each side should be represented in the apportionment of the time, and that is all I desire. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] are of one mind, the minority will have no representation in the distribution of the time. All I ask is the opportunity to have read in my time what will take about 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will suspend. Without objection, the Chair will submit the new proposition, that the time on this amendment be controlled one half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted in favor of the bill when it passed the House the last time. I think those opposed to the amendment ought to control the time, and unless that can be arranged I shall object.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 14, after the word "elsewhere," insert the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall report to Congress before July 1, 1916, the names of all persons appointed by him to carry out the purposes of this act, the duties of such appointments, the purpose for which such persons were appointed, and the salaries paid to them."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LEVER. I object.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to all extensions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well, Mr. Chairman; I shall read as much as I can from the memorial of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia with reference to this bill. I am going to skip a little, because I can not get it all in. The memorial was forwarded to me by Louis G. Graff, president of the exchange, and I regret it can not now be presented in full. I read:

The export trade of this country is the best friend of the farmer of the United States, and should it be injured, harassed, or taken away we hesitate to forecast the dire consequences to the producer of the crops. The enormous crops raised in this country leave a large available surplus annually for export, which if not disposed of would mean ruinously low prices to our farmers, and we can not expect to secure and hold this foreign trade if our laws regarding the grading of grain are such as to hamper and destroy fair competition with other exporting countries.

The proposed grain-grades act, H. R. 10405, should it become a law would be especially detrimental to the export trade and the farmer inasmuch as its provisions would prevent from competing upon equal terms with our competitors, such as the Dominion of Canada, Argentina, and other exporting countries, these competitors not being amenable to our laws. As a concrete example of this, permit us to say that the United States Department of Agriculture has adopted a standard for grading corn requiring No. 2 corn to contain not more than 15½ per cent moisture, No. 3 corn not more than 17½ per cent moisture; and No. 4 corn not more than 19½ per cent moisture, etc. In the western markets the settling price between No. 2 and No. 3 corn is 2 cents a bushel, and between No. 2 and No. 4 corn as much as 6 cents a bushel. At the present time all of the No. 3 corn can be used for export without docking the farmer or country shipper, but the Department of Agriculture, should the grain-grades act become a law, would prohibit us from doing so, and would therefore legislate in favor of the foreign buyer as well as our competitor and against the producer in this country. Very little corn, as you may know, has as little moisture as 15½ per cent in its natural state or condition, and it is safe to say 2,500,000,000 bushels of the crop will contain a moisture above 15½ per cent. As all corn containing one-quarter or even an eighth higher percentage of moisture would necessarily, under the department's proposed moisture tests, be forced to take the grade of No. 3 corn, the Agricultural Department would thereby reduce the value of this year's crop to the farmers of the country 2 cents a bushel, which, as above stated, is the settling price between the grades of No. 2 and No. 3 corn, or $50,000,000; this is, of course, assuming it would all grade No. 3 corn, but we know a great deal of it would be below No. 3, and as No. 4 is docked 4 to 6 cents a bushel, it would be a safe estimate to say the loss to the farmer by reason of the proposed grades would be 3 cents a bushel, or $75,000,000.

Furthermore, our Philadelphia merchants, together with the efficient grain-inspection department of this exchange, by reason of their knowledge and experience in blending wheats, are producing an article which the millers of England, France, and Holland have shown a desire to purchase in preference to those of western markets. It is only within the past two years that the great State of Montana has produced wheat in large enough quantities to become a factor in the export trade. During that time the production of wheat in that State has grown from an unknown quantity to that of 33,000,000 bushels, a matter of great importance to the State, the railroads, the steamship lines, and the export merchants of the entire country. Under our present export grading system we are permitted to bring that wheat from Montana to Philadelphia, and by blending it with wheat from other sections of the United States, are enabled to give to our foreign merchant millers a desired milling article, of which we have shipped millions of bushels within the past year. Under the terms of the grain-grades act this will be impossible.

Another important factor that should be considered in connection with the proposed grain-grades act is that grain graded at western primary points frequently deteriorates in quality while in transit between the western shipping point and the eastern terminus. If the western exporter has sold such grain to the foreign buyer on western certificates of inspection, the question arises as to the attitude of the Government in case the grain arrives at the seaboard out of condition. Will it stop the shipment and compel the exporter to put the grain in good condition, or will the shipment be permitted to continue on its way across the ocean regardless of its condition? It would seem there is a responsibility on the part of the Government in such exigencies after the proposed grain-grades act should be enacted into law. If the Department of Agriculture, under the grain-grades act, permits deteriorated grain as above referred to to be shipped on the western certificate of inspection, this would be a serious discrimination against the seaboard exporter. Then again, if this act becomes a law the exporters will of necessity be forced to establish their own brands, which would require every receiver, shipper, and exporter to have their grain stored in separate bins so as to preserve the identity of the grain. This would necessitate largely increased storage facilities, for which the storage capacity of our elevators would prove to be decidedly inadequate, resulting in still further congesting the railroads and interfering with general business.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman probably knows that the corn standard has been adopted all over the United States, except in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand the Boston Chamber of Commerce, composed largely of railroad men, are in favor of the bill; but not the Boston grain exporters. I do not know, but the exporters of Philadelphia indicate that the farmer may be deluded by the passage of this bill; that when the crops are in and the grade is a little low there will be no opportunity for the farmer to market his crop, because the standard fixed by the United States Government will be inflexible and his crop will go to waste. He may have no opportunity, under certain conditions, to market it. I am sorry that I have not the time to read the whole of this memorial, because it ought to go in the RECORD.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; if I have time.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will not the corn be so classified that it will be permissible to be sold under the standard?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will the farmer do who does not come up to the standard? Sometimes the crop is poor. What will become of the farmer if your standard fixed by law is such that he can not come up to it? The weather and soil may determine that.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman knows what becomes of such crops now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The farmer may be forced to lose his crop; to feed it to the hogs. The farmer will have to pay for some of this Federal supervision, too. You are going to make the farmers raise grain by law. I hope he may be able to do so and still find a market.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request made a moment ago. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] assures me that he withdraws his objection. I renew the request for unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Is there objection?

Mr. HULBERT. Does this relate to the amendment proper?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there is an hour and a half debate on the amendment proper.

Mr. HULBERT. Can the gentleman from Missouri give me two and a half minutes?

Mr. RUBEY. I will yield to the gentleman when the time comes.

Mr. FOCHT. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri, since he has been unwilling to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the men who are to be appointed under this law, why he objected to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RUBEY. I did not object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and his amendment is still pending and will be voted on.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to renew his proposition.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not understand. We have an hour and a half debate on this amendment. Five minutes has already been used by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Now I ask unanimous consent that the remaining time be divided equally between myself, to control one half, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] control the other. That does not apply to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman previously asked that the time be divided between himself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Why has he changed his mind?

Mr. RUBEY. Because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] objected to that.

Mr. FOCHT. Then I object to this.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of page 22, insert the following:

"SEC. 3½. Whenever by reason of climatic or other conditions any large quantity of grain shall be ineligible to grade under the standards fixed pursuant to section 2 the Secretary may establish supplemental or commercial grades for such grain, and such supplemental or commercial grades may be promulgated upon such notice as the Secretary shall deem proper."

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to take care of the vast amount of grain which frequently is of such a character as to make it impossible to bring it under the ordinary grades. Frequently we have wet seasons, and while we may have had a very good crop, a splendid crop, after it is cut and shocked rain may come and make it very moist, so much so that when it goes to the market it can not be graded under the ordinary grades. It is then thrown into what is called "no grade." "No grade" may mean a No. 1 hard wheat, which carries a little more moisture than the rules permit, or it may mean an inferior grade.

The market often shows a spread of 20 to 30 cents per bushel in "no-grade" wheat, and in selling through a commission firm it becomes impossible for the farmer to know whether he is getting a fair price for his grain or not.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. What difference would the gentleman's amendment be, if adopted, from the language written in the bill in line 11 on page 1 and line 2 on page 2? Does not that give precisely what the gentleman is seeking to reach?

Mr. HELGESEN. It does not. This only provides for grades of a quality that can come under the regular standards, but when it goes below the regular standards there is no provision made. In Canada they have the same conditions and they recognize it in this way. In section 87 of their law they provide:

Should the climatic or other conditions result in the production of a considerable proportion of grain, other than oats, not capable of being included in the classification provided for in this act, the grain standards board for the division shall be convened for the selection of commercial grades and samples whenever the chairman of the said board is notified by the chief inspector or five members of the said board that such a course is necessary.

2. Inspecting officers shall grade all classes of grain which can not be graded according to this act in accordance with the commercial samples so selected by the board.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Under the Canadian law, when the grade standards are once fixed they can not be modified, and therefore they have the commercial grades of which the gentleman is speaking. Under this proposed law the Secretary of Agriculture is supposed to be given the right to modify the standards whenever he chooses.

Mr. HELGESEN. But the regular grades can be modified only by giving 60 days' notice. The grain may have been cut and it may have been shocked and ready to thrash when the wet season comes along. If you have to thrash it and ship it in a damp condition, the Secretary of Agriculture can not change those grades without a two months' notice, and by that time the grain is gone.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Under the commercial grades, of which the gentleman is speaking, in Canada, before they can be established, do not specimens or types have to be established so that they have to be given the purchaser or the seller on demand, and it is not really selling under type after all?

Mr. HELGESEN. No; it is selling under commercial grades not included in the regular grades.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. In Canada, but before they can establish commercial grades, does not the department have to select a standard and provide that?

Mr. HELGESEN. They have to establish rules, but they do it on a short notice when these conditions require it.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. What difference is that, then, from selling by type or standards under this bill as proposed?

Mr. HELGESEN. In all the western markets anything that does not come up to No. 4 or No. 5 is graded as either rejected or "no grade." If it carries more moisture than is permitted in the regular grades, it is graded as "no grade," which is absolutely meaningless to the man who sells because it may be "no grade," although No. 1 hard wheat simply because it carries a small amount of moisture more than the rules permit. If this amendment is adopted, rules could be established that a damp No. 2 should be graded as commercial No. 2, indicating that it would be No. 2 if dry, but was too damp to be graded as regular No. 2.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MANN. That is with the understanding that we will try to find some other day soon?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, let us fix it now.

Mr. KITCHIN. We will fix some other day for that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the business that is in order next Monday under the rule be dispensed with on that day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 29, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come to know ourselves only in the light of the revelation that Thou dost give to us of Thyself. All our devotion to mankind, our interest in man in his social and organized life, arises out of his kinship with God. Because we are so near to Thee and are the objects of Thy care we are the objects of the care of each other. A day in Thy court is better than a thousand. The impression that we get out of the vision of Thy face brings to us a realization of the importance of every event of life. We pray that we may learn out of our vision of God the real meaning and purpose of the life we are living and consecrate our lives to the advancement of man's spiritual and eternal interests. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, April 27, 1916, was read and approved.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, certain data regarding reclamation projects. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed in full in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 26, 1916.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: An attested copy of Senate resolution of April 1, 1916, has been received, requesting certain data regarding reclamation projects.

These data are given in the inclosed table and the location of the projects is shown on the accompanying map.

The resolution requests the number of projects completed and under way. In this connection it is well to note the fallacies involved in the common use of these terms as applicable to large reclamation projects. Irrigation may begin with the completion of the first portion of the canal system, while the construction of the remainder may extend over a number of years and yet keep well in advance of settlement and development of the irrigable lands. A better knowledge of the water supply gained during those years may warrant additions to the canal system or the development of the community may advance values so as to justify further expense to increase or conserve the water supply, permitting additional land to be served.

Thus in many cases the project as a whole becomes a growing thing and is not to be compared to a single definite piece of construction, such as a dam or office building, but is more like a town or railroad system that in a sense may be regarded as never complete. The transfer of the works to the water users does not alter this condition, but merely shifts the responsibilities to new hands.

On many of the projects work was first undertaken on a definite unit, having in mind some broader conception of the ultimate possibilities. Each step in the development, through the knowledge and experience gained, affects this conception of what the project may finally be and this suffers radical changes with the surveys of additional canal lines and irrigable areas and the accumulation of information regarding water supply, soil quality, and other factors.

There is also constant demand in connection with most of the projects to take in additional lands or units not previously regarded as part of the plan. Thus a project may be regarded as almost complete on one day, while on the next some extension may be adopted involving one or more seasons' additional work.

In the attached table an effort has been made to express the degree of completion of the various projects in percentage, basing this on the present conception of the projects and showing the ratio of present expenditures to estimated total cost. As indicated above, such figures are subject to many changes, and a report made some years ago would have shown complete, or nearly so, projects now listed as lacking 20 or 30 per cent of completion.

In the figures as given of 26 projects 6 are shown as complete, or practically so, and 20 in varying degrees of completion, from 35 to 95 per cent. This counts separately the two large divisions and separate areas of land irrigable from the Yakima project, Washington. This project involves in addition a series of reservoirs, forming a storage unit that is now estimated as about 35 per cent complete. The development of the storage system is timed according to requirements, depending on the rapidity with which the irrigated lands are brought into cultivation.

In the last six columns of the table is shown the present status as to ownership of the lands ultimately irrigable from each project; that is, when completed as now planned. The term "private land" is here used in the sense adopted in the statistics and publications of the Reclamation Service, i. e., it comprises lands to which title has passed from the United States and lands on which entry has been made or other right initiated prior to withdrawal for the reclamation project, eliminating the lands from the effect of such withdrawal and making them subject to the reclamation law only at the option of the entrymen or holders. Thus the figures for private land include considerable areas upon which entries have been made, but for which patent has not issued, and to which title therefore remains in the United States.

The data brought together in the attached table will be found in more detail in the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Reclamation Service rendered to Congress in accordance with section 2 of the reclamation act (32 Stat., 388).

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Data regarding reclamation projects called for by Senate resolution 157.

RURAL CREDITS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask that the unfinished business, Senate bill 2986, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will permit us to go on with the calendar for a short time. There are certain bills which have been on the calendar during the entire session. There is one in particular, the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, which ought to be disposed of. As the Senator from New Hampshire knows, I do not wish to delay the rural-credits bill, but I do hope that some of these matters that are on the calendar will be taken up, considered, and passed. It will take only a short time.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to ask the Senator if it is his impression that there will be a contest over that bill? My impression is that this being Saturday it will probably be very difficult to keep a quorum here, and I did not intend to come to a vote on the rural-credits bill, but to proceed with it as far as we may without differences of opinion, and then if it is evident that we can not keep a quorum to adjourn. However, early next week, on Monday or Tuesday, I will be perfectly willing to go on with the calendar. I do not think we will make progress on account of other matters if we undertake to do it to-day.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to take up the entire morning hour on any particular bill, and if it should so happen that there is objection to the bill which I have named, the stock-raising homestead bill, of course I would not ask to have it pressed to a vote this morning. I do not know that there is any opposition to the bill or that there will be any lengthy discussion on it. It ought to be passed. The people in the western country demand that some legislation of this kind be had, and we have no right to defer such matters unnecessarily.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is merely on the ground, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota, that we probably can not make progress with controverted bills that I can not consent to that this morning. If the Senator would like to press the bill long enough to ascertain whether it is to be objected to, I will not object to that course. At this time, however, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has given notice that he would address the Senate on the rural-credits bill, and pending some determination of the Senator from North Dakota, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WALSH. I wish to state that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is absent from the Senate by reason of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART]. I also desire to announce the absence on official business of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and also the unavoidable absence on account of illness of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, this is one of the most important bills ever presented to Congress for consideration. It meets the demand of more people, perhaps, than any other bill we could pass. This legislation has been more often promised and longer delayed than any other. The farmer is the most numerous and most essential class of our citizens, and yet he has been the most neglected when it comes to legislation for his benefit. At the last census our rural population was 49,348,883, more than one-half the entire population of the Union. The farmer produces more of the necessities of life, pays more taxes and gets less benefits from it than any other class of citizens.

Without the indomitable courage, unceasing toil, and proverbial grit, and "stick-to-itiveness" of the farmer, Kansas would still be indicated on the map as the "Great American Desert." The farmer has made Kansas one of the greatest, if not the greatest, agricultural State in the Union. He has converted a desert into a veritable garden. In the combined production of wheat and corn for the last decade Kansas has led all of the States of the Union. Kansas coins wealth from farm products and live stock at the rate of over $600,000,000 every year. In 1915 these items aggregated in value $652,217,081, while our manufacturing products amounted to only about one-half this sum, or $325,000,000. In 1910 there were 177,841 farms in Kansas, of which 49,249 were mortgaged.

At the last census, in 1910, there were 6,361,502 farms in the United States, containing 878,798,000 acres, somewhat less than one-half the total land area of the country, of which 54.4 per cent was improved land, and in all, represented a total value of $34,801,125,697. At that time there were 3,948,722 farms operated by their owners, of which number 111,108 were in Kansas. In 1890 there were only 886,957 mortgaged farms. These figures gradually increased until the mortgaged farms in 1900 numbered 1,127,749, and in 1910, 1,327,439. In 1890 28.2 per cent of the farms were mortgaged; in 1900, 31 per cent; and in 1910, 33.6 per cent. In 1910 the mortgage debt on the farm homes of the United States amounted to the enormous sum of $1,726,172,851.

The total amount of money in the United States is only about $4,000,000,000, while the loans by the banks and loan companies amount to over $16,000,000,000 annually. We therefore loan each year about four times as much money as we have. This clearly demonstrates the absolute necessity for large financial credit in all business transactions. The banks of the country have furnished the necessary accommodations for ordinary commercial transactions, but there has been no place for the farmer to go to meet his actual requirements. The farmer needs long-time loans at a low rate of interest with amortization payments. This bill is designed to furnish all these requirements in a very simple, businesslike, and efficient manner.

The rates of interest on loans to farmers, including the fees and commissions usually charged, are extremely exorbitant, considering the fact that the farmer furnishes the very best security possible to be given. Productive land is admitted to be the best credit basis in the world. Dr. C. W. Thompson, in his testimony at the hearings in the consideration of this bill, stated that the average rate of interest on farm loans varies from 5.3 per cent in New Hampshire to 10 per cent in certain Southern and Western States. No man can pay 10 per cent interest and last long financially.

Other testimony before the Banking and Currency Committees of the Senate and House in 1914 gave the maximum rate as high as 25 per cent, including fees and commissions. It is therefore clear without argument that any system which can secure for the farmer his necessary loans at a rate as low as 5 or 6 per cent, including all charges, would be a great benefit to him in every section of the United States. This is exactly what the pending bill proposes to do.

The whole system is directly under Government supervision and control, through a nonpartisan Federal farm-loan board. This board is to consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and four members appointed by the President, to be paid from the Public Treasury. Twelve or more banks, called Federal land banks, are to be established, with a capital of not less than $500,000 each, in Federal land-bank districts apportioned with due regard to the farm-loan needs of the country. The Government furnishes this money at the outset, provided it is not subscribed from private sources.

After the land banks are firmly established, ample provision is made for returning the Government subscription; which results simply in the Government loaning its credit in the beginning to encourage and establish the loan business for the farmer. Intimate touch with the borrowers is secured by providing that the land bank shall make loans to farmers through local associations of borrowers, called national farm-loan associations. These local associations are formed by 10 or more farmers who desire to borrow and who are the owners or about to become the owners of productive farm land. They elect a board of directors of not less than five members, who elect a president and vice president, a secretary-treasurer, and a loan committee of three members. The directors and loan committee pass on the value of the security and the character of the borrower. Every borrower takes stock in the farm-loan association to the amount of 5 per cent of the face value of his loan. The association subscribes this amount to the stock of the land bank, thus providing for a capital proportionate to the amount of loans, approximately 1 to 20. This creates a fund to take care of any losses which may occur. Farm-loan associations may be of limited or unlimited liability. In the former, each member is liable for the debts of the association in an amount equal to the face of his subscribed stock; in the latter, a member undertakes unlimited liability for all the debts of the association. All loans are indorsed by the association, of which the borrower is a member. In any loan transaction, therefore, we have a mortgage secured by productive farm land, indorsed by the farm-loan association. The land bank then makes the loan, and the local details of the transaction are attended to by the local association.

To secure a constant flow of a fresh supply of money, when the land bank has $50,000 of mortgages on hand it may then issue a like amount of farm-loan bonds, based on the mortgages as collateral security, to the extent of 20 times its capital stock and surplus. Every Federal land bank guarantees the payment of every bond and coupon issued by every other Federal land bank. The land banks may charge borrowers 1 per cent more for interest than they pay bondholders; that is, if the bonds bear 4 per cent, the bank may charge not to exceed 5 per cent to the farmers who borrow. This margin of 1 per cent is available to the bank for its expense and earnings; but when the system is in actual operation it is expected that this amount will be largely reduced.

The profits go to the local associations in the form of dividends on stock of the land bank, held by the associations, and reach the borrowers in the form of dividends on stock held by them in the associations. Thus the cooperative character of the system is assured to the borrowers and their interest again reduced by the profits received from their investment.

Reasonable and safe restrictions are made on mortgages. Every mortgage deposited as security is on the amortization plan, so that part of the principal is paid every six months or annually, and the amortization period may extend from five to thirty-six years. The money must be borrowed for productive purposes, for the purchase of a farm home, or to liquidate existing indebtedness, and no loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged land, and the borrower must engage in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged. The maximum loan to one borrower is limited to $10,000. Every application is passed upon by the loan committee of the local association. The directors and the loan committee must approve the loan before it is recommended to the land bank. Land bank appraisers are appointed by the Federal farm-loan board for each district, and these appraisers pass upon the applications and reports of the loan committee. Thus, every application passes through the hands of the local loan committee, the local board of directors, the land bank appraisers, and the land bank directors, which should make perfectly safe security for any bonds which may be issued on the mortgages as collateral. Bonds thus secured and indorsed by all of the twelve or more land banks should find a ready market at a low rate of interest. These bonds are made more attractive by being exempt, together with the mortgages which secure them, from all Federal, State, and local taxation. This makes the system absolutely safe, and at the same time gives to the farmer every reasonable opportunity to pay his debt and save his home without scarcely knowing that he has had a mortgage on it.

Provision is also made for the organization of privately owned joint-stock land banks of not less than $250,000 capital, the stockholders in such banks assuming double liability. They are permitted to make loans and to issue farm-loan bonds under the supervision of the farm-loan board. These joint-stock land banks where established will perform the same functions as are performed by the National Farm Loan Association and the Federal land banks.

The principal objection urged against this bill is the claim by its opponents on the Republican side that it is not practicable and will not work. It will be remembered that this is the same objection which was raised by the Republican opposition to the Federal reserve banking system. It was said then that the system would not work because the banks would refuse absolutely to go into it, just as it is said now by the opponents of this bill that the farmers will not become interested in the system. However, no sooner was the Federal reserve banking system established than all the national banks in the country literally tumbled over each other to get into the system first. Many of the banks did not wait to even write, but the moment the bill was passed, wired to the Secretary of the Treasury their desire to enter the system.

I have already received many communications from farmers and people interested in the farm-loan business making inquiry as to this system and expressing a wish to enter into it as soon as this bill becomes a law; and I have no doubt that we will have the same experience with this law that we had with the law establishing the Federal reserve banking system, which is now admitted by all to be the best banking system ever devised in this or any other country. This bill does for the farmer what the Federal reserve system does for the banker and business man. The Federal reserve system supplied the urgent need of the banker and business man, and the rural credit system created by this bill will meet the crying need of the farmer.

Our farms are our great food storehouses, without which our people would starve. Here we find the homes of our most independent, law-abiding citizenship, unequaled for loyalty to government by any other people on earth. While this is true, it is a significant fact that whereas between 1900 and 1910 the total population of the United States increased 21 per cent, the urban population increased 34.8 per cent, and the rural population only 11.2 per cent. This has long been the subject of serious alarm by our people. The rapidly increasing city population, which become consumers, and the rapidly decreasing rural population lessening our producers is admitted to be one of the principal causes for the "high cost of living," which problem we are all endeavoring to solve. As one step toward this solution we must turn the tide of population from the cities to the country, and to do so we must offer the farmer an equal opportunity with the banker and business man. Above all else we must help him to secure his necessary financial credit. The alarm has long been sounded and the demand is imperative. The quicker the remedy is secured and applied the better. I therefore trust that this bill will be speedily passed and another pledge of this administration to the people of the country thereby faithfully fulfilled.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, if no other Senator cares to address the Senate at this time, I ask that the reading of the bill for committee amendments be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, under the head of "Exemption from taxation," line 16, after the word "State," to insert the word "municipal," so as to read:

SEC. 29. That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been trying very hard to bring myself to a position where I could vote for this bill, and with section 29 eliminated I could do so; but it seems to me that it would be very unjust to allow that provision to remain in the bill, as it would have the effect of driving out of business many State banks, and particularly savings banks and trust companies making loans similar to those provided for in this bill.

I am not going into the question as to whether or not the provision of section 29 is constitutional. I am going to speak of the effect it will have upon the banking business of the country, particularly the State banks and the trust companies.

Mr. President, consider, for instance, the bank situation in my own State. The banks are assessed on the basis of three-fourths of their capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits. The rate of assessment in Salt Lake City is a little over 4 per cent; in Provo, the third city of the State, it is a little over 4 per cent; in Ogden and Logan the rate is about the same; and I may say the rate of taxation is practically the same in all the cities of the State. That comes about, Mr. President, because we have so small a portion of lands within the State in individual ownership upon which taxation can be imposed. The Government of the United States owns most of the land within the State, and under the present law and practice will continue to do so, and that being true the State can not secure revenue by taxation from the greater percentage of the landed area of the State. Therefore the taxes in the State are exceedingly high, and now to have the Government establish banks in competition with the State banks, which have to pay nearly 4 per cent taxation upon their capital, surplus, and undivided profits, and to exempt the proposed land banks from taxation of every name and nature, will bring about such a condition that anyone can plainly see what the result will be. It is unfair; it is unjust; and it is not what the people of the United States expect of the Government in establishing these banks. I believe, Mr. President, that section 29 will bring more harm to the people of the State as they own the stock of those banks than it can possibly do good.

I do not see why the framers of the bill want to exempt from taxation the property which the land banks hold within the State. No one can tell how many mortgages are to be foreclosed; no one can tell how much property the land banks will hold under such foreclosures, and is it possible that the States are to be deprived of all revenue from that class of property? It was never intended by the Constitution that they should be so deprived, and if the people of this country understood that that would be the effect of the passage of the bill they would never approve it.

Mr. President, I want to refer now to sections 11 and 13 of the bill. Those are the sections that prescribe the powers of national farm-loan associations; and I want to call the attention of the Senate, by reference to those sections, to just what those powers are, and to what extent section 29 could be carried, and the exemptions that could be made under this bill.

Section 11 says:

That every national farm-loan association shall have power:

First. To indorse, and thereby become liable for the payment of, mortgages taken from its shareholders by the Federal land bank of its district.

Second. To receive from the Federal land bank of its district funds advanced by said land bank, and to deliver said funds to its shareholders on receipt of first mortgages qualified under section 12 of this act.

Section 12 enumerates the conditions under which the first mortgages can be taken.

Third. To acquire and dispose of such property, real or personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business.

In other words, they can buy one of the most costly corners in a city; they can erect upon that corner a building costing $500,000 or more; they can take other property that they may see fit or think is convenient for the transaction of their business; and they can hold that property, and the city in which the property is located, the county in which the property is located, the State in which the property is located, can not impose one cent of taxation upon it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator has fallen into error about that. Nothing that belongs to the association is exempt from taxation except the mortgages—and this loan association will never hold any mortgages—and the farm-loan bonds—it will never hold any farm-loan bonds—and the capital stock; not the real estate nor the other property.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me read section 29 and see if it does not refer to real estate. Section 29 as amended now would read in this way:

That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is expressly exempted.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the third paragraph of section 11 would be exempt from the provisions of section 29, but the fourth paragraph of that section says:

Fourth. Against deposits of current funds, to issue certificates in any amount, bearing interest at not to exceed 4 per cent per annum after six days from date, convertible into farm-loan bonds when presented at the Federal land bank of the district in any multiple of $25. Such deposits, when received, shall be forthwith transmitted to said land bank, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds or in first mortgages as defined by this act. The mortgages thus taken may be hypothecated with the farm-loan registrar of the district against an issuance of farm-loan bonds as provided for in section 22 and section 24 of this act, but such bonds when received either by purchase or for issuance shall not be delivered or issued except in exchange for and upon the presentation for redemption and cancellation of an equal amount of convertible certificates issued by a farm-loan association, any difference under $25 in such exchange being adjusted in cash. When thus redeemed and canceled, such certificates shall be returned to the farm-loan association which issued them.

Mr. President, does the Senator hold that if a piece of property is given as security for a loan, and the bank forecloses the mortgage and holds the property under foreclosure that property then would be taxable?

Mr. HOLLIS. It certainly would be, under the plain provision of the bill which the Senator has just read. It says:

Except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act.

That means exactly foreclosed real estate. If it does not, I will have it amended so that it will. The Senator should bear in mind that the farm-loan association will never own any mortgages. Its members borrow from the land bank. The land bank holds all the mortgages, and if any foreclosure is done it is done by the land bank. Under section 13 it is allowed to foreclose, and under express reference from section 29 all land taken by the loan association for its purposes or by the land bank for its purposes or for the purpose of foreclosure is to be taxed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Would not the association, in order to protect itself if there were a foreclosure, have to buy the property in case it would sell for less than the mortgage?

Mr. HOLLIS. It would be very likely to do so. If so, then it must pay taxes on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that is a doubtful question in my mind.

Mr. HOLLIS. It can not be a matter of doubt, because it is expressed in the plainest possible language.

Mr. SMOOT. I now call the Senator's attention to and the reason why I asked him the question.

Mr. HOLLIS. I shall be delighted to have my attention called to anything which would let that escape, because that would certainly be an error.

Mr. SMOOT. Section 29 exempts from taxation the capital stock, reserve or surplus, and any income derived from the capital stock or the surplus.

Mr. HOLLIS. Any other property is taxable, and that is for this reason: The Government of the United States, in order to help the farmers of Utah, is going to contribute the capital to start these land banks; and it is not reasonable that the Government should furnish half a million dollars capital to a land bank and allow that capital to be taxed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the capital stock of the bank is not assessed, and the surplus is not assessed, and the undivided profits are not assessed—which are virtually a reserve—there will be a great discrimination. Every State in the Union taxes not only the capital stock but the surplus and undivided profits of its banks. It seems to me that if these banks are established to do business in competition with State banks and doing a similar business, and the latter has to pay 4 per cent taxes upon its capital, surplus, and its undivided profits, and the former is entirely exempt from taxation, there is a discrimination there so great that there can be but one result, and that would be to drive out of business the State institutions. An injustice in the imposition of taxes upon the State bank gives the land bank doing business in the same district at least 4 per cent advantage; and I can not see why that should be.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the Senator apply this bill to the farmers of Utah. I am well acquainted with the farmers of Utah. I lived in that great State for nearly a year. There is not a more industrious, sober, thrifty class of people in the world than the farmers of Utah. But the farmers of Utah are charged 9 per cent for the money they borrow on their land. That is their average rate. We have had it investigated, and have the figures from a special investigation which show that the farmers of Utah pay an average interest on their farm mortgages of 8.6 per cent, and then an average annual commission of four-tenths of 1 per cent, making a total of 9 per cent.

The reason is found in just what the distinguished Senator said here on the floor. It is because the taxes on those mortgages are 4 per cent, and the farmers have to pay them. It always works out in that way. The United States Senate would be very foolish to pass an act and spend the Government money to help the farmers of Utah, and then allow the State of Utah to impose a tax of 4 per cent on that capital, that assistance extended to the farmers. We could not give the farmers of Utah cheap money if we allowed the State of Utah to tax these instrumentalities 4 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The State of Utah does not tax mortgages at present, but it does tax the capital, surplus, and undivided profits of the banks. I do not know where the Senator got his figures from as to the amount of interest the farmers are paying on loans in the State of Utah.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is printed in the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I say, I do not know who prepared the figures.

Mr. HOLLIS. I was telling the Senator. In the report there is a table furnished by the expert in the Agricultural Department who especially investigated the subject in every State in the Union. The testimony taken before our committee indicated that the rate was rather higher than that; but that figure is the result of this investigation of which I have spoken.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that on a small loan of twenty-five or fifty or one hundred dollars the rate perhaps would be as high as stated; but the Senator knows, if he has made an investigation, that with good security the banks in Utah are loaning money to-day at from 6 to 7 per cent. The banks in Salt Lake City or Provo consider a loan of 7 per cent to-day, amply secured, a good loan; and that I know to be a fact.

Mr. HOLLIS. How can a bank loan money at 6 and 7 per cent and pay 4 per cent taxes on it?

Mr. SMOOT. As I stated, the Senator was mistaken in saying that they paid a tax of 4 per cent on loans.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then no injustice is done.

Mr. SMOOT. What I said was that they paid 4 per cent upon their capital, surplus, and undivided profits. That does not mean that every mortgage in the State pays a tax of 4 per cent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Why? Is it because they evade it?

Mr. SMOOT. It is supposed to be included in the personal tax return. It used to be——

Mr. HOLLIS. They would evade this, then; and I think it is much more respectable to exempt it than to go into the evading business.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to state to the Senator Utah's experience in taxing mortgages. Some 10 years ago the Legislature of Utah passed a law taxing mortgages. The result of it was that some of the citizens of the State who loaned money on mortgages made arrangements with persons in Omaha or somewhere else to make loans for them in their names, and then indorsed the notes to said citizens of Utah, and they collected the interest on the mortgage and the mortgage itself. The State received scarcely any taxes from mortgages, and that law was repealed. I think, myself, as the Senator says, that it is very much better not to tax mortgages if the tax is to be evaded.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether mortgages and deeds of trust at the present time are taxable in the State of Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. They are not, as such.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The State of Colorado had somewhat the same experience that the Senator says the State of Utah had, and they have passed a law, and it has been in force for a number of years, saying that no note secured by deed of trust shall be subject to taxation. That is upon the theory that the debtor himself ultimately has to pay it if the tax is collected.

Mr. SMOOT. That is necessarily so, if it is collected; but, as I say, at least nine-tenths—oh, yes; a larger percentage than that—evaded the tax. I know the man who had the most money to loan in the State of Utah, and as soon as the law was passed taxing mortgages he made arrangements with a person in Omaha, and all of his mortgages were made out in the name of the person in Omaha and appeared as if the money came from Omaha; it never was Omaha money, but it was money owned by the person I refer to. That was a clear case of evasion; but that is not what I object to in this bill. That is not a part of the objection.

The objection I raise is this: If a bank has a capital stock of $500,000 and a reserve of $500,000 and undivided profits of $250,000, the bank is taxed upon the $500,000 capital, the $500,000 reserve, and the $250,000 of undivided profits. Now, suppose there is a land bank established in the same city, and its capital is $500,000 and its reserve is $500,000. One is taxed, if in my State, nearly 4 per cent and the other will not be taxed at all. This gives every advantage to the Federal land bank. I can see only one result, and that would be the driving out of business of the State bank.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, there are two kinds of land banks provided under this bill. One is the Federal land bank, to which the Government subscribes capital; the other is the joint-stock land bank. The joint-stock land bank is to be taxable as to its capital and surplus, just like any other State institution. There is no doubt about that. It is only the Federal land banks that are exempted under the provisions of this paragraph. But it certainly looks very inconsistent for the Government of the United States to establish 12 Federal land banks, and furnish them each half a million dollars capital, and allow that capital to be taxed by the States. I think that would be so—a good argument could be made for it—even if we did not expressly exempt them, because in the old days, when the Government borrowed money, instead of issuing bonds it issued what we called stock, and that Government stock was always exempt from taxation without any express provision to that effect; and where that Government stock was held as part of the capital of a bank, that part of the capital was exempt from taxation. The cases so hold.

As to the point that bothers the Senator, all the capital that will come into these banks—and before I get through I am going to offer an amendment that no private person can subscribe to the stock; I think it should be that way—must be furnished either by the Government of the United States or by the 5 per cent that is taken from the borrower when he borrows the money. That is the fellow we are trying to help. If we can help him and give him cheap money, we shall accomplish the purpose of the bill. If we can not do it cheaper than existing banks do it, we can not help him. In so far as we furnish it cheaper than existing banks, we do help him, and to that extent we hurt the existing banks.

There are very few banks that I know about in the United States that do purely a mortgage business.

If there are any such, they will undoubtedly become incorporated under this bill to get the benefit of it; and I hope they will, because the idea is to have a national system, so that all farm-loan mortgages will be treated alike and so that the farmers in every State can have a fair chance. That is the intention of the bill.

If anyone conceives that it is not a Government function to help the farmers in that way, if he thinks we ought not to do it, he should not vote for the bill, and I should not ask him or persuade him to do so. But it is the view of those who are in favor of the bill that the farmer is entitled to this form of help; and if it has the result of hurting the profits of some State bank, it will be just the same result that the postal savings bank has had, and that has demonstrated its entire usefulness.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator I wish to say that, taking the banks he has referred to with a capital of $1,000,000, I do not believe the Senator quite understood what I said or I did not make myself plain. It would not be 4 per cent upon all mortgages. The Senator knows, of course, that banks having a million dollars of capital would have mortgages of perhaps fifteen or twenty times the amount of the capital; and unless they do have more loans than capital there would be no profit in the business. So it is with State banks and trust companies. While they are assessed 4 per cent on their capital, undivided profits, and reserve fund, the capital, profits, and reserve combined would perhaps not amount to more than one-tenth of the amount of their loans. Therefore the discrimination would not be the percentage of taxes paid upon the capital, surplus, and undivided profits, but it would be whatever percentage the capital, reserve, and undivided profits were of the loans made.

Everyone knows that if banks loaned only their capital and surplus and were taxed 4 per cent upon them, the borrower ultimately would have to pay the 4 per cent or no business could be done. But where the deposits in a bank are five, ten, or twenty times the amount of its capital and surplus, the tax, of course, does not amount to more than one-tenth or one-twentieth of the amount of 4 per cent. I thought the percentage would be so small upon the amount of loans expected under this bill and that it would make so very little difference in the rate of interest to be charged to the farmer by the exemption of taxation upon the capital stock that it should not be made a part of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. The small difference the Senator demonstrated is, I think, entirely right. It will not hurt the other banks much. It will be very small, indeed.

Mr. SMOOT. If the loans are five times the amount of the capital and surplus, then it would be one-fifth of 4 per cent, and it would be that much discrimination. It seems to me the Government of the United States should never undertake to place itself in competition with the business concerns of any State and claim the right to do its business on a different basis than the institutions of the State.

Mr. HOLLIS. Now, we are getting to a fundamental principle where the Senator and I may well differ. When we get there we differ. But in so far as what the Senator says as to profits, because they loan five, ten, or twenty times the capital, that is very true. That is the essence of all banking. In so far as whatever tax levied is divided up among the different loans, it is very small; I agree with the Senator, and therefore I think the State institutions would not be much hurt. But in so far as he expects the Government of the United States to contribute $6,000,000 to help the farmers and then allow it to be taxed, I think he is proceeding upon a very unwise program.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Government of the United States gave the farmers the money, what the Senator says would be true. The Government of the United States does not give the farmers the money. The Government of the United States lends the money to the farmer, and he has to pay interest upon it, and he has to pay all the expenses attending the loan, and he has to ultimately pay the principle, every cent of it, or else his property will be sold to satisfy the Government's claim.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator does not understand me. I am now talking about capital stock. I say it is very poor policy for the Government to furnish $6,000,000 to the capital stock of 12 land banks and allow the State to tax them. If the Senator will confine himself to that, then we get to an issue and may reach an agreement, but as long as he talks about loans and I am talking about capital we can not have any useful debate.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is a bad loan made and a foreclosure takes place and the property does not sell for the amount of the loan made by the Government, that impairs the capital stock.

Mr. HOLLIS. Suppose it is then taxed; when foreclosed and taken out of the capital, then so much of the capital becomes taxed, and there is no injustice done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Utah a question, if I may. Does the Senator really think that if any of the borrowers in these banks failed to pay their loans the Government would ever recover it or enforce the loan as a private concern would do? He does not really suppose that that will ever be done?

Mr. SMOOT. If I look back at history and judge the future by the past I would say it will never be done. But that is not the intention of this bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is now discussing the McCumber bill and the Norris bill. The Government does not loan the money to the farmer under this bill. I hope the Senator did not think that.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say that.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then I misunderstood the Senator; I thought he might mislead some one who has great confidence in his judgment, because I understood the Senator to ask the Senator from Utah whether he believed that the Government would ever foreclose a loan against the farmer. If that is so, that would be a misinterpretation of this bill. It contemplates no such thing.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Government puts in $6,000,000.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is put in merely to start the bank as capital, but not to loan to the farmer. As the farmers come in and take their loans and contribute capital that is to be returned to the Government.

Mr. LODGE. What is the use of $6,000,000 if the Government is not going to lend it?

Mr. HOLLIS. I say that is to start the bank, and, like capital in any other bank, in the first place, it will be loaned to the farmers; but after the farmers come in and make their contribution it will be returned. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LODGE. The $6,000,000, then, has no financial object whatever except to give the public confidence.

Mr. HOLLIS. It has. You can not start a bank without capital. This is for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. But is this capital that the Government puts in not liable for debts or losses?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly it is liable; but the point is the Government does not loan it to the farmer.

Mr. LODGE. That is the whole point. This $6,000,000 then can be used. It is liable for losses.

Mr. HOLLIS. But the Government does not loan it to the farmer. It is the land bank that loans to the farmer.

Mr. LODGE. I was aware of that.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very glad the Senator is. He did not give that indication.

Mr. LODGE. But my point is, if the Government money in any way finds its channel into the form of loans to anybody and is lost or is a bad loan, I asked the Senator from Utah whether he thought any effort seriously would be made to recover it?

Mr. HOLLIS. So far as that goes that is perfectly correct. I think it would.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in favor of cheap money for the farmer, and I have been and am in favor of a measure the object of which is to furnish that money; but I want, whatever bill we pass, to accomplish that purpose, and I want also in accomplishing that purpose to see that the Government runs no risk. I also feel that the Government should do its business upon the same basis of taxation as individuals or corporations doing business with the people. If exemption of taxation was not provided in section 29, in my opinion, the Government would be entering business upon the same basis, and then if the State banks could not compete with the Government they and their stockholders would have to suffer.

But I do believe that it is unfair after the banks have been established, after they have been doing business in the community for years, to legislate the Government into competition with them and give the Government, by legislation, every advantage over the State banks.

It is for that reason that I am opposed to section 29. With that exempted I would be very glad indeed to vote for the provisions of the bill, because I am in favor of the idea of allowing the Government of the United States to assist the farmers of the country in securing money at a low rate of interest.

Mr. President, I suppose there will be an amendment offered striking out section 29, and if no other Senator offers such an amendment I will. I am opposed to section 29 for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it may seem like an extreme position to take in regard to section 29, but my impression is that even without the exemption provided for by this section the mortgages taken by the farm-land bank under this system would be exempt from taxation as instrumentalities of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, as far as my State is concerned, mortgages would be, but that is not my complaint in respect to section 29. The capital stock would not be.

Mr. STERLING. No; but I am calling particular attention to the exemption of mortgages and the relation of mortgages to the system. I think the title of the bill itself will show the purpose of the act, and the provisions of the act throughout are consistent with and germane to the title of the bill. It is "a bill to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents of the United States, and for other purposes."

I think the purposes last named in the title are subsidiary and are incidental to the main purpose of the bill, which is to provide a means whereby the farmers throughout the United States, not in any one State, not in any one particular section of the Union, but the farmers generally throughout the country, may procure loans on farm lands at lower rates of interest than they are now obliged to pay and for longer periods of time than they can now readily or conveniently secure such loans.

That is the purpose, and there can be no question but the Federal land bank created under this bill is a Federal instrumentality. It must be if it is within the power of the Federal Government to provide for the creation and the organization of Federal land banks for a purpose like this.

If the Federal land bank is an instrumentality of the Federal Government for the purpose of benefiting this great class of people, it seems to me that to impose a tax upon the mortgage, which is the very basis of the whole structure itself, would be to impose a tax on an instrumentality or, which is the same thing, upon the prime and essential operations of that instrumentality.

That being so, I hardly think that section 29, although out of abundance of caution it perhaps ought to be in the bill, is, after all, really necessary, because in any litigated case the court would take into consideration the purposes of the act, which are to provide for agricultural development and create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgages. The court would say, "This bank thus created for the purpose of making these loans and taking these mortgages and issuing bonds upon them at a lower rate of interest, and thus securing the lower rate of interest to the farmer, is an instrumentality of the Government." If it is, how can you tax a mortgage which is the basis of the whole scheme and plan? It is upon the security of the mortgages that the bonds which constitute the "standard form of investment" are based. On this theory neither mortgages nor bonds are or should be taxable.

I was very much interested, Mr. President, in some of the discussion yesterday where the exemptions claimed in certain cases by railroad companies were referred to. But the railroad company is a private corporation existing for the primary purpose of carrying freight and passengers for hire. It owns its property, real estate and rolling stock, for that purpose and operates its trains for that purpose. Of course, the railroad company is serving no governmental function in doing that, but it is carrying on its private business; and we may not exempt from State taxation the property owned and used in that business.

So far as taxation or regulation of any kind, however, would interfere with the railroad company in the carrying of the mails, or performing other governmental functions, or be a regulation of interstate commerce, it would be illegal. No State could impose a tax or prescribe a regulation that would interfere with operations of that kind.

In the colloquy with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] reference was made to the individual who acts as an agent, or as the term was used yesterday in the discussion, as an "agency" of the Government, some official, for example, of the State or of the Federal Government. The question was asked the Senator whether such an official was exempt from taxation because he was a governmental agency. We need not doubt for a moment that in his private or individual capacity he is subject to all the laws relative to the taxation of persons and of property in the State or in the Nation, but no State may interfere with him as a governmental agency in any way, as, for example, his salary may not be attached or garnisheed in actions brought by private suitors, and for the simple reason that to thus deprive him of his salary might interfere with him in the discharge of his duty as a Government agent or official. It is contrary to public policy to permit a process of law that may lead to such result. That is all, and there is no parallel, as I can see it, between a case of that kind and a case like that presented by this bill.

So, Mr. President, without reference now to the justice of the matter, for I am not quite saying but that it may in some instances deprive a State of one source of revenue to exempt mortgages from taxation; and yet, after all, I can not help but think that there is little to fear on that score. In my own State, for example, mortgages or the debts of which they are the evidence, are listed as moneys and credits, not as mortgages, as a species of intangible personal property. Under the rule in regard to that the situs of personal property for the purpose of taxation follows the residence of the owner, and the residence of the owner of money or of mortgages on property in the State of South Dakota may be elsewhere than in the State of South Dakota. You may say that they thus escape taxation.

But consider the purposes of this bill. Stated in terms, as we gather from the provisions of the bill, those purposes are to put the farming class upon an equal footing as a business class with the other business classes of the country. The purpose is in a way to make available and to make liquid the farmers' assets, which consist in farm lands, so that he may procure money for his business at something like the same rate of interest at which other businesses secure their money. That being true, it occurs to me as a reasonable proposition that the mortgage which the farmer gives for the purpose of securing a lower rate of interest which he may procure should be exempt from taxation. After all, it comes back to this: Is the taking of the mortgage itself one of the operations of this admittedly Federal instrumentality, namely, the Federal land bank?

Mr. POMERENE. May I suggest to the Senator this further reason?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. There can not be a tax upon a mortgage unless it results in double taxation. You have, first, a tax on the farm, and when you place a tax upon the mortgage you are thereby increasing the burden which the farmer is obliged to pay. After all, it comes out of the farmer. Unfortunately, in Ohio we have that very system, which many of us have been trying to get rid of for years. Mortgages and all credits are taxed. When that is done you have double taxation, so that a farm that is worth $1,000, if it has a mortgage on it amounting to $800, if mortgages are not exempt, you have a tax upon $1,800, which is paid by the farm that is in reality only worth $1,000.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator from Ohio for what he has said. I appreciate it fully, and I think it accords exactly with our everyday experience in matters of this kind.

Mr. President, without saying anything further on this point, I am going to take the time briefly to speak of another proposition involved in the bill. I may perhaps a little later in the discussion speak more at length.

I have gone over this bill quite thoroughly with a view to seeing whether or not it could not be simplified. There is a great deal of machinery provided for in the bill. There is, first, the Federal farm-loan board, consisting of five members, four of whom are to get a salary of $10,000 a year each; there is, second, the 12 Federal farm-land banks; and there is, third, any number of national farm-loan associations.

I have wondered whether or not some of these instrumentalities or parts of this machinery might not be dispensed with, and yet have a complete system that would be of as much benefit to the farmer as would be the present proposed system; whether we could not dispense with some of the expenses that would be necessarily incurred by so much machinery, and make the provisions of the bill more readily understood by everybody. Hence in a scheme that I have somewhat tentatively in mind but not yet fully developed I would provide for the elimination of the national farm-loan association, so that the farmer, becoming a stockholder in the Federal land bank, might apply either directly or through some other agency, recognized in the bill itself, to the Federal farm-land bank for his loan. All the rest of the machinery, all the restrictions provided for in the bill could still be kept and retained in the bill, and everything be safeguarded.

Under such a plan it would be reasonable to increase the number of Federal banks. The bill provides for simply 12 within 12 districts for the whole United States. Dispensing with the farm-loan associations and in order to make the land bank a little more accessible to the farmer, we might provide for 24 land banks, or it might not be unreasonable to say one for each and every State in the Union. Then that Federal farm-land bank could, as it is permitted in the bill, in the absence of the organization of farm-loan associations, use the present banks, State or National or mortgage companies, anywhere in the United States, through which the farmer could make his application to the Federal farm-land bank for his loan.

Without saying anything further upon that proposition now, I merely leave it for consideration to those who hear me in connection with what I may desire to say later on.

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota, before he begins his address to the Senate, allow me to make a short reply, merely in a few words, to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIS. We are all familiar with the attainments and the learning of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota in the field of constitutional law, and I wish to thank him for what he has said this morning. The constitutional features of the bill have given me great concern. There are several that have not yet been mentioned, such as the investment in United States bonds, which would be an instrumentality in helping the Government to borrow money. There is a feature authorizing postal savings to be invested in the farm-loan bonds. In that way the law might come under the post offices and post roads clause of the Constitution.

I wish to say to all the friends of the bill who believe in rural credits that the Democratic, Republican, and Progressive national conventions declared for rural credits. Therefore we must do the best we can. If any friend of the bill can think of any other feature that should be added to it to make the bill surely constitutional, I would very gladly welcome it. I hope the Senator from South Dakota and other friends of the measure will address themselves to that matter, and if they find anything further will inform the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will permit me, I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to a suggestion that was made awhile ago in the course of the discussion—I think by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and perhaps also by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—in regard to the Government's contribution to this project, to begin with. It was stated that it was $6,000,000. I do not see that in the bill, and I do not believe that it means that the Government shall contribute $6,000,000 at the outstart to these Federal land banks; but the Government may become a subscriber to the stock of the Federal land banks, and it may be that nearly all of the $6,000,000—which means the capital stock of 12 Federal land banks, at $500,000 each—would be subscribed by individuals and other associations and other corporations, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, as I stated this morning, I am going to offer an amendment on my own initiative not permitting private subscribers to come in. I think the right to subscribe should be confined entirely to the Government and those who borrow. Perhaps the Senate will not agree to that, but that is my view.

Mr. STERLING. I might not agree to that, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate at any great length in discussing this bill. We are embarking in this country for the first time, through the medium of this legislation, upon a new enterprise, as it were, upon something which has been practically untried in this country. I realize fully that the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], and others associated with him in the main work of formulating this legislation deserve a great deal of credit for the work which they have done. It is no easy matter to formulate legislation of this kind, and in some respects the only guide they had came from what I may call foreign models, from systems which had been in operation in other countries under conditions somewhat dissimilar from those obtaining in this country.

While the purposes of the bill are in the right direction I think that, in respect to some of its provisions, it will prove to a large extent impracticable. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has just made a suggestion which I think is worthy of great consideration. I do not apprehend that in the part of the country in which I live any great use will be made of the provisions of this bill, for several reasons: First of all, because money can now be obtained by farmers in Minnesota at as low a rate and with much less difficulty than will be the case under the provisions of this bill.

In Minnesota the interest rates on good farm loans run from 5 to 7 per cent. In the southern part of the State, the older-settled portion, farmers can obtain money at 5 per cent; in the middle part of the State, the section in which I live, the farmers can obtain money at 6 per cent; while in the extreme northern part of the State, the newer part of it, where farmers are, as it were, beginners and where the country is not as much developed as it is further south, they have to pay about 7 per cent.

There are several objectionable features in this bill which I think will work as a handicap in many portions of the country. I have no idea that the provisions of the bill will be availed of in New England, because the farmers in the New England States can secure money on lower and better and easier terms than they will be able to do under the provisions of this bill. I very much doubt whether in the territory north of the Ohio River, from the eastern seaboard to the Mississippi River, and beyond to the borders of the Missouri River, there will be much advantage taken of this proposed legislation or that to any great extent the farmers will avail themselves of its provisions.

I am about to call attention to some defects in the bill, which I think militate against its usefulness and adaptability to the portion of the country to which I have referred, namely, the Northwest; and for that purpose, Mr. President, I ask to have read a statement which I have received from a prominent real estate dealer in the city of Minneapolis. I do not mean to say that I indorse everything he says, but there are some objections pointed out in the statement which are worthy of consideration, and which I shall use as a text as I proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRADY in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 2986; H. R. 6838) to provide capital for agricultural development, etc.

I.

Section 9: It will hamper the introduction of the measure to require every borrower to pay 5 per cent of his loan in cash, as many borrowers will dislike to disburse their money unless the loan is granted, and may not be able to disburse it without having to borrow for the purpose. By inserting in line 8, after the word "cash," the words "or by order upon the proceeds of his loan," this difficulty will be met.

II.

Section 12, subsection 8: To prohibit land rented to tenants from being used as security under the act, removes from the benefit of the act a large proportion of the farms of the United States. This is unjust, as many rented farms are rented by sons whose father retains title to the land. Why should such sons, or such fathers, be discriminated against?

Furthermore, I own and am operating a farm to-day, which is managed by hired help at my expense. I propose next year to give my hired man a lift by making him a renter, and selling him the stock and implements on time. Why should the act prevent me from giving this man this boost? So long as he is my hired man on wages I can borrow; the minute I rent it to him I can not. This clause of the act may discourage tenancy, but it will also to the same extent encourage the still more objectionable form of farming with hired hands.

The agricultural laborer of England is an abject and deplorable creature compared with the American renter. The American renter should in no way be discriminated against, even though it is done with the best of intentions.

III.

In the same clause the power to declare the loan due merely because the farm is sold seems of doubtful value. It will tend to hinder the free transfer of property so mortgaged. It will make a farm with such a loan against it worth less to sell than a farm with a straight, unhampered loan against it. It may make buyers hesitate, and may discriminate unjustly against the farmer who for perfectly honorable reasons wants to sell his farm. It may also be made a means of oppression against a new neighbor that comes into a community, in case he happens to displease some of the other members of the Farm Loan Association, and has not procured this consent in advance when he purchased.

After all, the loan is made on the land and not on the owners personality, and if it is thought necessary to put in a clause of this kind it ought to read that in case of waste or serious depreciation in the value of the property the loan can be declared due by giving one year's notice.

IV.

Section 12, subsection 9: The maximum amount of loan it seems to me might well be increased from $10,000 to $32,000. A half section in Illinois is worth $64,000. Large loans mixed in with the others will strengthen and improve the whole pudding.

V.

The loans of the joint-stock banks and the farm-loan associations are equally exempt from taxes. The capital is not. This, on the face of it, may seem fair, and yet there are considerations against it. The object of the act is to help farmers, and the capital of joint-stock banks also is held merely as a guarantee of the solvency of the loans. It is important to have this guarantee capital large. It is necessary for the success of a joint-stock bank, in marketing its bonds, that the capital must be large. At present the capital of persons contemplating going into this business is held for instance in mortgages that are justly exempt from taxation—either actual, or by being concealed from the assessor—and they should be so exempt, seeing that the land, of which it is only an undivided part, is taxed for its full value. If I organize a joint-stock bank and go to the holder of such a mortgage and ask him to devote his capital to guaranteeing the loans of others, and help the American farmers get loans at lower rates, it would seem unjust to penalize him for doing this with a heavy State tax, merely because he exchanges his mortgage for shares of stock in the bank.

After all, the tax on the capital of the bank is shifted eventually onto its borrowers or onto its bondholders. Why not, then, exempt the capital from taxes similar to the capital of the farm-loan association and of the Federal land banks?

In conclusion, I seriously question if this clause would not be held unconstitutional, as being unequal or class legislation.

VI.

The clause limiting the profits of a joint-stock bank should be increased to 2 per cent. After all, it is merely a limit, and the joint-stock banks will have to compete, in the open market of loans and bonds both, with the Federal land banks. To tempt capital into this business from the beginning, 1 per cent is too little inducement. It is difficult to determine what is 1 per cent difference, seeing that the bonds fluctuate in the market, and will often have to be issued at less than par. Furthermore this clause might be evaded by means of commissions payable by the borrowers to agents or by not disbursing the full amount of the loan, and it will therefore be better to leave the joint-stock banks a larger margin or profit so that they can pay their agents straight commissions rather than letting the agents get these from the borrower or deducting them from the proceeds of the loans.

Any joint-stock bank starting in this business will find the first years heavy and expensive sledding, until the totality of its loans approximates 15 per cent of its capital, and to impose a clause that will compel them to operate at a loss for several years after they start would seem unreasonable and unfair and unnecessary.

There are furthermore districts of the West where the Federal land banks may not wish to establish farm-loan associations—districts where risks are great, owing to frosts, droughts, etc.—that might properly be served by joint-stock banks, which would not care to enter these districts unless a larger profit over and above operating expenses be allowed, to insure against eventual losses.

VII.

I would like to see the act provide for the establishment of small joint-stock banks, restricted in their operation to not exceeding 10 counties, with a capital of from $10,000 up—capital and mortgages of such banks to be exempt from taxation—to act as feeders for, and furnish loans to, the larger joint-stock banks. The Wisconsin or Massachusetts act might be followed. This is important if the joint-stock banks are to be a success. These small banks should perhaps not have power to issue bonds, but should have power to guarantee mortgages and to sell them both to joint-stock banks and others. This will make the joint-stock side of the business more democratic than as the bill stands at present. The joint-stock bank with a capital of only $250,000 can not hope for a successful market for its bonds, and any joint-stock bank incorporated with from two to ten million dollars, under the present act, would be more of an octopus than if it had a smaller capital and depended upon smaller local banks to furnish it with a part of its loans. The local banks should have the power to subscribe stock in the larger joint-stock banks.

VIII.

The Secretary of the Treasury would not have sufficient time to give to this important and complicated business, and with only five members on the committee it would seem too bad if any of the five should be so occupied that he could only give perfunctory attention to this business. It might therefore be better to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have access to the meetings of the board, without voting, and to have the board consist of five members besides the Secretary, as contemplated by the first draft, or, if there are political reasons against having three of one party and two of another so appointed, the act might provide that two members from each party shall be appointed, the four to select a fifth, subject to the President's approval.

DITLEW M. FREDERIKSEN.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 25, 1916.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have asked to have this communication read because, as I stated before, while I do not indorse all of its statements, there are some matters in it that I regard as of great importance.

I want to call attention particularly, in connection with the communication that has just been read, to section 12, paragraph 8:

No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or who does not in his application promise shortly to become, engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged.

This provision was amended, if I am not mistaken, by striking out the word "promise" and inserting the word "intention." Am I not correct?

Mr. HOLLIS. The exact words are "who does not state his intention."

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman whose communication was read raises the question whether a man who owns a farm and has rented it to a tenant could come in and get a loan under this law. He is not actually farming it himself; it is not his intention to farm it, but he rents the land to a tenant. This is a very important matter, not so much in my section as it would be in certain sections of the South.

If a man were not occupying the land or farming it himself, but lived in town and rented it to a tenant, could he obtain a loan under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; he could not.

Mr. NELSON. Then, as to many of the cotton planters down South who live in towns and rent their land to tenants, large and small, they would be utterly unable to avail themselves of the benefit of this law and to obtain loans.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true. Would the Senator like to have me explain the reasons for that so that he may discuss them?

Mr. NELSON. I can understand the reasons, but of course I yield to the Senator to explain them.

Mr. HOLLIS. I should like to state them briefly, and then the Senator can address himself to them.

This bill is intended to help people own their farms or to acquire them for homes. If a man could borrow money on his farm just as well if he operated it by a tenant there would be no inducement to dispose of the farm to the tenant. Under this bill as it is drawn the tenant would have every inducement to make some arrangement with the owner by which he could buy it, and then he would be engaged in the cultivation of it. That is what we want. If we permit men who are not engaged in cultivating farms to borrow under the system it will encourage speculation—something that we fear might be detrimental.

The third thing I wish to say is this: If this system goes into effect, and money is loaned to the owners of farms in a given section, it will undoubtedly have the result of lowering farm-loan interest rates in that section, so that the man who does not choose to cultivate his farm himself will be able to get his money cheaper.

Mr. NELSON. Without any reference to the reasons, if I am correct in my statement that a man who owns a farm and does not occupy and actually farm it himself, but farms it through tenants, can not get a loan under this bill, it seems to me that in the Southern States, where most of the cotton planters have large farms and farm them largely by colored tenant farmers with a mule or two and a plow, however good the farm might be as security, and however responsible the men might be, those men would not be able to secure a loan under this law.

What follows from that? The tenant farmers can not get any money, because they have no land to mortgage. The owner of the farm, who lives in town and rents it to the tenants, can not borrow money, and his recourse then is to go and borrow it wherever he can, as he does now. Now, can the Senator from New Hampshire see where this will be of any help or advantage to such cotton planters as those to whom I have referred?

Mr. HOLLIS. If the cotton planter does not choose to bring himself under the terms of the act, it does not make any difference to me what part of the country he is in. If the reasons are sound which have moved us to adopt this provision, it does not make any difference whether he is a cotton planter or who he is. If they are not sound, the bill should be amended.

The joint committee felt unanimously that the loans should be restricted in this way. The provision is subject to the criticism the Senator makes, and I have given the answer to that criticism so far as I can. If the reasons I have given in my answer do not commend themselves to the Senate, the Senate ought to amend the provision.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will excuse me, I have called attention to the application of this proposed law to conditions in the South. I will now call attention to its application to conditions in the North.

In the State of Minnesota, for instance, we have many prosperous, thrifty farmers who took their lands when they were in the wilds, who started 40 or 50 years ago, took homesteads, have developed the land, and have made it into good, nice farms. Old age is upon them; they are unable to work the farm any longer; they have a number of children, a number of boys; they are very anxious to keep that farm in the family; none of the boys has means enough or is able to buy out the interest of the other children; the father is anxious to quit working the farm, but he wants to live on it; he would like to have one or two of his boys run it; and so it is quite customary in my part of the country for old farmers to rent their farms for a number of years to one or two of their sons in order to give them a start; and if they prove successful as renters and make a little money, by and by they buy out the other heirs and get the land; and yet you cut off those farmers in such instances from securing loans under this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. In just a moment. I want the Senator from Nebraska to understand that the Senator from New Hampshire does not disagree with me about one thing, and that is, that no matter how good a farm may be, no matter where it is situated, no matter what its value is, if the owner does not live on the farm and cultivate it himself, but rents it to a tenant, he can not borrow money on it under this law.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to ask the Senator if he thought, in the case he put, to take his own illustration, that such a farmer needs a loan from anybody?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, they do oftentimes. I can tell you why they need loans. I have many instances in mind. They desire a loan on the farm because they need the money to divide up; for those old men, when they come to the point where they want to quit farming operations and turn over the farm to their children, are generally anxious to make a fair division among the children; and in order to raise the necessary money and pay off, for instance, the girls in the family, or to pay off the younger boys, they mortgage the land. They want to mortgage the land in order to pay those portions; and then the single son or the two sons who buy the farm take it subject to that mortgage. That is the way it operates, practically, in our part of the country.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to say that the Senator from New Hampshire stated that a man owning and living upon a farm which was worked by hired labor or tenants could not secure a loan under the terms of this bill?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; the Senator misapprehended me. That was not what I said nor what the Senator from New Hampshire concurred in. It was this, if the Senator will pardon me: I said that if a cotton planter or cotton farmer down South owned a farm and lived in town or lived off the farm and farmed it through tenants, he could not borrow any money under this law; he could not borrow money unless he lived on the farm and ran it himself. If he lived off the farm—in town, for instance—and had the farm operated by a number of tenants, as is frequently the case down South—colored men—it would be utterly impossible under the provisions of this bill for him to borrow any money on the farm.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, most of the "planters," as they are called in the South, live on their plantations, which are worked by laborers who rent the land either for money or for a part of the crop. Now, there is nothing in this bill to prohibit a loan from being secured upon the farm under those circumstances, is there?

Mr. NELSON. If the farm is farmed by renters, I do not think a loan could be secured. If the owner lives on the farm and farms it with hired help—as all farmers have to do, more or less—of course he can borrow on it. But if he lives on the farm and works it entirely by renters and does not work it himself, I do not think he could get money under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And he could only secure a loan on the farm if he lived on it? He could not secure a loan on an adjoing farm, for instance; a man who owns two or three farms and lives on one of them?

Mr. NELSON. No; of course he could not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. He could not get a loan on that?

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the definition is "engaged in the cultivation." If he lives on one farm and farms another, he is cultivating that other.

I want to say here that it is very doubtful whether this condition should be imposed in the bill. It may be that none of these conditions should be imposed. I am not hostile to the amendment the Senator may offer. I want the Senate, when the time comes, to decide on this matter. It is one of the things I hope it will decide on. Up to date, I rather think that this will encourage men to become owners of farms for homes. I hope it will.

Mr. NELSON. I simply call attention to the fact that this bill under the provisions of it as it is to-day will be of little value to the cotton planters of the South and little value to the farmers of the North who farm through tenants.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I share very thoroughly the opinion expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire a moment ago that one of the great accomplishments of the bill would be to make people own their farms, to create landlords. I think the future of this Republic rests very largely upon the country homes. But if the Senator from Minnesota interprets the bill correctly I think it would be very well to amend it so as to cover the case of a man who lives on his farm and who may have an adjoining farm or two or three little farms around him. My reading of the bill did not impress me with the fact at the time that he would be precluded from getting money under the terms of the bill on farms that might adjoin the farm on which he lived.

Mr. NELSON. I have called attention——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] said something that suggests to my mind that we ought to be very careful in framing the bill so as not to prevent a man from getting several loans, when living on one farm and farming it from getting a loan on some other farm. He is prohibited as I read the bill from doing that.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not if he cultivates it himself.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not if he cultivates it, but if we did not prevent operations of that kind, then men could get a dozen loans from the Government and own a whole community. It is one of the objects of the bill to help men to secure farm loans for themselves.

As the Senator from Mississippi so well said, the model condition in any country is to have the soil tilled by men who own it rather than through tenants.

Mr. NELSON. I call attention to this to the end that I think this provision ought to be broadened and improved; otherwise the bill will not accomplish the purposes which a good many people think it ought to accomplish. In the next place, I call attention to the following provision in the same paragraph and section of the bill:

> In case of the sale of the mortgaged land, the farm-loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable, or permit said mortgage to be assumed by the purchaser.

This, as stated in the communication which I read, is very objectionable to people in the Northwest. Land passes from hand to hand and this provision amounts to this: If I own a farm and live on it and cultivate it and give a mortgage on it to one of these land banks and want to sell that farm long before the mortgage is due, it may be within six months or three months after the mortgage has been executed, the bank has a right to declare the mortgage due and enforce it, or it may permit the man who buys the land of me to assume the mortgage. It is in a state of uncertainty. It retards the transfer and sale of the land. A man comes to me and wants to buy my farm. It has a mortgage on it in one of these land banks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. I have not finished my statement. A man comes to me and wants to buy my farm. It has a mortgage in one of these land banks. If I sell it to him I run the risk of having the mortgage declared due; he runs the same risk, too; and it interferes with the free transfer of land, as that gentleman said in the communication that was read.

In our part of the country land passes from hand to hand, and whoever buys the lands buys it subject to the mortgage. If I sell my farm to A with a $500 mortgage on it, he takes the land subject to that charge, and as long as he pays up the interest and pays the taxes that mortgage remains in force. He need not go to the owner of the mortgage and ask for an extension of time or make any arrangement. The land is transferred to him, and after he gets the land, which is the principal security, it is his business to see that the interest and taxes are paid and that the debt is paid at maturity. If he does not he loses the land and the mortgage is foreclosed.

This provision utterly interferes with free transaction in land. It is an embarrassment to the man who wants to sell and it is a handicap and an embarrassment to the man who wants to purchase.

Now, here is another feature of the bill in the same paragraph that is very objectionable:

> In case of the death of the mortgagor, the mortgagee may, on default and if necessary to protect the loan, declare the mortgage due and payable and take all steps necessary for its collection.

Mr. GRONNA. Before the Senator leaves the other paragraph that he read I wish to ask him a question. As the Senator will perhaps remember it is one of the paragraphs to which I objected.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Suppose a mortgage is made for a thousand dollars. It runs one or two years. Coupon notes are made out for 36 years for the full time that the mortgage is to run. In the course of two years the farmer sells his farm. Now, what amount will be due and payable if the association or the farm-loan board declares his mortgage due?

Mr. NELSON. The whole debt will be due.

Mr. GRONNA. It will be not only the thousand dollars, but it will be all the interest for the 36 years, will it not?

Mr. NELSON. I am inclined to think so.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; that would not be reasonable. It is all subject to rules and regulations to be made by the representatives of the borrowers. The borrowers are not going to have such a rule and regulation as that.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire I am somewhat familiar with the loaning of money, especially in our part of the country, and it is the general practice that the whole amount of interest as well as the principal will be due and must be paid.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is a pretty poor community to live in, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that is the practice if not the law not only in my State but in the Senator's State.

Mr. HOLLIS. This system will be owned and controlled by the borrowers themselves, and I can not think it possible that they will not provide that it is sufficient in case a loan is in default when a man pays up his principal and the amount of interest that has accrued. If the Senator feels that there is any danger of that sort he ought to offer an amendment that would cure it.

Mr. GRONNA. I certainly do feel there is danger that it may be done, because I have had experience on this subject.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not under a system that was owned by borrowers, because they would have to rob themselves to that extent.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator will admit, I suppose, that it is possible to carry provisions of that sort into effect.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not believe it is possible.

Mr. GRONNA. There is nothing in the bill that would prohibit it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not believe it is possible. I do not think any court in the world would enforce a law evidently so unjust and inequitable and contrary to all principles of law, and it could not be done.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, in the case mentioned it would be usury, and be subject to the laws of the State in regard to usury.

Mr. NELSON. But here I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the moment a man transfers it without the consent of the loan bank the bank has the right to declare the mortgage due.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but I was speaking in answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota. If they undertook to declare, after a mortgage had been running for six months or a year or two, that all the interest that would be accruing on that mortgage for 36 years should be paid, it would make a rate of interest that would be far in excess of the legal rate, and they would be subject to the law against usury.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question? What would the Senator say as to the practice now in vogue, not only in my State but in every State of the Union? A loan is made for five years for, we will say, $1,000 at a rate of 6 per cent interest. The first interest becomes due and is not paid. The principal and the interest are declared due and the mortgage is foreclosed. What would the Senator from Nebraska say would be the amount that the land mortgaged was subject to?

Mr. NORRIS. It would be subject to the $1,000 mortgage, with interest on it at the rate provided in the mortgage up to the time when the declaration was made that declared it due.

Mr. GRONNA. Provided it was the decree.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but he could not get a decree for any larger amount. In the case the Senator puts a $1,000 mortgage, drawing 6 per cent interest, would be such an amount that it would exceed the legal rate of interest in any State in the Union, I presume.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator say that if there was a provision in the mortgage stipulating that in case a default is made the whole amount shall be due, that it could not be collected?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is perfectly proper to put in the mortgage a statement that upon a failure of one of the conditions named in the mortgage the mortgagee shall have a right to declare it due; but by declaring it due he can not collect something that, as a matter of fact, would be illegal. In the case the Senator puts there is no difficulty about it. A mortgage for a thousand dollars, running for five years, has run the first six months; the interest is due, and the mortgagee has declared it due. The amount he can collect on that mortgage would be the thousand dollars plus the interest at 6 per cent up to the time he makes the declaration, and that is all he could get.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to suggest that in the case referred to by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] it must be a matter of contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the contract being to the effect that in case any installment of interest is not paid when due the whole will become due at the election or option of the mortgagee; but it can not be the law surely in the State of North Dakota or, I think, in any other State that the interest becoming due and not paid, then the principal thereof shall become due. I hardly think that is the law in any State.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while this is very interesting, it is collateral to the main point I intended to make on the provision that I read. I will quote it again:

> In case of the sale of the mortgaged land the farm-loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable or permit said mortgage to be assumed by the purchaser.

The objection, as I said, is that it interferes with the free exchange and transfer of land that prevails in our part of the country. It amounts practically to this, Mr. President: If I own a farm that is mortgaged to the land bank and sell that farm, the land bank has an opportunity to declare that my mortgage is due instantly.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, of course it would be like a case in the ordinary bank. If the Senator had his farm mortgaged to the bank, he would find out in advance whether it would be agreeable to the bank to get permission, and then it would be done. The reason for it is this: The one to whom the Senator wanted to sell it might be an objectionable person; he might be intemperate; he might be some one they did not want in the farm-loan association; and this is to give them a chance to say that they will not admit such a man into membership That is all it is for. If he is the right kind of a man, if he is solvent and temperate and industrious, it would be perfectly easy to get permission. The discretion has to be somewhere.

Mr. NELSON. The reply to that is that the security on these loans, as a rule, is not made upon the quality of the person who owns the land.

Mr. HOLLIS. They are in this case.

Mr. NELSON. They are made upon the quality and character of the land that is offered as security. That is the main security. If the man who buys the land subject to a mortgage fails to pay the mortgage or to pay the taxes and interest, the land bank can go on and foreclose it and get the land. Besides, they have their personal obligation against the man who gave the original mortgage.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, in consideration of the Government aid in this system and the low rate at which loans are to be made, there is more expected of a borrower than in the ordinary case of a mortgage. He assumes individual liability, and the value of that depends, of course, on what he has and who he is, and he also assumes certain duties in connection with the farm-loan association in the way of appraising loans and helping collect. For that reason the character of the borrower plays a considerable part in his desirability as a member of the system.

Mr. NELSON. In the first place, the bill does not relieve the man who sells from his personal obligation.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is perfectly true.

Mr. NELSON. And the question whether the loan will be extended or whether it will be continued will depend on whether the buyer, in addition, will make a personal assumption of the loan. All this goes—and that is the objectionable feature—to check and hinder the sale and transfer of land, which is frequent in our part of the country. Men mortgage their lands, and many of them borrow from land and insurances companies and from eastern money institutions. They borrow on a definite time, 5 or 10 years, and they never have to consult an insurance company, the man, or the concern that furnish the money as to whether they have a right to sell. They can sell that land to whomsoever they please, and the bank loaning the money, the mortgagee, does not think of declaring the debt due. He has not the right to declare it due. Millions of money are loaned in the West by insurance companies to our farmers, and in none of them is there any provision that in case the original borrower transfers or sells that land the mortgagee can declare the debt due, and that it is a question whether it shall be continued or not, whether the man who buys the land will personally assume the mortgage or not.

I will not take up more of the time of the Senate on that provision, but I call attention to the other provision which I read a moment ago, before I was interrupted.

> In case of the death of the mortgagor the mortgagee may, on default and if necessary to protect the loan, declare the mortgage due and payable and take all steps necessary for its collection.

There, again, you have something that works a great and unnecessary hardship. In our part of the country under the system of mortgages that prevail there the death of the mortgagor does not make the mortgage due. All our mortgages contain a power of sale authorizing the property to be sold at public sale in case there is a default in payment of interest or principal. That is a power coupled with an interest, and it does not end with the death of the mortgagor who gave the mortgage; it follows the land. Hence in our part of the country I have never heard of such an awful doctrine as is embodied in this provision, that in case a man dies and leaves a widow and minor children, therefore because of his death the mortgage can be declared due and payable and be foreclosed. There are many instances in my part of the country, and I can recall some, where a farmer with a mortgage of, say, $500 on a farm perhaps worth $1,000 dies and leaves a widow and minor children, who take up the task and struggle heroically to pay the interest on the mortgage and the taxes on the land so as to save the land. Under the provisions of this proposed law the farm-loan bank, the moment such a farmer dies, can declare the debt due and foreclose the mortgage, without any rhyme or reason in many cases, where the poor widow and children would not be able to furnish such personal security as the loan association might desire. In our part of the country a mortgage never becomes due because of the fact that the mortgagor dies.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator. I have never before heard of such a doctrine as is formulated in this bill and as was announced by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is evidently against the bill, and he may not thank me for any suggestion.

Mr. NELSON. I am against this provision of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wanted to tell him that while I agree heartily with what he is saying, that provision was stricken out of the bill three days ago.

Mr. NELSON. This entire provision?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I am glad of it. Was there not a substitute? Was not the amendment in italics adopted?

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. NELSON. I call attention to another feature of the bill, and that is the provision contained on page 26, at the end of section 9:

If membership is refused—

Now, remember, before a farmer can obtain a loan he must first join one of these associations, either a limited liability or an unlimited liability association. He must make application for a loan, and on his application he must be prepared to pay $5 in cash for every hundred dollars of the loan which he seeks. If it happens that the man is unfortunate, either that there is some little hitch in the title or the appraisers do not think the land is good enough when he has paid in his $5 a hundred for the loan, you would naturally think the poor fellow ought to get his money back if he can not get the loan, and that the farm-loan bank ought to stand whatever expenses were involved, but this provides:

If membership is refused to any applicant under this section, or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected, the sum deposited by him shall be returned—

That means the $5 a hundred that he must deposit—less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board.

So when the poor fellow who makes an application for a loan and deposits his money for the loan at the rate of $5 for every hundred dollars, goes to the registrar's office and secures an abstract of title, pays for it, has his papers made out, and all that, if for any reason the farm-loan board see fit to reject his application, he can not get his money back, and they may absorb the whole of it under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. In the first place, the farm-loan board makes general rules and regulations to cover such cases. They may provide that the poor fellow the Senator depicts may get all his money back. He ought, if it is not his fault. But if he has a poor title and the land bank goes to the expense of looking up the title and then finds he has a bad title, to give all the money back would be robbing all the other poor fellows in the system. It is assumed that the farm-loan board will do what is equitable.

Mr. NELSON. It would depend very much——

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not know which can speak the louder, but if the Senator yields and wants an answer, let me say it is for the farm-loan board after it has had experience to make equitable rules for that purpose, so that all the poor fellows in the system will get the same treatment.

Mr. NELSON. At all events, he is absolutely at the mercy of the regulations they may establish.

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly, if he does not like them——

Mr. NELSON. They may make such regulations that he will never get a cent of his money back.

Mr. HOLLIS. If he does not like the rules and regulations, he has no business to apply for a loan.

Mr. NELSON. Exactly.

Mr. HOLLIS. He can go somewhere else.

Mr. NELSON. And that will be the result. The same provision is found on page 28:

If membership—

The provision which I just read pertains to national farm-loan associations limited under division A. This provision is substantially the same. It relates to farm-loan associations unlimited under division B:

If membership is refused to any applicant under this section, or if the loan applied for is for any reason rejected, the sum deposited by him shall be returned, less such deductions as may be authorized by regulations of the Federal farm-loan board.

So in all these cases under the provisions of the bill, a man who applies for a loan of $500, say, is required to deposit $25 in cash. If it turns out that there is some little technical defect in the title, so that the farm-loan association will not accept the loan, he could not get that money back, or, at all events, he is at the mercy of the rules and regulations of the farm-loan board as to whether he will get any of it back; and, if so, how much.

In addition to this, for the purposes of anchoring this bill to the Constitution, it contains certain provisions, and, while they are to me very objectionable, I think they are probably necessary in the bill. The first provision relates to making the farm-loan banks depositaries of public funds generally, putting them practically in the same condition as our national banks. I think it is very unsafe and assuming a great risk to make these banks depositaries. They are of an experimental character, and there is great uncertainty as to whether they will succeed or not.

Under the Postal Savings System, which we adopted some years ago, we provided for the deposit of the savings of people who prefer to deal with the Government, instead of with our banks; we also provided for the investment of a part of those savings in Government bonds, and for deposits in the banks in the vicinity where the postal savings deposits are made.

Under the provisions of this bill a part of the postal savings may be invested in the bonds of the farm-loan banks. The Post Office Department was, from first to last, utterly opposed to this provision of the bill, and I believe it should not have been inserted. It would have been sufficient to have anchored the bill on constitutional grounds to have adhered to the first provision to which I have referred, that of making these banks depositaries generally of Government funds.

I was somewhat surprised at the answer—perhaps I misunderstood it—of the Senator from New Hampshire to the question propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts. The capital of $500,000 advanced by the Government to these farm-loan banks does not lie idle. The first man who comes in and makes application for a loan to a farm-loan association and deposits his money will get a part of that money. There is nothing in the proposed law that contemplates that that advance money of the Government shall lie idle. That money will be used, like the other money of the farm-loan association, to furnish money for these farm loans. In the nature of the case it can not be otherwise. I think the Senator from New Hampshire did not really intend to convey the idea which his remarks implied.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I did not say that. What I said was that the Government did not loan any money to the farmers, and the Government does not. It is the Federal loan bank that is controlled by the borrowers that loans.

Mr. NELSON. But let me ask the Senator a question. The farm-loan banks would use that $500,000 advance?

Mr. HOLLIS. Of course they would. They would not have the money to loan and to get mortgages unless they did use it, and until they get mortgages they can not borrow any money. Of course the money is given for the express purpose of loaning it. What I meant to say was that the Government did not loan to the farmer, but that the land bank does that.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, not only must the Government advance this $500,000 to each of the 12 banks in the first instance, but there is a provision in the bill, section 34, which in its effect and operation will authorize these banks every year to draw an equal amount from the Federal Treasury. Let me read the section:

SEC. 34. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed—

I call your attention to the fact that the Secretary is not merely "authorized," but that he is "directed"—

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Federal farm-loan board, to make advances or deposits for the temporary use of any Federal land bank, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Such Federal land bank shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate of indebtedness for any such advance or deposit, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, to be secured by farm-loan bonds or other collateral, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any such certificate shall be redeemed and paid by such land bank at the direction of the Federal farm-loan board.

I call especial attention to this, Mr. President:

The aggregate of all sums so advanced or deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in any fiscal year shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000 at any one time.

In other words, under this section if the farm-loan board makes a demand upon the Secretary of the Treasury for $6,000,000 in any fiscal year, it is made obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish it. So if these banks, starting with $500,000 Government money in the first instance, do not get along very well, do not make much headway, every year through the farm-loan board they can call in the aggregate for as much as $6,000,000 more, and the language is mandatory, for it reads that "The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed."

If we had left out the word "directed," it would not have been quite so bad; some option would have been left with the Secretary of the Treasury; but now if the farm-loan board makes a demand to the extent in any fiscal year of $6,000,000 for these land banks, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to advance it.

Mr. President, I have called attention to what I regard as some of the glaring defects of this bill in some respects. I am satisfied that the machinery provided for is of such a cumberous and intricate character that I do not think it will be availed of in the State of Minnesota. While I think the bill is subject to these criticisms, I have made up my mind to vote for it. There are some portions of this country, in the South and West, where the idea prevails that they will get great relief from this bill. I know they need relief in one respect; that is, they have to pay a higher rate of interest than do we in the North and the Northwest. I know they need cheaper money than they are now getting, and I am willing to give them an opportunity to secure it. While I do not believe that the bill will be of any practical use or value in States like Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, or Minnesota, or in any of the New England States, there are portions of the country where it may furnish some relief. For that reason, Mr. President, I am willing to support the bill.

I realize the fact that the planters of the Southern States, owing to labor conditions, owing to the character of the soil there, and owing to various other conditions, are handicapped to a greater extent than are the farmers of the North and the Northwest. Money is not so plentiful in that section of the country, banks are not so numerous, and it is more difficult for them to borrow money. I think in many instances the farmers have had to pay usurious and unlawful rates of interest. Therefore I have always felt kindly toward the Southern States and am anxious to help them and to build them up. In view of the fact that this bill may possibly be of some help to them and may enable them to get money at a lower rate of interest than they can do to-day, I am willing, as I have said, to vote for the bill, although, I repeat, I believe it will be of no earthly value or good in the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am very much pleased to learn that the Senator from Minnesota intends to vote for the bill. I feared from the temper of his remarks that he thought it was irretrievably bad and that it ought not to be passed.

I want to say to the Senate that the views of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota were very carefully weighed by the committee and that it was due almost entirely to his opposition that the savings department provision, one in which I had great faith, was stricken out.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I meant to have congratulated him on his wisdom in having the savings-bank department provision eliminated from the bill. In the main, I want to congratulate the Senator from New Hampshire on the great work he has done in connection with this bill. It was no easy task to frame a bill of this character, and he has certainly accomplished a great work. I fully realize that it is much easier to criticize a piece of legislation than it is to formulate it in the first instance. What I have said in reference to the bill has not been for the purpose of criticizing the Senator from New Hampshire, but rather for the purpose of pointing out certain features that will interfere with the successful operation of the law in the part of the country where I reside and which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the first few criticisms which were made by the Senator from Minnesota of the bill are on debatable subjects. It is very likely that the Senator from Minnesota is right about them. They relate to the restrictions on the mortgage loans, and I shall be very glad, indeed, if the Senator from Minnesota or some other Senator will offer an amendment, so that when we get to voting we may test the sentiment of the Senate in those particulars.

On the last proposition which the Senator from Minnesota has stated I think I ought to make a little explanation; that is, on the subject of the Government deposits, as provided for in section 34. It is true that that section is inserted for the purpose of tiding one or more land banks over a hard place. If they get in a hard place and interest is not paid on mortgages on account of drought or short crops, then the land bank may apply to the Federal Treasury for relief, just exactly as do national banks when they need extra funds for any purpose; but the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow an interruption?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest in that connection that, while I have no objection to their applying to the Secretary of the Treasury, yet I would not make it mandatory, as it is now proposed to do. In respect to the national banks applying for Federal money, it is optional with the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether or not the application shall be granted. I would also leave it optional with the Treasury Department in the case of these banks, and would not make it mandatory. I would strike out the word "directed," and would simply authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, as is done in the case of national banks, to furnish the money if he deems it proper and wise to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I dislike very much to criticize any amendments proposed by the committee to this bill, because I know they have been considered very carefully by the committee; but I am in entire sympathy with the criticism just offered to this section by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. It seems to me to be well founded.

In that connection, I venture to suggest to the Senator having charge of the bill the propriety of substituting on lines 2 and 3 of the succeeding page in place of the words "Federal farm-loan board," the words "Secretary of the Treasury." The Secretary of the Treasury is the constitutional officer in charge of the Treasury Department, and all funds of the Government are subject to his control. I think it is rather—I will not say questionable—but it is a new departure to provide that the certificates for these deposits shall be redeemed at the direction of the Federal farm-loan board rather than by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury is a member of the board. He is, however, but one such member, and his vote would only count as such, and might be opposed by the votes of the other four members. That seems to me to be depriving the Secretary of the Treasury of authority and control over national funds that is not wise in itself and which may become an extremely dangerous precedent.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the last suggestion offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] shows the value of debate in the Senate. I gained the impression from his remarks that he was totally opposed to this section. I now find that he is not, and I am very glad that he is not. I wish to direct his attention——

Mr. NELSON. I would not be opposed to the section, if the Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, if it were left discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury; but to make it mandatory, to make him obey the orders of the Federal farm-loan board whenever they say to him "You must dish out the money"—to that I object. If you will leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury that will be a different matter. Then he could look after the welfare of the Government and the condition of the Treasury and furnish the money required as he saw fit.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is now practically under his control, because the security furnished, the farm-loan bonds or other collateral, must be to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and, with that provision, it seemed to the committee that there would be sufficient safeguards; but I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and also the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

It seemed to me personally that the farm-loan board would have a much better knowledge of the actual conditions of the land banks than would the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is an official whose time is very fully occupied and who might require payments to be made at a time that would embarrass the banks, so that the deposit would in the end do more injury than good. However, I think there is force in what the Senator from Colorado says, and I will therefore ask unanimous consent, on page 74, line 18, after the word "authorized," to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "and directed"; and at the top of page 75, lines 2 and 3, by striking out the words "Federal farm-loan board" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] called the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to a phrase occurring in line 12, on page 40, and suggested its elimination. I refer to the words in that line, "some peculiar local conditions." I think it would improve the expression if the word "some" was eliminated from the provision.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "some," in line 12, on page 40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to say further that so far as the postal-savings funds are concerned, and the provision of the bill which permits them to be invested in farm-loan bonds, that provision is purely permissive; it does not require the trustees of the Postal Savings System to invest in them; and I feel myself that that would be a very valuable provision of the bill, and one which might properly be availed of. Although I know that the Post Office Department is opposed to it, I think the Post Office Department is wrong as to that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 33. I was away when an amendment on that page was agreed to if, indeed, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. CURTIS. To the amendment between lines 12 and 20. I wish to suggest that after the word "taxes" the words "liens and judgments" be inserted. It seems to me that the property ought to be properly cleared of liens and judgments.

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, a lien is in many States a personal lien, and judgments frequently have nothing to do with a mortgage, and, in my opinion, "taxes or assessments" cover the ground fully.

Mr. CURTIS. Liens in our State are liens for improvements. If a man erects a building and fails to pay for material or construction charges, a mechanic's lien is filed against the property, which applies to all the land upon which the building is erected.

Mr. HOLLIS. There must be all sorts of liens in the Senator's State, such as a bailor's lien or a boarding-house keeper's lien. The word "lien" must cover a great many things that we do not want in this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. What I had reference to was liens on real estate.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; but the Senator did not state that in his suggestion. I think the addition of the words suggested would uselessly encumber the varbiage, without adding anything to it. I think "taxes and assessments" cover it.

Mr. CURTIS. I doubt that very much; but, if the Senator in charge of the bill is satisfied, I have no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think there are States where, under the statute, a material man's lien or a mechanic's lien takes precedence of a mortgage.

Mr. THOMAS. Upon the land or upon the structure?

Mr. CLAPP. Upon the land, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. And upon the structure. So far as my State is concerned, it covers both.

Mr. HOLLIS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CLAPP. It seems to me that it goes without any question that there should be a safeguard as to liens of that kind.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, it should be better stated than merely by the use of the word "liens," because "liens" might include something that would not run against the land.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, a lien upon the property can not include anything that is not a claim against the property, and it seems to me anything that could ripen into a claim against the property ought to be provided for.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there might be inserted, before the word "taxes," the words "liens against the land," so as to read "liens against the land, taxes, or assessments not paid when due."

Mr. HOLLIS. I get the idea, and if that may be passed now I will draft a provision which I think will cover it.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

Mr. HOLLIS. Now that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is here, I desire to call his attention to the provision on page 22, at the end of line 22, concerning which I told him I would suggest an amendment. I move, Mr. President, that there be inserted on page 22, at the end of line 22, after the word "refused," the words "and the cash accompanying the application shall be returned to the applicants without deduction." I think that is what the Senator had in mind.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the amendment which I suggested.

Mr. HOLLIS. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I did not know that the other two amendments in the same connection had been agreed to. It seems to me that they ought to be treated in the same way, as suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The money ought to be returned if the applicant for a mortgage fails to secure it. In the case of loan companies, if an application is turned down they do not retain anything from him. He must furnish his own abstracts. There is provision in this bill for the employment of lawyers to examine abstracts; they are to be paid so much a year; they are not to be paid so much for each abstract they examine; and if the loan is turned down, surely the 5 per cent advanced by the applicant should be returned to him without any deductions whatever. Therefore, I think the same amendment which has just now been agreed to should be agreed to in other parts of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest that it should be provided that the money could be returned to the applicant unconditionally.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, unfortunately Senators are treating this bill as if there were some fund somewhere that did not belong to anyone which could be dipped into and turned over to some intended borrower so that he would not have to pay anything. Every dollar that is paid out in that way has to come out of somebody, and the rules and regulations should be such that a man who has expense incurred for his benefit should pay for it. Assume the case of a man who has a bad title to his land and who wants to get that title cleared. He wants the opinion of a lawyer on it, and he comes up and makes a gamble at the expense of the association, so that they will look it up for him and he will pay nothing for it. Sometimes it costs $100 or $200 to clear a title, and if a man has a title of that sort he ought to pay for clearing it up himself. For myself I can not accept the amendment, but it will have to be voted on at some time when it comes up. I do not think we ought to try to vote on anything this afternoon, because so few are present.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator has said, I wish to say that there is a leeway of 1 per cent paid into the fund that is to be used to pay all these expenses. The term "expenses" includes the employment of lawyers by the year; and if they are paid out of this general fund of 1 per cent, why should the owner of the property be compelled to pay such expense?

Mr. HOLLIS. Because that fund of 1 per cent——

Mr. CURTIS. Then, another thing. It is not reasonable to suppose that a man would apply for a loan simply to have his abstract of title passed upon by this association. If he applies for a loan under this bill, he applies for it in good faith; he wants it so as to buy a piece of property, or he wants it to make improvements upon a farm which he owns and upon which he lives and which he is going to cultivate, and, therefore, there can be nothing in the suggestion of the Senator that a man is simply doing it to get his title perfected. If he had a bad title he would not apply, because he would know that an application would be useless.

Mr. HOLLIS. He would not if he had to pay for having it looked up, but if he thought it might be good he would take the chance if somebody else had to pay it.

This 1 per cent is not lying around loose so that people may have certain expenses paid out of it if they are not entitled to that privilege. This 1 per cent is there for the benefit of the members of the system; and if one man gets more than his share of it, there is so much less for all the rest. The man for whose benefit it becomes necessary to spend the money is the man who should pay it.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator that the 1 per cent is not lying around loose. None of it is, and none of it should be; but the trouble with this measure is going to be that the 1 per cent will not come within one-tenth of paying the expenses.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is a very alarming statement. If it is going to cost 10 per cent a year to carry on this system, I sincerely hope, if the Senator has that idea, that he will not vote for the bill; and I suspect he will not. Certainly I should not if I thought it was going to cost 2 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. You have allowed in this bill $100,000 for organization expenses, which is much less than the cost of establishing the Federal reserve banking system, and yet the report shows that it cost to put in operation the Federal reserve banks $493,960.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me where he got those figures? My information is that it cost very much less than that, and I think the Senator must have obtained the wrong figures.

Mr. CURTIS. I have the official report of the board giving these figures.

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, what does it say about the figures?

Mr. CURTIS. It says the organization expenses amounted to $493,960.

Mr. HOLLIS. Covering what period?

Mr. CURTIS. The organization of the system.

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, covering what period? They are still organizing.

Mr. CURTIS. The 12 Federal reserve banks are already organized, and have been organized since November, 1914.

Mr. HOLLIS. But that must cover the full period, for they have not yet finished their organization.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me give you the remainder of the figures; that is the point to which I want to call the Senator's attention.

Mr. HOLLIS. That has no bearing on this case. There were 7,500 banks which had to be coordinated and brought together, while all the farm-loan board has got to do is to establish 12 land banks. If the Senator does not think the amount is high enough, I hope he will move to amend it and make it higher, and I will accept the amendment; but it is not going to cost any $400,000 to launch this system.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us go a little further and see what it will cost. There is provision for an issue of bonds greater in amount than the currency issued under the Federal Reserve System, and yet the issuing of the Federal-reserve-bank notes cost $804,705. The furniture and equipment for the 12 banks cost $284,600; the salaries of the officers and employees of the Federal Reserve Board alone cost $108,650 last year.

Mr. HOLLIS. The trouble is that the Senator is talking about something else than the matter in hand. He is referring to a system calling for larger salaries and a greater personnel; but all that has no reference to starting 12 land banks. That has to do with——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. Either the Senator yields to me or he does not. If he does not, I will sit down.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. The figures the Senator has given deal with 7,500 national banking associations and the expense of coordinating them and getting them together under 12 great Federal reserve banks. That has no relation whatsoever to the plan proposed under the pending bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I venture to say there will be more people employed in the city of Washington under the farm-loan board than are employed under the Federal Reserve Bank Board for secretaries, stenographers, and other help in the office here in Washington.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I will call the Senator's attention, if he will allow me, to the fact that this bill provides for an independent new bureau in the Treasury Department in addition to the officials who will be required by the land banks.

Mr. CURTIS. And with salaries for members of the board to start with at $10,000 each, or $40,000 in all. Then, in addition, there will be bank examiners, and you will have 10 examiners under this bill where there is one under the Federal Reserve Banking System. The bank examiners last year were paid under the Federal Reserve System $396,000, and the ordinary expenses of the 12 Federal reserve banks last year were $1,677,639, making the total expense from November, 1914, to December 31, 1915, $3,765,544. The earnings of these banks since their organization have been $2,130,610. Now, there is provided by this bill an organization that will exceed beyond description the organization under the reserve banks; there will be lawyers galore for every bank and every neighborhood, to examine abstracts and pass upon titles. There will be examiners to be sent out, as the bill provides that one or two may be sent out. Then you provide for an examination by three commissioners. They must be paid, and when you pay the expense—talk about money lying around! There will not be any of it lying around.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. The Senator has either read some other bill or he has a nightmare, because the things he describes are not in this bill. He started to discuss the Federal Reserve Board. That did not throw very much light on the subject; but now he is discussing something else that is not in the bill at all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have read this bill line for line, and if the Senator says that what I say is not contained in this bill he had better take it home and read it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I will tell him that it is not in the bill, and I have read the bill and drafted most of it, and I know what is in it. There is no provision in it to have three commissioners paid for appraising the land. It is done by the local loan committee, and those men serve without pay.

Mr. CURTIS. The three examiners serve without pay?

Mr. HOLLIS. There are no three examiners in the bill. There is an appraisal committee, a loan committee, and they serve without pay.

Mr. CURTIS. The three must sign?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; they must.

Mr. CURTIS. When they send in their application, signed by those three, then the board must send an examiner to examine that land, and the board may send two examiners.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is not three commissioners who are obliged to examine the land and be paid. That is what I called the Senator's attention to.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not believe, or did not believe—of course, I take the Senator's word for it——

Mr. HOLLIS. Well, I will show him in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS (continuing). That these commissioners were required to serve without pay. I read the provision that they must sign the report, and I called the attention of the Senate to it two or three days ago; and, also, I think, in answer to a question from the Senator from Iowa, called attention to the fact that the examiners appointed by the board, one or two, must go out and examine this property. Surely they do not go for nothing.

Mr. HOLLIS. They are paid—one of them.

Mr. CURTIS. They are paid?

Mr. HOLLIS. One is sent, and one report is made. It may be referred to one or more, but in most cases it would be referred to one. That is found on page 48. The three members of the loan committee serve without pay.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I just happened to turn to page 5 accidentally:

> The Federal farm loan board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board.

I referred to those people. They must be paid, and if they do the work you will not get along with as few as the Federal Reserve Board now gets along with.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is the Senator's opinion. He is evidently hostile to the bill, and he will undoubtedly do as Gov. Herrick did—conjure up all the nightmares he can. It was a very common thing, when the Federal reserve act was under consideration here, to have it criticized in that way on that side of the Chamber; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the earnings of the Federal reserve banks have absolutely no relation to their value. When they are not needed, their earnings will be small; when they are needed, their earnings will be large. They are to act as reserve banks for the safety of the country's financial policies, and not for the purpose of earning profits for anybody. They were not so intended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I know they were not so intended; and in order to give that expensive system to the people you wiped out the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, which has been used by this administration to prevent at least two panics, and which has more than paid its expenses. The tax levied upon the issue of currency under that act returned to the Treasury over a million dollars profit; and now you have put in operation this Federal reserve act, which has cost the Government more than it has brought in.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Vreeland-Aldrich Act was absolutely impracticable. It could not be used and never was used until the Democratic administration amended it so that it was practicable. It was only used because the Federal reserve act had not gotten into operation, and it was necessary to use it temporarily until it got into operation. If the Senator thinks the Republican Party performed any service to the country in passing the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, I call his attention to the fact that we never used it until the Democratic administration amended it.

Mr. CURTIS. Because there was no need to use it. The condition of the Government was such that it was not required. If we had some good Republican legislation upon the statute books to-day, it would not be required now and would not have been since it was passed. The first time it was needed was in 1913, when the awful effects of the new tariff bill were being felt by this country; and that measure was used, as I said, by the Secretary of the Treasury to relieve the conditions, and he said it did relieve the conditions. Then, when the war broke out, it was used again, and currency was issued under it and by reason of it after the Federal reserve bank law was written into law and after it had been put in operation. In other words, currency was issued under the Vreeland-Aldrich Act until February, 1915.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. I was a member of the Banking and Currency Committee. I was present when the act was amended. I know why it was amended, and I can give him the dates. There was never any effort to issue any currency under the Vreeland-Aldrich Act until the war broke out in Europe on the 1st of August, 1914. On the 4th day of August, 1914, the act was amended so as to make it workable, and currency was then issued under it. At that time the Federal reserve banks had not been formed. They were not formed until December 1 following, and it was therefore necessary to fix up the Vreeland-Aldrich Act so as to make it efficacious. There never will be any occasion to use it again, because the Federal reserve act is now in full force.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury says, in his report for 1913, that there was danger of a panic, and in order to relieve the situation he issued $500,000,000 of currency under that act.

Mr. HOLLIS. Does the Senator really believe that?

Mr. CURTIS. It is true.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator was never more mistaken in his life. That currency was engraved and printed, but not a dollar of it was issued.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, that is what I am going to say. He says he notified the banks that it was ready, and then he closes by saying that the very fact that he made the announcement that the $500,000,000 was ready for issue restored confidence in the country. The Secretary says, in his report for 1913, that "so completely effective was this action that none of the $500,000,000 of currency was applied for by the banks." That is what the Secretary of the Treasury says in his report for 1913.

Mr. HOLLIS. They must have been very foolish bankers, because none of them ever applied for a dollar of it until it was made possible to do it—never.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I am a little surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire should make the statement he has. There was no occasion to use the Vreeland-Aldrich currency that had been printed and was in the vaults of the Treasury of the United States until the breaking out of the war. It is true that the act was amended. It was amended so as to extend the life of the act; and if the war had not broken out, or if the country had not gotten into financial difficulties that required the use of emergency currency from some other cause, it never would have been used at the time that it was. But nobody can deny that the Vreeland-Aldrich Act did prevent the greatest panic in this country that could possibly have happened; and if the Vreeland-Aldrich Act had not been on the statute books at the time there would have been the greatest panic in this country that this country had ever experienced.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has fallen into just the error that he has been led into by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have not fallen into any error.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Vreeland-Aldrich Act was absolutely useless, and not a dollar's worth of currency was taken out under it until it was amended on August 4, 1914; and our bankers said they never would take out any currency under it under the terms of the original act. It had to be amended and revamped and made practicable by the same men who wrote the Federal reserve act.

Mr. THOMAS. It was an emergency act.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that a certain rate of interest was lowered, and that, with the extension of the life of the act, were the only changes that were made in the act. The change of interest rate made in the act amounted to little.

Mr. THOMAS. Is not that enough?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say that was not enough. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that if the interest had remained exactly as it was originally provided in the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, it would have been used during the time that it was used. The rate of interest which was in the act at the time it was passed—6 per cent per annum on certain deferred payments—was imposed to prevent emergency currency remaining in circulation long. The interest was not changed for the use of the money for the first few months. The interest was changed for the use of the money after it had been in circulation longer than an emergency would require; and I believe that that should have been the case except in extraordinary circumstances, such as happened in 1914.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he denies that the Secretary of the Treasury in 1913 notified the banks that he had issued $500,000,000 of that currency, and it was ready for them if they needed it?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do, absolutely.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall ask consent to print in the RECORD extracts from his report of the department.

Mr. HOLLIS. Why, I called the attention of the Senator to his error. That money was never issued. It was engraved and ready to be issued if anyone called for it; but money is not issued until it is sent out and put into circulation, and not a dollar of that money was sent out and put into circulation until the act was amended. The Senator need not print anything. As quickly as he uses or understands a banking term, we will come to an understanding.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senators both say that the Secretary of the Treasury did not issue it. I agree with them as to the expression, and I doubted it at the time I read it; and so, to be exact, I quoted from the report of the department, and he says he did issue it.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then he was mistaken. We need not have anything put in the RECORD.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, I have quoted what was said. It would have been more exact had the expression "ready for issue" been used.

Mr. HOLLIS. If he said it, he was mistaken. I do not think he said it, but he may have done so. If the Senator says so, he did; but he did not mean it in the sense that the Senator probably meant it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I think this is what happened: The Treasurer took the printed currency, unsigned, from the vaults of the Treasury, and sent it to the different banks in the United States for which the currency was printed. In other words, if there was a First National Bank at Helena, Mont., the currency was printed for that bank, but it is not issued until it is signed. It is not issued until it is put into circulation. But I do think that is what the Secretary of the Treasury did. At that early time he did send the engraved currency, unsigned, to the different banks for which it had been engraved.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my recollection of the Vreeland-Aldrich bill is that preliminary to the issuance of circulation under it the national banks throughout the country were required to form local organizations for the purpose of marshaling their securities, so to speak, under the terms of the bill and obtaining the circulation in their collective capacity to be used for such distribution, and that very few, if any, of those associations were ever formed. But my recollection is that at the time to which the Senators refer—I speak now of the 4th of August, 1914; my recollection does not permit me to speak with reference to the subject of the controversy between the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from New Hampshire—immediately upon the outbreak of the war, and I think on the day of the declaration of war between Germany and England, the 4th day of August, 1914, the conditions were such, not only in the United States but all over the world, as to require prompt action for the purpose of averting a possible financial catastrophe. As a result the Committee on Banking and Currency reported and the Senate immediately took up and enacted the measure reducing the rates of interest required for this emergency currency, shortly after which it became available, and did meet and overcome the conditions which were then so very ominous and which needed immediate attention.

That is my recollection about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Colorado is right as to the organization of these local associations. After the country was divided into district associations the bankers of those particular districts did not think it was necessary to organize at once. Under the law they could do it quickly at any time an occasion arose, and they simply waited until there was an occasion. It is true that after the war broke out these local or district associations were effected, and the application for the emergency currency was made.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, is the rural-credits bill still before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is supposed to be.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it is, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question with regard to section 34, concerning which a good deal has been said recently. I do not understand the last sentence, which reads:

The aggregate of all sums so advanced or deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in any fiscal year shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000 at any one time.

Just what will that enable the Secretary of the Treasury to do?

Mr. HOLLIS. It will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to advance sums which at any one time total not exceeding $6,000,000. That is, he may advance it and have it repaid, and then advance it again. He can do that so long as the aggregate of the sums advanced at any one time in any year does not exceed $6,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. But he can continue that until he has one hundred millions in the land banks, if he so desires?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not to exceed six millions in any one year; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But collectively up to one hundred millions.

Mr. HOLLIS. That might be; if he loaned six millions and took it back this month, and then loaned six millions and took it back next month, that would be seventy-two millions in a year; but the aggregate amount issued at any one time in any one year could not exceed $6,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. That seems to me not so clear. It is perfectly clear that he can not advance the sum of more than $6,000,000 at any one time; but I can not in my own mind determine just what effect the words "in any fiscal year" have as they relate to the words "at any one time."

Mr. HOLLIS. Is the Senator trying to get my idea, or is he trying to point out the infirmity in the language?

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to know what the Senator from New Hampshire is really trying to accomplish.

Mr. HOLLIS. I assumed that was so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am trying to give to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to grant relief in any fiscal year up to the amount of $6,000,000 at any one time, including all the different land banks—that it shall not exceed $6,000,000 for any one year. Does the Senator get my idea now?

Mr. CUMMINS. I get it, I think. May I repeat it, to be sure?

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, if the Senator gets the idea, to what does he object in the language employed?

Mr. CUMMINS. As I understand, the Senator wants to give the Secretary of the Treasury authority to advance not more than $6,000,000 to all the land banks in any fiscal year.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is it.

Mr. CUMMINS. And, of course, he can advance the same amount the next year, even though the former amount be not paid.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not, of course, criticizing that policy. I only say, in response to the explanation of the Senator from New Hampshire—for I understand him perfectly—that I do not believe his bill so provides.

Mr. HOLLIS. That was why I asked the Senator the question. You see, if you leave out "at any one time," the Secretary might have advanced five million and had it paid back, and then advance five million more, and that would be in the aggregate ten million that had been outstanding; but the words "at any one time" fix it as the total amount outstanding at any one time.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator means that the amounts which are owing from the land banks to the Treasury, and which are advanced in any one fiscal year, shall not exceed $6,000,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand the view of the Senator, but I do not believe the bill so provides.

Mr. HOLLIS. Now, may I ask the Senator what he thought it meant? I should like to know what the distinguished Senator thought, from reading the words, that they did mean.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not understand what the words "at any one time" meant or what they qualified.

Mr. HOLLIS. Will the Senator suggest some amendment that will make it clear? I very much desire to make that thought clear in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be glad to do so at some future time. I have not attempted to modify the text of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Do I understand from this amendment that it is the intention of the committee that at no time shall there be more than $6,000,000 advanced by the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. HOLLIS. Not at all. It means that there shall not be more than $6,000,000 advanced at any one time, outstanding at any one time, in any fiscal year. There may be $6,000,000 each year.

Mr. SMOOT. And the second year there could be $12,000,000, and the third year there may be $18,000,000, and so on?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it seems to me that striking out the words "at any one time" would make the meaning a great deal plainer; the provision would then read in this way:

The aggregate of all sums so advanced or deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in any fiscal year shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000.

Mr. HOLLIS. The trouble with that, as I have said, is that if he advances $6,000,000 in January and it is paid back in February, then if he should loan $6,000,000 in March the aggregate would be the sum of the $6,000,000 advanced in January and the $6,000,000 advanced in March, and it would be $12,000,000, and would not be permitted unless you had the words "at any one time" to qualify it.

On this particular clause, like all other clauses of the bill, I have no pride of opinion. I am willing to put in anything to make it clear, especially to so learned a Senator as the Senator from Iowa. When he does not see at a glance what it means, I feel that it should be redrafted; and I hope that the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Utah will try their hands at that. I tried my hand at it a long while, and this was the result.

I ask that the further reading of the bill be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 16, after the word "State," it is proposed to insert the word "municipal," so as to read:

That every Federal land bank and every national farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 20, after the word "banks" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "and farm-loan bonds issued," so as to read:

First mortgages executed to Federal land banks, or to joint-stock land banks, and farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 25, after the word "State," it is proposed to insert a comma and the word "municipal," so as to read:

And as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have in mind proposing an amendment striking out section 29; and I rise now to ask whether the adoption of these amendments in the section and the passing of the section will prevent me, at some future time, from making a motion of that kind?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it is the understanding that we are now reading the bill to adopt the committee amendments, but after that is done the bill will be open to amendment in any particular by any Senator. I shall not try to raise any point of order. I think that is so. Probably the committee amendments ought to be perfected before they are adopted, and I have tried to do that in each instance; but, so far as I am concerned, I shall not raise any point of order. I should be sorry to have the Senator offer his amendment this afternoon, because there are so few Senators present. We shall have some votes on this bill next week.

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend to accompany my amendment with some suggestions, and I should be very sorry to be compelled to do it this afternoon.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think the Senator will have every opportunity next week.

Mr. SMOOT. So that there may be no question about it. I will ask that after the committee amendments are adopted we may pass the section as not being agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the pending amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 67, to strike out:

Farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Investment in farm-loan bonds," on page 67, line 5, to change the number of the section from 31 to 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 9, before the word "bank," to strike out "member," so as to read:

Any bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy or sell farm-loan bonds issued under the authority of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, at that point it has been suggested—and I have no doubt the Senate will concur in the suggestion—that the investment in these farm-loan bonds of fiduciary and trust funds should be limited to farm-loan bonds issued by the cooperative banks, the Federal land banks. I therefore move that, on page 67, lines 6 and 7, the words "or joint-stock land banks" be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "or joint-stock land banks," so that if amended it will read:

That farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act by Federal land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Then, on line 10, after the word "issued," I move to insert "by Federal land banks."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 10, after the word "issued," it is proposed to insert "by Federal land banks," so that, if amended, it will read:

Any bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy or sell farm-loan bonds issued by Federal land banks under the authority of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would not that be a contradiction of the line just before it, where it says "any bank of the Federal Reserve System"?

Mr. HOLLIS. That means the national banks and Federal reserve banks—not of this system but of the Federal Reserve System. It merely gives them authority to invest in these bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 11, after the word "act," to insert a semicolon and the following words: "any member bank of said system may accept time drafts against a deposit of such bonds as security; acceptances of a member bank thus made, or the direct obligations of such bank maturing within 60 days, when accompanied by farm-loan bonds as collateral security not less in face value than the amount of such direct obligation, shall be eligible for discount by the Federal reserve bank of its district."

Mr. HOLLIS. There, again, on line 15, after the word "by," I move to insert the word "such," so as to carry on the class indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 15, after the word "by," it is proposed to insert the word "such," so as to read:

Any member bank of said system may accept time drafts against a deposit of such bonds as security; acceptances of a member bank thus made, or the direct obligations of such bank maturing within 60 days, when accompanied by such farm-loan bonds as collateral security not less in face value than the amount of such direct obligation, shall be eligible for discount by the Federal reserve bank of its district.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 18, to insert:

Section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositaries for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes" (36 U. S. Stat. L., 814), shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new paragraph at the close of said section, to read as follows: "Federal farm-loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm-loan board and issued by any Federal land bank may be purchased by the trustees, in lieu of United States bonds or other securities, for the purpose of investing postal savings deposits under the provisions of this section. Whenever funds shall be withdrawn from postal savings depositaries for investment, the trustees are hereby authorized to purchase Federal farm-loan bonds in the open market or from any Federal land bank authorized to issue the same: Provided, That in no case shall such farm-loan bonds be purchased at more than par nor shall more than 30 per cent of the postal savings deposits be invested at any one time in farm-loan bonds as herein provided."

Mr. HOLLIS. The amendment includes postal savings and undoubtedly will be controverted. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "State legislation," on page 68, line 16, to change the number of the section from "32" to "31."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Examinations," on page 69, line 23, to change the number of the section from "33" to "32."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Penalties," on page 70, line 15, to change the number of the section from "34" to "33."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 22 on page 73.

Mr. HOLLIS. In order to complete the meaning, in line 9, page 73, after the word "credits," I move to insert the word "thereof," so as to read:

Or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. After the word "decree," in line 11, page 73, I move to insert the word "thereof," so as to read:

Mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 15, to insert:

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS.

SEC. 34. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, upon the request of the Federal farm-loan board, to make advances or deposits for the temporary use of any Federal land bank, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Such Federal land bank shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate of indebtedness for any such advance or deposit, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, to be secured by farm-loan bonds or other collateral, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any such certificate shall be redeemed and paid by such land bank at the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The aggregate of all sums so advanced or deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in any fiscal year shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000 at any one time.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Dissolution and appointment of receivers," on page 75, line 9, after the word "section," to strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "twenty-eight," so as to read:

SEC. 35. That upon becoming satisfied that any national farm-loan association has refused to make good defaulted mortgages, as required by section 28 of this act, or upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any such association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description whatever when due, and is in default, the Federal farm-loan board may forthwith declare such association insolvent and appoint a receiver and require of him such bond and security as it deems proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk an amendment. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 6, insert:

To exercise general supervisory authority over the Federal land bank in national farm-loan associations and the joint-stock land banks herein provided for.

Mr. POMERENE. That is a provision similar to the provision of the Federal reserve act, giving to the board general supervisory power.

Mr. SMOOT. I see no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. On page 46, line 6, I move to strike out the words "and paid in cash" and to insert in lieu thereof:

One-half thereof paid in cash and the balance subject to call by the board of directors.

I will state the reason for this amendment. These are not banks of deposits and they probably would not be able to invest all their funds at once. It would, it seems to me, be a very unwise policy to have all this amount of money on hand without being able to invest it. So my thought was that if one-half was paid in cash and the balance subject to call, it would meet all the requirements of safety and it would avoid the necessity of having so much money on hand uninvested.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the principle of the Senator's amendment is absolutely correct; but, as I understand it, the capital required being only $250,000, the committee thought with that small amount of capital they ought to have it all. Would it not be better, I will ask the Senator, if his amendment is adopted, to have the capital stock increased to $500,000, and then 50 per cent of it could be paid and they would have $250,000 on hand?

Mr. POMERENE. I think this might be said in answer to the Senator from Utah. These banks established in a State with a population exceeding 2,000,000 are required to have $500,000 of capital. My thought was that in smaller States, probably in smaller communities, it might be desired to organize some of the smaller banks; and as they do not have the means of making money that the ordinary banking institution has we ought not to require them to have too much money on hand.

Mr. SMOOT. Only $125,000 to begin with in a large district would be a very little amount.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to increasing the capital stock to $500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he does not think if this amendment is agreed to the capital stock ought to be increased to $500,000?

Mr. HOLLIS. I feel that this is a matter of considerable importance, and if the Senator from Ohio will agree to that course, we will defer it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection. I am going to offer the following amendment as supplementary to what I have presented. It is to provide that in the event of the adoption of this amendment none of these joint-stock banks shall be authorized to issue any bonds at all until their entire capital stock is paid up. I think that should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment I send to the desk may follow on line 10, page 46.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 10, insert "No joint-stock land bank shall issue or sell any farm-loan bonds until after the capital stock shall be fully paid up."

Mr. HOLLIS. In view of the fact that the Senate has finished the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments and that no other Senator is prepared to speak this afternoon, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 421).

Mr. GRONNA. For the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 10385) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and I ask that it be printed and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10385) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 12, 15, 23, 30, 31, 32, 38, 40, 43, 44, 45, 49, 69, 73, 77, 88, 91, 92, 100, 108, 117, 118, 119, 120, 123, 133, 135, 147, 149, and 157.

O Lord God, our heavenly Father, let the light of heaven shine in upon our souls, that our minds may be clarified, our hearts strengthened, and our way made clear, that we may quit ourselves like men in all the trying circumstances of life and wear the seal of approval upon our hearts. To-day, to-morrow, and all through the journey of life is the day of salvation. Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "that" in the pending amendment and insert the matter which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

During the reading,

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How far has the Clerk read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read to about the middle of section 6.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading after the Clerk has finished section 7, because the remainder of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota simply applies to changes made to conform——

Mr. ANDERSON. If the Clerk will read to the end of section 7, I will then ask unanimous consent to have the remainder of the amendment printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Clerk finishes section 7, if either gentleman desires to do so he may ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading. The Clerk will continue to read, to the end of section 7.

The Clerk read to the end of section 7.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the amendment, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the amendment and that the whole amendment be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that" in the pending amendment and insert the following:

"This act shall be known by the short title of the 'United States grain-grades act.'

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish as soon as may be after the enactment hereof standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as in his judgment the usages of the trade may warrant and permit, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to alter or modify such standards whenever the necessities of the trade may require. In promulgating the standards, or any alteration or modification of such standards, the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same shall become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

"SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 3½. Whenever, by reason of climatic or other conditions, any large quantity of grain shall be ineligible to grade under the standards fixed pursuant to section 2 the Secretary may establish supplemental or commercial grades for such grain, and such supplemental or commercial grades may be promulgated upon such notice as the Secretary shall deem proper.

"SEC. 4. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country, any such grain which is sold or offered for sale by grade unless the grain shall have been inspected and graded under this act and the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States: Provided, That any such grain not sold or offered for sale by grade may be sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce by sample or by type, or under any name, description, or designation which is not false or misleading, and which name, description, or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard of the United States: Provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may be shipped to or through any place at which an inspector is located, subject, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to be inspected at the place to which shipped, or at the place through which shipped for inspection, and subject, further, to the right of appeal from such inspection, as provided in section 6 of this act: And provided further, That any such grain sold or offered for sale by any of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may, upon compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, be shipped without inspection from a place at which there is no inspector to a place at which there is no such inspector, subject to the right of either party to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine and certify the true grade thereof. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe or in any way refer to any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That no person shall represent that any grain shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of a grade fixed in the official grain standards other than as shown by a certificate therefor issued in compliance with this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act and which has been certified to conform to any grade fixed therefor in such official grain standards or which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved and to the inspector thereof, if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly represented to conform to a specified grade or has been sold or offered for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading he may publish his findings.

"SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain which has been sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grade, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary and to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. In every such case the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge and assess, and cause to be collected, a reasonable fee in amount to be fixed by him, which fee shall be refunded if the appeal is sustained. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States in all suits between such parties, or their privies, as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings."

Strike out all of section 7 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no inspector shall certify that any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of any grade, unless said grade be one of the grades fixed in the United States official grain standards, nor shall any such inspector use any other standard than that established under this act to determine such grade.

"Whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given, the Secretary shall determine that any inspector is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly or by any other standard than is authorized by this act, when such standard has been fixed and established, or has issued any false certificate of inspection, or has accepted any money or other consideration directly or indirectly for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has knowingly violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder, the Secretary may issue an order prohibiting such inspector thereafter from inspecting or grading grain for interstate or foreign commerce and from issuing any certificate of inspection thereon.

"Every certificate of grade issued by an inspector under this act shall state that the grain to which it refers has been inspected and graded in accordance with the United States official grain standard."

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of sections 4 or 7 of this act, or any inspector licensed under this act who shall knowingly or carelessly inspect or grade improperly any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or shall knowingly or carelessly give any false certificate of inspection or grade, or shall accept money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, and any person who shall improperly influence or attempt to improperly influence any such inspector in the performance of his duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or be punished by both fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or be punished by both fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 11. That the word 'person' wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person.

"SEC. 11½. The term 'inspector' as used in this act shall mean a person authorized or employed by a State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, or association to inspect or grade grain.

"SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including rent and the employment of such persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire recognition on his amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire recognition, but I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] desires to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the request I made yesterday for unanimous consent, that the remainder of the time for debate under the five-minute rule on this amendment be devided, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] who is a member of the subcommittee, may control half of the remaining time for that side and that I may control half the remaining time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the time for debate under the five-minute rule on this amendment, which is 80 minutes, be controlled one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to have at least seven minutes on this amendment in opposition to it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman. I presume, however, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] will have no objection to yielding to him.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am opposed to the amendment. I will take time from either side. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be notified when I have occupied 10 minutes, if I occupy that much time.

The amendment which I have offered goes only to section 7 of the amendment, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to license persons who may be found competent to grade and classify grain under this act.

There are in the country now a number of grain-inspection systems in the different States. These systems may be divided into two general classes. One of these classes is that in which the inspectors of grain are appointed by the boards of trade or grain associations representing the buyers of grain. The other is what is known as the State inspection system, such as exists in the State which I have the honor to represent in part, in the State of Washington, in the State of Oklahoma, in the State of Missouri, and in several other States.

These State systems have grown up through the years, the one in my State having been in operation some thirty-odd years. The fundamental difference between the State system and the board of trade system is this: Under the State system the inspector represents the State. He neither represents the buyer nor the seller. He is a State officer, and the certificate which he issues is a State certificate. In the case of the board of trade inspection the inspector represents the board of trade, and the board of trade represents the buyer. The purpose of the State system is to separate the inspection from the interest of the buyer, the seller, the elevator man, or any other person interested in the grading or standardization of the grain and put the inspection squarely under the disinterested authority of the State.

Now, the grading of grain is a very technical subject. Perhaps it would not be out of place for me to take five minutes to outline the system that exists in Minnesota and other States for grain inspection.

At the terminals in Minneapolis and Duluth there are hundreds of cars of grain arriving during the day and night. Sometimes at the yard there are as many as a thousand cars of grain to be inspected during a single day. These cars are run onto special tracks, and as soon as it is daylight the samplers, who represent the State and are State officers, bonded to the State, come into the yard to take samples from the cars of grain. Ahead of them go the State sealers. They break the seals, take the number of the car, and the number of the seal, which is reported to the State grain-inspection department. After the sealer has broken the seals the sampler who represents the State goes into the car, and, with an instrument known as a probe—a long, brass tube—he takes at least seven probes in the car, and these are mixed together on a cloth provided for that purpose and then placed in a sack, and constitute the sample upon which the State grain-inspection service determines the grade. Into the sack goes a little card, upon which is the number of the car, the date, and the name of the sampler. There is absolutely nothing on the card to indicate from what point the grain came or who its owner may be.

These sacks are taken to a large room, where the State inspectors do their work. Each one of the inspectors has a large table set up against a large window, having the character of a skylight, and there, by means of certain mechanical appliances, together with his judgment of grain, he determines the grade of that grain. He places on the card the grade, and if it falls below No. 1 or is rejected or is classed as no grade, the reason why it is so classed and the amount of dirt in the grain per bushel or dockage.

If the shipper or purchaser is dissatisfied with the grade fixed by the inspector, he may ask for a reinspection. If he asks for a reinspection, the sample is reinspected by the chief inspector or his deputy. After the chief inspector or his deputy reinspects the grain, if the purchaser or seller is still dissatisfied, he may appeal to the State board of grain appeals. This board consists of three members appointed by the governor, and they have the final say as to the grade of the grain and the amount of the dockage.

Now, under this bill no provision is made for sealers—men who may unseal the car and seal it up again under the authority of the Federal Government. No provision is made for taking any sample of any kind. The men appointed and licensed under this act are in no sense Federal employees. They must be either the employees of the State or the employees of the board of trade.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Why not explain to the House just how these inspectors are appointed?

Mr. ANDERSON. The inspectors under this bill are appointed by the State, by the board of trade, or possibly by the Federal Government. But the provision to which I have referred authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to license these inspectors, and his control over them, of course, is established by his power to license, to refuse to license, or to revoke the license.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Under this bill, as presented by the committee, would there be any change whatever in Minnesota, so far as the inspectors are concerned?

Mr. ANDERSON. I hope not, but I fear there will be. This bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to license any person as inspector. Suppose he licenses somebody not authorized as an inspector by the State of Minnesota? That person may under this act inspect grain for interstate commerce, and we will have a conflict of authority and of certificates.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The gentleman wants to be perfectly fair, and he is well acquainted with this bill. Isn't it true that the Secretary of Agriculture under this bill has no right whatever, under any circumstances, to appoint any man to make a primary inspection of grain?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so. I think under the language of this section, for which I have offered a substitute, the Secretary of Agriculture may license anybody who is competent to inspect grain.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. ANDERSON. Whether he is authorized under the laws of the State or not. If a license means anything, it means the authority to do an act which is otherwise unlawful.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has used 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. For a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know that the inspectors of States are all under bond, and if they grade grain at one place and it turns out at the destination that it is another grade that inspector is liable under his bond for the difference between the two standards?

Mr. ANDERSON. I know that. I know that every employee is bonded to the State for the faithful performance of his duty. In Minnesota all of the inspectors have been in the service more than 10 years and half of them more than 20 years.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. While it is true that this bill provides that anyone who is competent may be appointed as an inspector, is it not also true that the preference shall be given to State inspectors already in the service?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true; a preference is given to the State inspectors; but we must judge this law not from what we hope the Agricultural Department will do under it but by what it may do under it, and it may wipe out the State systems by the appointment of inspectors who are not authorized under the State laws.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not yield any further. I want to explain the amendment that I have offered. If later on I can get more time I shall be glad to yield. The situation which is now presented illustrates more forcibly than anything I can say the absolute absurdity of attempting to pass a bill of this kind under the circumstances under which we are now legislating. There is not one man in a hundred in this House who knows anything about the technical conditions to which this bill is to be applied. No man can legislate with any degree of intelligence upon any subject who does not know the technical conditions to which the bill when it finally becomes a law must of necessity be applied, and yet we can not get time to answer the legitimate questions which may be asked. The amendment which I have offered goes this far: It authorizes the Federal Government to fix a standard for grain. It leaves the State systems as they are, but provides that if an inspector under a State system fails to perform his duties in accordance with the law or to grade in accordance with the standard fixed by the Federal Government the Secretary of Agriculture may prohibit him thereafter from inspecting grain for interstate and foreign commerce. It simply provides that the inspectors under the State must grade grain to conform to the United States standard when that is once fixed, and if they fail to apply that standard fairly the Secretary of Agriculture may issue an order prohibiting them from inspecting grain for interstate and foreign commerce. The question may arise as to whether we have the power to do that. If we have the power to license, I think we have the power to prohibit in the form which I propose in my amendment.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and in fact I would like to have a little time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri to use some of his time now.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to discuss the technical details of the bill, but I shall give notice to those present that I will, when I can get consent, place in the RECORD a speech that I had the honor to deliver before the National Grain Dealers' Association, at Peoria, Ill., in which I attempted a careful analysis of this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman ask that permission now.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in connection therewith a speech that I delivered before the National Grain Dealers' Association of Peoria, Ill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object to all of these requests to extend, but I believe I did yesterday object to two or three for the purpose of showing the enormity committed by the majority in attempting to dispose of such important matters without consideration. I shall withdraw the objection I made yesterday and I will not object now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to my extending yesterday, I will not object to it to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this bill recognizes that there are two functions in grain inspection. One is purely State and the other is national in its scope and purpose. No man can pretend that the National Government has the power to go into a State and inspect grain intended purely for State commerce. Hence there must be a purely State system of inspection, but there should also be an inspection of grain which goes into interstate commerce. These two functions are separate and distinct, because each is exercised under a separate sovereignty. If it is insisted that no cooperation shall take place between State and Nation, then we must organize and maintain two distinct systems. This bill seeks to take those two systems and place them in harmony with each other. It does so by recognizing that the State shall appoint all of the inspectors and shall conduct absolutely and without any restriction whatsoever all primary inspection of grain, exactly as it is done to-day. Illinois will inspect all grain, just as that State conducts such inspection to-day, and so will Minnesota and every other State in the Nation.

The Secretary of Agriculture does not now have the power to interfere in any way with the primary inspection of grain, and he is not given that power in this bill. In every State system there is a provision for appeals from inspection to be made, and this bill seeks to take over all appellate power so far as it relates to grain in interstate commerce and vests that power exclusively in the Secretary of Agriculture. If the bill be enacted into law, this is what will happen: The States will control primary inspection, precisely as they do to-day, for all State inspection and purposes whatsoever, but with that grain which enters into interstate commerce, or which is offered for sale to enter interstate commerce, if a dispute shall arise between the buyer and seller as to the true grade of the grain that dispute will be referred to the Secretary of Agriculture for determination. That is all there is in the bill one way or the other. Permit me to say that this bill has the indorsement of the grain trade in all parts of the United States. It has been indorsed by the National Millers' Federation and by the National Grain Dealers' Association; it has been indorsed by every prominent chamber of commerce in the United States. It has the indorsement of every paper in the United States that is devoted to the grain trade. It has been indorsed by every State grain association in the United States. It has the indorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture and of all the experts in the Department of Agriculture. It has the indorsement of two subcommittees that have been appointed from the Committee on Agriculture, representing the great grain States of this Union. It has received at least two unanimous votes of the Committee on Agriculture and it has passed this House on a roll-call vote by a very much larger than two to one vote.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has it the support of the farmers' associations?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I can not state that definitely. If it has their opposition, I do not know it; but I do know this, that I have letters from some of the most prominent members of the farmers' associations in the Northwest in which they tell me that this bill takes a long step forward in the direction which they want to go. I will be fair with the gentleman and say that most of the farmers of the United States, through their associations, want absolute national inspection instead of national supervision, and the only difference in opinion between the farmers of the United States and those who framed this bill is that they—the farmers—want to go to a system of absolute national inspection, while the authors of this bill know that it is impossible to get such a bill through Congress. Every farmer who wants national inspection, however, is in favor of national supervision if he can not get the more radical step.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

The Peoria address is as follows:

PROPOSED LEGISLATION PROVIDING FOR FEDERAL SUPERVISION AND INSPECTION OF GRAIN IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

[Address of RALPH W. MOSS before the National Grain Dealers' Association, Peoria, Ill., Oct. 12, 1915.]

"Mr. President and gentlemen, men who control large business enterprises are apprehensive when legislation is proposed which affects their interests. In America, this feeling is more marked than in older countries, because her individual initiative has been given greater freedom. The best public opinion of to-day, however, is demanding that closer governmental supervision be given business activities, not in way of hostile repression, but rather of helpful organization and of friendly supervision. I am glad that your powerful association has invited so eminent authority as Senator SHERMAN to discuss this subject for your benefit. The farmer is the producer of a large share of the wealth of this great Nation. He does produce nearly all the prime necessities of life. Any condition which affects the interests of the farmer is of vital interest to all people of our Republic, because their food supply comes from the farm. Unfortunately, the farmers are the poorest organized of any of our wealth-producing classes and have, perhaps, the lowest individual initiative. It is but natural that we should seek to give to this great industrial calling the benefits of Federal supervision in the marketing of their principal products. But while I welcome this extension of Federal power and activity, I deplore the zeal which has led the Bureau of Chemistry to attempt to apply the terms of the national pure-food law to the commerce of our principal grain crops. All thoughtful men will quickly agree that legislation which is to apply to any line of commerce should be carefully considered in full and free conference with those whose business is to be affected by it. The extension of the terms of any statute so as to include scope which was not originally intended by the framers of the law has rarely given beneficial results; and I believe that I am on safe grounds when I assert that in the instance under consideration the results have been mischievous if not actually pernicious to the legitimate grain trade. Your experience with the regulations framed under this law ought to prompt your membership to earnest zeal in securing a fair statute which shall be framed especially to meet the necessities of the grain trade and which will be administered by experts chosen expressly because of their knowledge and experience in the grain trade. It is only by this method that you can secure relief from attempts to apply the pure-food law to the control of interstate commerce in grain.

"There is a well-organized and intelligently directed movement, having for its purpose the demand that the National Government shall take cognizance of the grain trade. It is desired that uniform standards of quality and condition for the principal commercial grains shall be established and declared and their integrity be guaranteed by general supervision of our interstate and foreign grain commerce. This agitation has led to extended hearings by committees of both Houses of Congress, the preparation of many bills dealing with this subject, and the passage in the House during the late session by practically a unanimous vote of House bill No. 17971, known as the Moss bill. Later this bill was favorably reported to the Senate and its passage was prevented only by the lateness of the session.

"This bill has the favorable indorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture, the representatives of your own association, of the National Millers' Federation, the Indiana Grain Dealers' Association, the principal chambers of commerce and boards of trade, national farmers' organizations, that portion of the American press which is particularly devoted to the grain trade, and of general public opinion, so far as any authorized and definite expression can be secured.

"To this general statement there must be noted two exceptions which comprise the opposition to the bill, so far as such opposition has come to my knowledge. First, the opposition of the exporters of Baltimore, New York, and Boston, so far as their organizations have spoken; and second, that very influential body of men, particularly among grain producers, who favor the more radical proposal of Government inspection as against the method of supervision which is proposed in the bill. It is to be noted that the Gulf exporters support the bill. It may also be said that many among those whose first preference is for Government inspection are heartily supporting the bill, both as a matter of expediency and also because it is a long step forward in the direction which they wish the Nation to travel. Excepting the position of the grain exporters referred to, I have observed no expression of opinion which was not to the effect that the bill would have a most salutary effect on the grain trade and will meet the criticisms which are generally directed against it at the present moment.

"There can be no hazard in the statement that legislation will be enacted speedily on this subject; and because of its position of advantage—because of the definite expressions of approval from powerful bodies among grain men—I can confidently predict that the bill which I have the honor to have introduced in Congress will be made the basis of such legislation. I feel, therefore, that an analysis of the proposals contained in the bill will be more profitable at this moment than any argument which I might be able to present in support of the bill. I feel sure that among the membership of your association the fact that the bill has been able to command the indorsement of your very able legislative representatives, Mr. Reynolds and his associates, will be accepted as conclusive that its provisions are not inimicable to your interests as a trade body. In this connection, I beg to express my personal indebtedness to Mr. Reynolds and to members of the grain trade generally for their generous cooperation in the preparation of this measure. In their various appearances before our committee and in the many private conferences which were held during the course of the bill's preparation, your representative men used their intimate knowledge of the grain trade with such courtesy and tact as to impart information freely without any appearance of dictation; and it is not much to say that the bill in its present form is much influenced by this generous cooperation among the representative grain men of the Nation. This result is a refutation of the charge that legislation affecting large business interests can not be perfected without undue antagonism from those who will be affected by its restrictions and provisions.

"The legislative proposals contained in the bill may be roughly divided into three parts. The preparation and publication of uniform standards of quality and condition of grain by the National Government; the coordination of all existing systems for grain inspection with the newly-created Federal system, and the establishment of a general supervision by the Federal Government over all grain moving in interstate and foreign commerce for the detection and publication of all fraudulent practices.

"The first proposal is to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as, in his judgment, the usages of the trade may warrant. There is no opposition to this proposal so far as it has come to my knowledge. It is universally conceded that we ought to have uniform standards in the grain trade and that we can secure them only through the action of the Federal Government. National standards can be established and enforced only by national power. Congress has been appropriating large sums annually for some years to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate these related questions and ultimately to establish such standards. It will be recalled that standards of corn have been published by the department; but the Government has no power to enforce such standards after they have been prepared and published. The fact that corn standards have not been universally adopted demonstrates the fact that mere publication or promulgation of grades by any authority, however eminent, will not work reform without effective supervision by the National Government.

"It is not necessary to question the ability or the honesty of State inspection officials. Their authority can not extend beyond State lines, and it is manifestly impossible to secure uniform grain-inspection service or the adoption and use of uniform standards by an appeal to the action of 48 independent State governments. Grain moves so freely in interstate commerce that it presents a national question and must be dealt with by the National Government. The bill vests the power of supervision in the National Government through control of interstate commerce. This power is ample and is not questioned. Personally, I have no doubt that Congress, through its grant of power to fix the standards of weights and measures, can legislate to fix standards of quality for grains; but it has been thought best to work through the interstate clause of the Constitution and thus avoid any new interpretation of constitutional powers.

"The bill seeks to control only the sale of grain when made or offered by grade. The liberty to buy and sell by sample or by type is left unabridged; sales may also be negotiated under any name or designation which is not false or misleading and which name or designation in whole or in part does not include the terms of any official grain standard. No grain can legally be sold by grade except the grade be one of the official grades designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the grain actually conforms to the requirement of the grade specified. We must agree that these are ideal conditions—that the seller must deliver exactly that which he contracts to deliver, and that the buyer will thus be given that which he has purchased. The Secretary of Agriculture is given broad administrative powers to enforce these ideal conditions and thus secure their general adoption.

"The bill does not vest the Federal Government with the power to make primary inspection of grain or to appoint grain inspectors. It seeks to establish practical cooperation between State and Nation in the work of first inspection and takes over to the National Government exclusively the determination of all appeals from the first inspection. The general work of primary inspection is left with local authorities as now constituted. This means that in those States where State inspection is now authorized by law, the State authorities will continue to appoint inspectors and to control the work of inspection. If the boards of trade and chambers of commerce appoint the inspectors, these trade bodies will continue to exercise such powers. The inspection service is left precisely where it is now vested by State law. Even if this were not desirable as a matter of expediency in securing the enactment of this legislation it would suggest itself as a matter of desirable economy in administration of intrastate and interstate commerce in grain. It is evident that the National Government can not take over the work of inspecting grain designed wholly for intrastate shipment. If there is to be no cooperation between national and local authorities in this necessary work of grain inspection, it follows that there must be maintained two separate and complete systems of grain inspection—one maintained by the State for State purposes and one by the National Government for interstate commerce.

"This would be a duplication of service and expense which can not be justified on any other grounds than that of actual necessity. If practical cooperation can be organized, good business judgment will confirm its adoption. The bill seeks to perfect such practical cooperation by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue licenses to competent persons to inspect grain for interstate shipment. If the local authorities appoint a duly licensed inspector, then such inspector would have the authority to make inspection for both State and interstate commerce. In effect, the State authorities would be compelled to appoint from the eligible list prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture or else deny to the grain in their territory—when sold by grade—entrance into interstate commerce or compel its inspection at some point where such licensed inspectors are employed. Such license is revocable by the Secretary for failure to grade grain correctly in accordance with the official grain standards of the United States or for any corruption of official integrity. Under this provision, if cooperation was maintained, each local grain inspector's authority would depend upon the joint approval of State and National authority. The State authority would appoint and the national authority would license with power to revoke.

"This license feature has met with strong opposition from the friends of State inspection. It is one of the exasperating small details which vex the preparation for any measure which concerns the employment of salaried men. The friends of those who now enjoy positions wish to make assurance doubly sure that no discrimination is possible against their friends, while others are afraid that loopholes will be constructed which can be taken advantage of by the unscrupulous. Doubtless the fears of each group of partisans are groundless. I can not believe that any State would knowingly tolerate the employment of incompetent or corrupt graders, and I am perfectly confident that with the other administrative features of this bill in operation, even without the license feature, that such incompetence or corruption would be detected and exposed by the supervisory force of Government experts. In the end a State, even if it can be conceded that it is possible for the low standards of efficiency or honesty to find favor with any State, such a State would be driven to raise its standard to the common level of national service. On the other hand, under the high administrative methods sure to be sanctioned by the National Government hostile discrimination against individuals or States would be impossible, and those now in the employ of local authorities who are competent and worthy would doubtless be licensed by the National Government so that the service might benefit by their continued employment. Practical cooperation is always based on the assumption of honest, good-faith effort on part of all cooperators, and I know of no reason to challenge such an attitude on part of either State or National Government in an effort to improve and perfect the grain-inspection service.

"Uniformity in this service is further guaranteed by the provision that all certificates, written or oral contracts, invoices, and bills of lading relating to any shipment or offer for shipment of grain in interstate or foreign commerce shall not refer to such grain as being of any other grade than one of the official grades of the United States. As grain can be legally sold by sample or by type or by special trade designation, this provision is necessary in order to give that class of sales which the bill is designed to encourage that advantage which the judgment of third parties not interested in the terms of the trade always confers. It also makes it practically impossible to negotiate trade on credit instruments except that such trades be made by grade. It is one of the strong features of the bill, viewed from an administrative standpoint, and I am gratified to find so little objection to its adoption. Taken in connection with the licensing feature, it will go far toward strengthening the administration of all local inspection service.

"We may sum up the provisions of the bill so far as they relate to the ordinary routine of sale and delivery in interstate commerce: The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to fix uniform standards for all commercial grains, which standards must be used in all trading in grain where the sales are made by grade. Grain may be sold by sample or by type without reference to the terms of the bill. Sales may be made by name or designation, if such name or designation is not false or misleading, and which name or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard. All grain inspectors are appointed by local authority, after such persons have passed a successful examination before the Secretary of Agriculture. Provision is made whereby grain can be shipped from a point where no licensed inspector is stationed to a point or through a point where such licensed inspector is stationed, subject to inspection at such points. All grain which is sold by grade must be sold under one of the official grades, and the grain must conform to the requirements of the grade under which it is sold. All certificates, invoices, contracts of sales, and agreements to sell, relating to the shipment or delivery for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, must refer to the grain as being one of the official grades as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

APPEALS.

"After grain has entered interstate or foreign commerce, or has been offered for such shipment, and the grain shall have been inspected, any dispute as to the fact that the grain actually conforms to the standard of the grade specified in the contract of sale may be referred to the Secretary of Agriculture for settlement by either party in interest. This provision of the bill takes away from State authority all appellate power in the grain-inspection service in interstate commerce and lodges that jurisdiction with the Secretary of Agriculture. The findings of the Secretary as to the grade is made prima facie evidence in any United States court of the true grade of the grain at the time and place specified by the Secretary in his findings. No objection has appeared prominently to this grant of power to the Secretary, but a sharp difference of opinion exists as to the manner in which this right to appeal should be exercised. This is one of those apparently irreconcilable differences which grow out of the natural conflict of interest between buyer and seller. The position of the seller is that the right of appeal should be limited to the time and place of delivery or offer of delivery; the buyer prefers to prolong his right of appeal to include the moment when he receives his grain at the point of final destination. The bill seeks to harmonize this natural difference in interest by providing that the appeal must be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made, and before the identity of the grain is lost. As grain may be shipped to any point where a licensed inspector is stationed, subject to inspection at that point, it follows that by contract it is possible for any buyer of grain to designate the point where he may wish to receive the grain. The appeal can thus be taken at the point where he has elected to receive his grain. The general principle recognized by the bill is that the owner of the grain must accept all hazard as to the grain going out of condition. This risk is usually calculated by the seller in naming price and terms. This is the best business procedure and it was accepted in framing the bill. If grain is sold for Chicago delivery, then the inspection and appeal, if one is taken, must be in Chicago. If delivery is specified to be Buffalo, then these processes are deferred until the grain actually arrives in Buffalo; and this is true of every sale, regardless of the origin of the grain. The point of delivery controls the right of appeal and designates the time and place where the party feeling aggrieved must exercise that right.

"The administrative policy contemplated by the bill is the establishment of grain laboratories at all the principal grain markets and to employ a corps of competent grain experts, who will compose the boards of appeal. These men will be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and be solely responsible to him. The bill thus offers the grain trade an official arbitrative tribunal absolutely removed from all trade influences and responsible alone to the majority of the voters of the United States. In this sense the bill provides for Government inspection, because it is possible under its terms for any given lot of grain to be graded directly by the Government officials. The result is secured without in any way impairing existing local systems of grain inspection or by duplicating existing inspection officials. In fact, the local inspection will be strengthened because of Federal examination, supervision, and the adoption of uniform standards. Thus we will secure better grading for strictly intrastate grain commerce and establish an effective system for interstate and foreign commerce.

"The Secretary is also vested with the power to examine grain passing in interstate and foreign commerce by whatever method the sale may have been negotiated. Whenever, after opportunity for a hearing is given to the owner of the grain and to the inspector thereof, if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that the grain has been incorrectly graded or has been sold under a name or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings. This provision gives the Secretary power to detect fraudulent practices in the grain trade and to give publicity to fact of their existence. It will tend to standardize the grading at the various market centers and will assist in detecting incompetent or corrupt inspectors, if such should be employed by any local authority.

"The only other important feature of the bill which has provoked serious discussion is that of the permanency of the grades when once established by the Secretary. No question is more vital to the efficiency and to the integrity of the proposed system than this one. I have the greatest regard for the honesty of opinion which this controversy has provoked. It is a moot question and perhaps no man is qualified to say the last word in the argument. There is always a possibility of a mistake being made when the original grade has been established. It is impossible to eliminate the element of human error in the application of the standards when they shall have been declared. The work of grading grain can never be reduced to a mathematical demonstration of accuracy. It is well known that the prevailing quality of grain grown in any locality will vary with the seasons. These are the general reasons which are usually assigned by those who desire flexibility in the grades.

"Canada has settled this vexed question by fixing permanent grades by statute and then permitting the administrative officers to establish commercial grades which may be changed from season to season and for the different provinces. It is apparently the purpose in permitting the formation of commercial grades to facilitate the sale of grain to the best possible advantage. The commercial grades in Canada are in reality sales by sample or by type and can be made under the provisions of the bill, except that the sales would be negotiated between buyer and seller without the advantage of governmental regulation and supervision, other than that of supervision to prevent fraudulent representation. The bill seeks to accommodate the element of error by permitting variations from the official standards under rules and regulations by the Secretary of Agriculture. I have been pressed by students of the bill to define exactly the latitude which this language will permit. Unfortunately, this can not be done. It is an administrative liberty of discretion which only the individual officer will determine. It is not the purpose of those who framed the bill and chose the language to permit a greater variation than will exist between the margins of successive grades in any series. Certainly, there was no intention to confer authority on the Secretary of Agriculture to change standards when once published. The authority to make such changes or to authorize them to be made would reside exclusively in Congress. I am strongly opposed to vesting in executive officials large powers which of right should be exercised by the representatives of the people. The functions of executive officials should be that of administration and their influence on the legislative branch should be limited to the making of recommendations when important changes should be made in our legal code.

"It was my hope and ambition to present a bill under the operations of which any grain grower in the United States could offer his product with well-founded confidence that he would receive the ruling market quotation for the particular quality which he had actually produced; and, likewise, that any buyer of grain could place his order for any particular quality obtainable in the markets with reasonable assurance that he would receive that quality for which he had contracted. If these ends were accomplished, then it would be impossible for the present practices, which I am convinced do obtain at times in certain markets where wheat is purchased as a low grade and the identical wheat resold as of a higher grade. Such profits are not legitimate; such practices are not honest. The Government of the United States owes it to her citizens to promote honesty in commercial channels and to encourage legitimate commercial methods by fearlessly searching out fraudulent transactions and exposing them and their authors before the world.

"I do not have special reference to the practice of recleaning, drying, and other like operations, whereby the actual condition of the grain is improved, and hence its rightful commercial grade has been raised. Such operations may be entirely legitimate and of great economic importance. This fact was fully established during the present abnormal season. There is here, as in many other details of actual commercial transaction, a twilight zone in which honesty can be merged into dishonesty, where reputable practices may be displaced by disreputable ones. The grain trade, through the operations of this bill, will be permitted to offer their grains for sale at the actual grade which they bear at the moment of delivery, and will receive quittance for all time from imputations and direct charges of questionable manipulation to the disadvantage of both the producer and the ultimate consumer.

"The provisions of this bill have been subjected to the most crucial tests of criticism. I do not present it with the extravagant claims that it is a perfect bill, but I do claim that it has received the most universal support of any bill on this subject which has ever been presented to Congress. There is not a critic of the bill which will not admit that it will better existing conditions and will remove most of the evils which are known to exist at the present time in the grain trade. It is a distinct step forward in the path which every student wishes to travel. It may not be exactly in all its details as you wish to frame it. That may be said of every important measure. Legislation, as is well known, is a matter of compromise, and good legislation is usually a matter of honest compromise. This bill was framed in the open. The committee hearings were extended and patient. No man can truthfully say that he was not accorded a hearing, and I believe that no man will say that he was not accorded a courteous and patient hearing.

"Legislation will be accomplished at the coming session of Congress. It is possible to secure the enactment of this bill without substantial change if the grain trade will continue to give it undivided support. It is my intention to reintroduce it in its present form the first day of the next session of Congress and to press for an early vote. So far as my present conviction goes, I shall favor no substantial change in its text. I deeply appreciate the generous support which the officers and membership of your association have given me in my efforts to perfect this bill and to secure its approval by Congress. I also wish to express my deep sense of obligation for the honor which the opportunity to make this address conveys."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, if I had succeeded in getting the recognition that I asked for yesterday I would perhaps have been better able to present the argument which I have to submit than now because of the cold which I have contracted in the meantime. This may even prevent me from using the time allotted to me, but I desire at the conclusion to offer an amendment, the purpose of which is to strike out those provisions of this grain-grade act so that the inspection will not be applicable to foreign commerce.

I do that because, as I understand it, the real purpose of this bill is aimed at the operation of grain inspection with regard to the exportation of corn, and there is no community in this country which is more affected by the enactment of this amendment than the city of New York, from which port I believe a greater amount of grain has been exported than from any other port in the United States.

And yet, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I make protest now that while a measure of this character was under consideration by a committee of this House, affecting, as it does, such a substantial interest in the commercial development of the city of New York and the greatest port of this Nation, the people of that city were not afforded an opportunity to attend before this committee and to give expression to their opposition to this measure.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HULBERT. I do.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I would like to say that the gentleman is entirely mistaken in his statement about this question. I happened to be on the committee at the time the original bill was framed, and I know of my own knowledge that representatives of the interests concerned in New York appeared before the committee and were given every opportunity to enforce their objections to this bill.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, I will say in answer to the gentleman that I hold in my hand a copy of the hearings of the Committee on Agriculture on the bill H. R. 10405, which is substantially this same measure, and there is not a word in there showing that an opportunity was offered to the representatives of the grain or produce exchanges in New York City to be heard on this matter.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. Does not the gentleman know that in April, May, and June, 1914, we had extensive hearings on this bill, and that all the principal representatives of these exchanges in New York and Boston and Philadelphia were present and were heard?

Mr. HULBERT. Can the gentleman give me the names of any members of the New York Produce Exchange who were heard before this committee?

Mr. RUBEY. I can not give the names, but I know that they were heard.

Mr. HULBERT. I dispute that, and will read a letter which I have in my hand from the New York Produce Exchange, through which practically all the grain that is exported from the port of New York passes. I read:

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
New York, February 25, 1916.

Hon. MURRAY HULBERT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to confirm my telegram of February 23, as follows: "Your letter of 22d concerning H. R. one naught four naught five, grain-grades act received. In May, nineteen fourteen, we were notified of hearing before Agriculture Committee of House, to be held on a Monday, and New York Produce Exchange delegates were present but were not heard, others taking precedence. Hearing was continued following Wednesday, when our delegates were again present and unable to obtain a hearing. At that time the committee granted us the privilege of filing a brief, which was in effect about the same as memorandum forwarded to you last week. Will write more fully."

Then in that letter, confirming this telegram, the chairman of the committee on grain of the New York Produce Exchange continues:

To go into more minute detail, I would say that on examination of the record of the proceedings before the House Committee on Agriculture, in April, May, and June, 1914, we find that 36 witnesses appeared before the committee, of whom 3 represented Government departments, 24 represented the West and Middle West, 1 represented New Orleans, 4 represented Baltimore, 1 Boston, and 1 Philadelphia. NOT A SINGLE REPRESENTATIVE FROM NEW YORK WAS HEARD, ALTHOUGH TWO GENTLEMEN WERE PRESENT ON MONDAY, APRIL 27, AND ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29. On the latter date the committee granted our representatives the privilege of filing a brief with the committee. Such brief was forwarded to the committee on May 9, 1914, and was printed in the record of the committee hearings.

We are prepared to send to Washington one of our members who is thoroughly familiar with all the features of the grain business, if you think it would be of any advantage to have him confer with you and other members of the New York City delegation in Congress. If so, will you kindly indicate what day will be convenient to you and most opportune for such a conference?

Yours, very truly,

A. C. FIELD,
Chairman Committee on Grain.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since the New York Produce Exchange did not secure an opportunity to be heard, under the unanimous consent which has been given me to extend my remarks, I desire to submit, and have incorporated in the RECORD, a statement of their attitude in the matter.

MEMORANDUM SETTING FORTH REASONS WHY H. R. 10405, INTRODUCED BY MR. RUBEY AND KNOWN AS THE GRAIN GRADES ACT, SHOULD BE DEFEATED.

The New York Produce Exchange is an organization made up of some 1,800 members, a large percentage of whom are engaged in the handling of grain in both the domestic and export trade.

The purpose of the produce exchange, as stated by its charter, granted by the State of New York April 19, 1862, is, among other things, "to inculcate just and equitable principles in trade, to establish and maintain uniformity in commercial usages, to acquire, preserve, and disseminate valuable business information, and to adjust controversies and misunderstandings between persons engaged in business." Its by-laws and rules provide means by which business between its members, or between its members and nonmembers, may be conducted with the least amount of friction, and fixes the manner of settlement for any breach of contract or failure to conform to the existing rules and regulations. Under these very proper rules applied and enforced by the elective officers of the exchange, who are chosen for such offices because of the confidence reposed in them by their associate members, the New York Produce Exchange has acquired the reputation here and abroad of maintaining only honorable and equitable principles in trade in all the relations of its members with one another and with nonmembers, whether these latter are in America or abroad.

As a part of its machinery the New York Produce Exchange maintains a grain-inspection department, at the head of which is an inspectors in chief, assisted by a deputy inspector in chief, and many inspectors, weighers, car examiners, samplers, helpers, etc., all of whom, through the inspector in chief, are subject to the supervision of a committee on grain, representing varied interests, and elected to their position by the board of managers because of their standing in the trade, and because of special fitness for such committee work. The salaries of the inspectors and other employees are paid by the New York Produce Exchange, and their employment is assured as long as their work is faithful, efficient, and honest. The inspector in chief has occupied his present position for 25 years, and previously was a deputy inspector. The deputy inspector in chief has been in the department 42 years. Many other inspectors have been with the department over a long series of years, their services being retained during dull periods in order to have them on hand when movement of grain is in greater volume. Competent and trustworthy inspectors are difficult to obtain, and so it has been the practice of the department, having once obtained their inspectors, to retain their services by paying liberal salaries with assurance of continued employment. Inspectors do not come in contact with shippers or receivers, and take their orders only from the inspector in chief.

The grades of grain established by the committee on grain, and approved always by the grain trade of the New York Produce Exchange, are such as are suggested by the experience of years. Be it remembered at this point that those members of the New York Produce Exchange who constitute the grain trade of the exchange do not represent any single interest of the grain trade. Some are brokers representing the western sellers and interested in only those things which facilitate the business of the western seller and himself as broker. Some are buyers from western sellers, direct or through brokers, these buyers differing from each other as to the outlet they seek for the disposition of their purchases. Other members of the exchange purchase in New York and either export or sell for export or sell into domestic distribution. Still others are buyers on the exchange for their own use in milling or otherwise manufacturing or feeding. Even foreign houses have direct representatives in the exchange membership or employ brokers, and the views of these brokers are naturally in agreement with those of the foreign house employing them. Thus in the establishment of grain grades by the grain trade of the New York Produce Exchange the grades are fixed to accommodate the requirements of buyers and sellers, producers and consumers. In Europe the qualities of our various grades are well known, and have been well known for years through an uninterrupted commerce in grain with the United States. These qualities are familiar to buyers not only in the great European seaboard markets but as well in every inland hamlet of the United Kingdom or Continent. That these grades and qualities are in general satisfactory to buyers and consumers is evidenced by the fact that export business has continued uninterruptedly throughout all these years on basis of those grades, and is now being done in all grades whenever the supplies in this country are large enough to permit an export movement. These grades, too, are such qualities as come into competition with grain from Argentina, Russia, and the Danubian countries. The New York Produce Exchange grain-inspection department having gained an enviable reputation because of the integrity of its inspection, and buyers and sellers everywhere, especially foreign buyers, having become accustomed to our grades and qualities, the members of the New York Produce Exchange not only desire to retain these grades so long existing, but as well to protest against any enforced legislation that will disturb the orderly methods that have prevailed for years between the members of the New York Produce Exchange and their customers. By advancing the requirements of the grades in question (corn), as is proposed by the Agriculture Department, competition with foreign export countries for the export grain business to consuming countries becomes the more and more difficult.

The New York Produce Exchange, then, does most earnestly and respectfully protest against the passage of the so-called Rubey bill No. 10405, or any other bill (1) which would make effective any grain grades not established by the grain trade itself, (2) which would make effective any methods of inspection not reasonable and practicable, and (3) which would establish fixed standards at this time on only one kind of grain (corn), leaving all the other grains and seeds for future consideration.

(1) In the first place, the New York Produce Exchange is of the opinion that grain grades should be fixed by those who are practical grain handlers, and that the requirements of each of the several grades should be such as are suggested by the years of experience of these practical grain men. The grades of corn of the Agricultural Department (grades of other grain not yet considered) are not those under which the grain trade has been working nor were they satisfactory to the grain trade (see proceedings of New Orleans convention in October, 1913); but have been put out as what, in the opinion of the Agricultural Department's chemists, these grades ought to be and what will be enforced eventually. Our grades of grain are now well known abroad in every large as well as every small market. To raise requirements as these new corn grades do is to, in effect, introduce entirely new methods, and this means to be obliged to familiarize the thousands of foreign buyers with the changed conditions and new requirements. This is not a matter of months but rather of years, so well known and strongly introduced are the present grades and so generally satisfactory are the present methods of doing business.

(2) In the second place the New York Produce Exchange protests against any legislation that makes effective any method of inspection not reasonable and practicable. Those proposed by the Agricultural Department the New York Produce Exchange claims are neither reasonable nor practicable, the moisture-testing apparatus of Mr. Duval, together with the accompanying scales being too complicated and delicate to permit of rapid work, or at least as rapid as is necessary, for at times the movement of grain is heavy and thus to apply these mechanical devices to every car of grain becomes physically impossible. It would probably be impossible to apply them at times to corn alone, but when other grains are included eventually, as now contemplated, the task becomes indeed hopeless.

Furthermore, the sample (about a handful) from which a moisture test is made is too small to be a basis on which a whole car is graded. Two of these small samples drawn from a carload or from a larger sample, also drawn from a carload, may when tested differ in percentage of moisture one-fourth to one-half of 1 per cent or more, enough to class the two samples in two different grades. In such case, which governs? The Agricultural Department's grade for No. 3 corn is 17½ per cent moisture, 6 per cent damaged corn (not including mahogany), 2 per cent dirt and finely broken corn, and 4 per cent cracked corn.

To ascertain percentage of damaged corn, the sample must be first weighed on these delicately adjusted chemists' scales and then weighed again after the damaged corn has been counted out or separated from the good.

The same process follows to ascertain percentage of dirt.

The same process follows to ascertain percentage of cracked corn.

If one of these factors fall below the prescribed percentages named, the grain must be inspected of a lower grade irrespective of the fact that the other three factors may be above the percentages required. The rule of fair averages may not be applied. In other words, no inspector, however well qualified, is permitted in any way to exercise his intelligence or common sense in the grading of grain, but must fix his grades entirely on result of these involved and impracticable Government tests—tests which may be applicable to drugs and chemicals but not to grain in its natural state.

It is only necessary to bear in mind the several processes required to establish, according to Agricultural Department's methods, the four factors named in the grades to know that any such method as to every car of grain is physically impossible. But, of course, such methods must be applied to every car under the bill proposed, otherwise the certificate of inspection of that car or cars is not what it purports to be; in other words, it would be fraudulent. All the other proposed grades require similar or even more complicated procedure to fix the actual grade.

(3) The New York Produce Exchange protests against any legislation which would establish fixed standards on only one kind of grain (corn). If the standard on one grain is to be fixed, then the standard on all should be fixed at the same sime. Much confusion and complaint would follow having a Government standard for corn and a non-Government standard for wheat and all other grains. If Government standardization is to apply at all, it should apply at one and the same time to all grains, and not to one only.

The New York Produce Exchange respectfully submits, furthermore, that if the bill is approved it should be under an amendment relieving from its provisions grain to be exported. For example, because of climatic and other conditions it is not feasible to establish one standard for corn applicable at all points. The existing Atlantic grades are suitable for the European demand and should not be disturbed, as this bill proposes, otherwise competition with Argentina, Russia, and Danubian countries for the export trade to consuming countries in similar qualities will be made more difficult than before.

The principle of Government supervision is commended—supervision of grades established by grain handlers. We most earnestly protest, however, against giving the Agricultural Department or any bureau of that department power to arbitrarily fix grades at this time and forever after; not only to fix grades, but also to prescribe such impossible methods of inspection as those which have been promulgated by that department.

We further believe that much of the support given the bill does not reflect the free, frank opinion of the western sections, but comes much from fear that should this bill fail of passage greater ills would befall the trade through the workings of the pure-food law. Just what we mean is shown by the following editorial extract from the Price Current Grain Reporter of April 29, 1914:

"The Toledo correspondent of the Price Current Grain Reporter informs his readers that President Paddock, of the produce exchange (of Toledo) has been informed by Secretary Houston, in substance, though not specifically so, perhaps, that those shippers who do not after July 1 next conform their business in corn to the standard corn grades, but ignore them, will come into conflict with the pure-food inspectors, and that all the uncertainties of trade will again obtain in the grain trade."

If the Agricultural Department has conveyed such an impression to the president of the Toledo Produce Exchange, is it not possible that other western interests have been similarly informed and through such information led to support the bill, which, in absence of this information, would not have received such support?

NEW YORK, February 18, 1916.

I have no special interest in presenting the claim of the New York Produce Exchange alone, but I am interested in any measure which comes before this House for consideration that enhances or diminishes the commercial development of the port of New York.

It has been stated that the real object of the grain-grades act is to protect the foreign consumer of our domestic grains produced for export. This, it seems to me, is an indictment of our exporters and the commercial bodies under whose rules and regulations their business is fostered and carried on. I, for one, favor legislation which will prevent fraudulent imposition and help establish American ideals of the highest standard in our foreign as well as in our interstate commerce, but to my mind it is un-American and hypocritical that we should enact legislation concededly designed to meet a situation which must necessarily have arisen because of the complaint of the foreign importer without at least giving the American exporter an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf and to present the other side of what seems to me to be a very serious question. Members of this House do not seem to realize the fact that legislation of this character is bound to prove detrimental to the commercial interests of what is after all not the local port of New York but the commercial center of this hemisphere.

On April 4 I called the attention of this House to the fact that two-thirds of the entire customs receipts of the country—42 per cent of the individual income tax and 25 per cent of the corporation income tax—was paid into the Treasury of the United States from the port of New York; and the exports from the port of New York for the week ending March 11, 1915, totaled in value twice that of the corresponding week for 1914 and were three times as great for the week ending March 11, 1916. How could this committee disregard interests of such vast importance, and how can this House ratify such indifference and justify it before the people of our country?

Fifty-one years ago to-day Jefferson Davis said to the people of the North, "All we ask is to be let alone," and on this anniversary I repeat that all we want in the administration of our affairs is to be let alone; but, if it is considered to be a matter in which the interests of the country as a whole are involved, do not attempt to enact legislation which will stifle and strangle our commercial prosperity and advancement without at least giving us an opportunity to appear before the committee and present for consideration arguments in support of those sacred American rights which we hear so much about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. I ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks and to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HULBERT submits the following amendments:
Page 23, line 13, strike out the words "and foreign"; page 24, line 15, strike out the words "or foreign"; page 24, line 21, strike out the words "or foreign"; page 25, line 16, strike out the words "or foreign"; page 26, line 20, strike out the words "and foreign"; page 26, line 25, strike out the words "or foreign."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in connection with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] has just been saying, that the New York exporters were not given opportunity to be heard, I beg to say that I was chairman of the subcommittee before which these hearings were held. The committee was in session an entire week, and the exporters and representatives of all exchanges were heard fully. No man or section was denied a hearing. The New York men attended some of the sessions. They declared that they could not afford to lose their time and attend all of our sessions. They finally stated they would be very glad to submit their views by brief rather than wait their turn to appear before the committee. This arrangement was suggested by them and at that time was satisfactory to them.

But I want to say here, and will produce the telegraphic correspondence if it is deemed to be necessary to settle the matter of veracity in this case, that the New York exporters were given opportunity to be heard in person and they voluntarily filed a brief.

Mr. HULBERT. I do not question the gentleman's veracity, but is it not true that the representatives of the New York Produce Exchange were here on the two days specified during the week when, as the gentleman stated, the hearings were continued?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. All gentlemen appeared before the committee in the order in which they notified the committee of their appearance in the city, unless the witnesses themselves waived this order.

Mr. HULBERT. The gentleman has not answered my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for me to offer an amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I offer as an amendment the motion to strike out section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania moves to amend the amendment No. 2 by striking out section 6, beginning on page 25.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], who speaks with authority for the farmers of the country, being a practical farmer himself; and I observe that he said that most of the exchanges, boards of trade, and so forth, were interested in this bill and desired to see it pass.

I wish to say that the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia does not desire to see this bill passed. On yesterday I undertook to put into the RECORD a memorial from that body setting forth their reasons. It was published in the RECORD of this morning as extensively as I could get the time to read it into the RECORD. But while the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] was talking, it occurred to me that he was fortifying the argument I desire to make with respect to this section 6, which I think should be eliminated from the bill. Under section 6 it is proposed that whenever there is a dispute after an inspection of the grain, any "interested party" may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture. And looking the gentleman from Indiana, as a farmer, in the face, it occurred to me to ask, "Where does the small farmer with a single carload of grain get off on that proposition?" There is a Government inspector who looks over his grain, and a dispute arises, and "an interested party," one person, can throw the whole carload into demurrage, sidetrack it until the poor farmer for whom my friends on the other side so often plead, is obliged to obtain counsel, or otherwise to get through the red tape necessary to reach the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington to have a rehearing. He must do that for a single carload of grain, everything the man has got to send to market.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must be mistaken about that, because the farmer gets his money for his grain the very moment he turns it over to the buyer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not sure about that. Even so, the farmer never wants to get money under false pretenses, and that would be the situation if he accepted money for a carload of grain which he did not deliver.

Mr. HELGESEN. A single carload of grain that the gentleman speaks of is inspected under this law the same as it was inspected before, and an appeal can be taken only if the seller or the buyer desires it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not care a cent about that. The gentleman represents just as large interests in the grain-growing section of the country as he sometimes accuses other gentlemen from the cities of representing in an industrial line, and the poor farmer is not in it under this bill.

Mr. HELGESEN. He is, absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say he is not, for any interested person, any schemer who does not agree with the farmer, any man with whom he has had a quarrel, any blackmailer, can hold up his carload of grain until he gets through the minutiæ and the details and the red tape of reaching his august majesty, the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington. Will the gentleman deny that for a moment?

Mr. HELGESEN. I certainly do.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this measure for the uniform grading of grain is of very far-reaching importance to this country. It does not prevent any sales of grain under the system at present in vogue, but it provides an additional safeguard which I believe will be of great advantage to the producers of grain and to the dealers in grain. It furnishes uniform standards fixed by the Federal Government, common throughout the country in all of the great grain markets of the United States, as well as the export cities of the countries, upon the basis of which uniform standard the owner of the grain, whether he be the original producer or a buyer of grain, may know the market value of the grain that he has in his hand.

At present we have a system of State inspection of grain. Each State is entitled to have its own State inspection, and necessarily a lack of uniformity grows out of that system, no matter how carefully and conscientiously it is followed, because the grain-inspection system of Kansas is under one control and the grain-inspection system of Missouri is under another control. Their grades do not always conform.

Now, as a matter of fact, the State inspections, limited as they are, are a great safeguard to the man who raises the grain and the man who sells the grain. If it were not so, grain bought in the large markets would be largely in the condition of cotton bought in the large markets. It would be bought almost on a standard price that would represent the lowest grade; but as it is now the owner of grain has a means on which to fix the market value as reported from the market centers of the product that he is offering on the market. The State inspections have been of great benefit, and the fact that they have continued for 30 years in the great grain-growing States shows that they have been of benefit. This system is additional, and extends that uniformity and Government control to a wider field. I do not believe that it is going to affect adversely the exporters of grain.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes, briefly.

Mr. FESS. I voted for this measure a year ago, but at that time I wondered whether national legislation was absolutely necessary, and if the States could not take care of it.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it is necessary, and I will tell the gentleman why. The very fact that there are conflicting State inspections and also private inspections by boards of trade and other organizations, so that there is a variation in the grading of the same grain, has weakened the force of the inspection system, and now in some of the great grain markets with which I am familiar more grain is sold on sample than is sold on certificate of inspection. That ought not to be true, and I think a great deal of that will be obviated by a national system to which all parties can appeal.

I was about to say, about the exporting of grain, it does seem to me that if our buyers abroad know that there is a standard grade of grain in this country, that No. 2 red wheat means a certain thing and that No. 1 hard northern means a certain thing, definite in its character and fixed by the Federal Government, by a bureau of inspection of the Federal Government, the price of grain as shown by the export quotations will reflect truly the value of that grain. On the other hand, if we are allowed to ship grain abroad and quote the prices on the basis of grain that has been gathered from all parts of this country, and possibly also from Canada, so that nobody can tell whether the export price represents his kind of grain that was sold on the Liverpool market for a certain price on a certain day, or some other man's grain, then the buyer is perfectly helpless on these market quotations; but the existence of a standard in this country will give our grain a stability of price abroad that every farmer will be able to count on in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, line 4, after the word "agriculture," strike out the remainder of line 4 and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and the first word in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That in States which have State grain inspection established by law the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, issue licenses to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect grain under the laws of that State."

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, having been a member of the subcommittee that originally drafted this legislation, and which passed the House a year ago or more, I am interested in its passage. I was greatly interested in the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who said that this bill in substance passed the House by a two to one majority more than a year ago.

I regret to see that one of the most important and fundamental features of the present bill, over which a contest was waged in that subcommittee and the full committee, is present and radically differs from the bill which passed the House. If this bill passes the House it will be because the House has been informed in this debate that it was fully considered a year ago and passed by a large majority.

The feature that I call attention to is this: If the Federal authorities are to take cognizance of grain inspection or the supervision of grain inspection they ought to have the power to do the things they are expected to do, and this provision in this bill absolutely prevents that. The trouble in this country that inspired this legislation is the fact that in the great primary markets like Chicago, Omaha, Kansas City, Duluth, and other markets there have been inspections where No. 2 corn at one point would be No. 3 elsewhere. Corn classed as No. 2 would strike a primary market on falling prices and would be graded as No. 3, so that the farmer and the shipper could not be sure as to what grade he would obtain regardless of the grade he actually shipped. So, having confidence in supervision by the Government, this legislation was proposed.

The important part of the legislation is not in its passage, not as it will be read on the statute book, but in its administration at the primary market, and those who will administer it should be men selected by him having the power of appointment or license without being unduly hampered by State authorities, boards of trade, or any other organization which up to this time have furnished the cause of the mischief that we now desire to remedy.

I call the attention of the members of the committee to page 27, as this bill reads, and which my amendment seeks to change.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. For a brief question.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the inspection is to be done as provided by States, why have this legislation? That is the very thing we are trying to get away from; that is where the complaint is. The inspections are made by inspectors appointed through politics and controlled by the manipulators of our markets. Why not strike out the whole amendment?

Mr. SLOAN. The provision in the bill which passed this House relating to licensing inspectors is now before the House in the form of my amendment. You will note that my amendment shows the right—this is the change that has been made, and it is fundamental:

Provided, That in any State which has State grain inspection established by law the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in issuing licenses, give preference to persons duly authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State.

That gives preference to those authorized by the States, not those competent, those who hold their position under State authority shall be preferred over anybody the Secretary of Agriculture may see fit to select.

My amendment is in the language of the bill which passed the House. It preserves to the Secretary the right to license anyone who is competent. If appointees of the State are satisfactory, he may license them. But under the bill as it is they can claim their places as a matter of right and if the Secretary should for good cause remove one or cancel his license he would, in selecting his successor, be compelled to prefer another State employee.

If the States were doing this work of grading interstate shipments of grain satisfactorily to the outside States, then there was no legitimate demand for this legislation. If they were not satisfying the interstate-grain trade, then what abject folly to pass a law placing the supervision in the hands of the Federal authorities and then leaving the primary selection of list of possible licensees in the absolute control of the State authorities.

It will give us legislation reasonably high sounding and somewhat ornamental but of practically no force and effect. The chicken fancier who placed a fat, well-flavored capon in his yard, expecting to thus improve his breed of poultry, may have furnished the suggestions for the sponsors of this bill in its present form, so far as section 7 is concerned.

I do not believe the farmers and country shippers will long fail to see how the great central markets of which they have long complained have been given this important advantage over them.

It will also be an impressive lesson in the fine art of legislating by "rule and rider," recently coming into vogue in this House. Because the difference between the views of those favoring a provision like that set forth in my amendment and those in the present bill were discussed from the beginning of the grain-grading investigation, and no one had the nerve to propose a change of the bill when it was being considered at length in the House in the form of an amendment commanding the Secretary to give preference to the State appointees.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the grain merchants of Baltimore have by their industry and fair dealing built up a splendid export trade. They have done it by properly grading the export grain and sending it to European ports. They have established a tremendous trade, which redounds to the benefit of those exporting men of my city.

Throughout the entire European countries the Baltimore grading of grain is known. It has taken years to establish a reputation for the grading, fair dealing, and energy of the grain merchants of the port of Baltimore, which has made them known throughout the countries of the world as having their own grades of grain and as conducting a fair, honest, and energetic business.

We feel that to adopt this amendment and incorporate it into the Agriculture bill under a special rule and as a rider upon that appropriation bill is not only unfair to the grain merchants of Baltimore and other export cities but it deprives them of the benefits which they have been earning and receiving after years of toil and work in establishing a special business for the port of Baltimore in the grain trade of the world.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I can not yield. I have only five minutes. If I have any time remaining, I will yield to the gentleman.

The gentleman from New York has said that New York was the largest export grain center of America. That may have been for last year by a small margin, but we shall certainly eclipse New York this year. I do not think there is any doubt about that, although New York has a tremendous and profitable trade. I am not saying anything in disparagement of its business, but merely to show the rapid strides which Baltimore has made in the last few years.

Baltimore's grain receipts for 10 months of the year 1915, including October, were: Wheat, 40,062,976 bushels; corn, 22,159,361 bushels; oats, 45,549,559 bushels; rye, 12,798,619 bushels; barley, 2,952,641 bushels; malt, 407,881 bushels; buckwheat, 45,838 bushels; making a grand total of 123,976,875 bushels, of which 110,230,396 bushels were exported, together with 1,280,869 barrels of flour, a record of achievement hard to eclipse.

Baltimore city ought not to be deprived of the splendid trade and commerce that has come to her and her merchants by reason of the reputation that the export grain merchants have established for the grading of grain and for the large business they have done. Their grading and fair dealing is their trade-mark in the European world.

We believe that everything is fully covered by the present method of exporting grain, that the people of Europe are satisfied with the grades which we are sending them, and we are therefore opposed to this amendment.

The trade which Baltimore is doing in the grain business is limited alone by the ability to ship and the capacity of the boats. There is constant and heavy demands from European markets for our grain, and our people are conducting a business as heretofore, using the same grades and satisfying their customers to the full extent.

The passage of this amendment creating a law for the grading of grain at this time will absolutely disrupt the grain export business, cause heavy loss to our merchants, and be of no benefit whatever to the grain merchants of our country.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask this question: Is it not a fact that the practice of the operators to whom the gentleman has referred has so demoralized our markets that even at the present time the people from the coast who appeared before the committee have recently passed a resolution indorsing this bill? I refer now to the exchange at Boston.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know to what people the gentleman refers, but I know that the people of Baltimore, who have established this reputation for the grading of grain and who are doing this immense business of 110,000,000 bushels in 10 months, have not passed any such resolution.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman is not familiar with the practice, I can point out to him the practice. The practice has been to buy grain in Chicago at one grade and to ship it to Baltimore and advance the grade, and forward it under a supposed Chicago grade, and thus demoralize the market, whereby the grain of the United States can not be sold in foreign markets.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly the trade from Baltimore city has not been demoralized, because it has been on the steady increase, and this year we are going to do the largest business we have ever done, in spite of the fact that last year we did a business in foreign markets of 110,000,000 bushels in 10 months, secondly only, perhaps, to New York, and this year we are going to eclipse New York, even though she is going to do a great business. Certainly as to Baltimore city and its grading, there has been no demoralization of the grain trade.

Mr. REILLY. Is it not a fact that one reason for voting for this bill is the protest of the foreign buyers which has been against the grading of the special men like those to whom the gentleman refers in Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know there has been no protest against the grading of Baltimore. I do not know of any other people to whom the gentleman refers.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. Does the gentleman know that the men who represented his city before the Agriculture Committee objected to this bill because they said that it would deprive them of the privilege of shipping Nos. 3 and 4 corn as No. 2 to Europe; that that was their objection and that that certainly is a fraud?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman is mistaken about that. He knows that the question of moisture, proposed grades to be established by the bill, grades already established by exporters, and other questions were under discussion. I say the gentleman is mistaken in his deduction, for certainly there was no intimation of a desire to defraud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have not time to answer the question more fully.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman is not mistaken. That is what they said before the committee.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the statement of the gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. LINTHICUM] regarding large exports from that port and other ports along our seaboard for the last year, and his predictions that the exports for the present year will even eclipse those of the last, and I hope he is correct in his predictions. I suggest to the gentleman and all others who are interested in exportations—the outlet for our products—that the thing which has probably prevented Baltimore now from even eclipsing all former records is the fact that we have not got the ships in which to ship the grain.

We passed the administration ship purchase bill last Congress, but a filibuster in the Senate killed it. I want to address may remarks, Mr. Chairman, particularly to the plan of this bill which provides for the uniform grading of grain all over the country. The present practice is that every State or every board of trade or every concern that is interested in the grading of the product will use its own rules or its own laws. That causes consternation and confusion among the sellers and also among the buyers. A farmer who sells his grain will sell it under the system of grading used at the place where the sale is made, and nine times out of ten he has to rely entirely on the buyer's judgment as to grade, with the possible chances of inaccuracy, even deceit and fraud. When the grain gets to another market it may be graded higher. The commission man at the primary market or the big center will be sure to grade it high enough so that he will make a profit. The producer is entitled to know exactly what the grade and quality are, therefore the true value of his grain, at his home and at every other market. It is proposed by this amendment to this agricultural appropriation bill to make it possible for people in the United States to sell and to buy on uniform grades, and I especially call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side of this aisle who yesterday so vehemently opposed the adoption of the rule which made it possible for us to consider this bill, the Federal warehouse bill, and the cotton-futures act now, that if we had not adopted that rule they would not have been able to consider these important bills at this time and possibly not during this entire session. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the rule which was adopted yesterday by the House is the best rule that has ever been brought into the House. It gave me great pleasure to vote for a rule which expedited the consideration and the passage of such excellent measures as these. The country wants Congress to complete its business and quit; it does not want endless talk, filibuster, and obstruction. I am not now going to attempt to go into the details of this grain-grades bill. I had the pleasure and honor of sitting on the subcommittee two years ago that drafted the original grain-grading bill. It was carefully considered by that committee after extensive hearings, at which all interests were represented, and witnesses came from every section of the country. It was approved by the full Committee on Agriculture and it passed this House then by a stupendous majority, and it will pass to-day by the same splendid vote. The measure is in the interests of honest dealings between seller and buyer. It hits no one but the dishonest speculator and manipulator, but it smashes him hard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, an inspection of this bill will show that there is practically only one section that is in controversy. I think there is no man, at least I have heard of no man, who could not see the benefit of establishing uniform standards of grain throughout the United States. If there is any person who would so claim, I venture to say that that position can not successfully be maintained. It is almost self-evidently a benefit to this country. The controversy arises over the provision in regard to the manner of inspection, and I can very easily see how that may be legitimately the subject of a great deal of divergence of opinion. In my opinion it would have been better to omit section 7 of the original bill entirely. I think it would have been very much better to have left the entire question of the enforcement of the provision for the standardization with the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of section 8 alone without restriction, so that he might better avail himself of every possible method of securing an efficient inspection, than to have attempted to regulate inspection by limitations, as is attempted in section 7. In my judgment, upon a hasty consideration of the question I think the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is preferable under the circumstances to the provisions of section 7 of the bill, and I shall support his amendment. However, I think it would be better both to vote down that amendment and then to strike out the provisions of section 7 of the bill and allow the Secretary of Agriculture to establish such methods of enforcement of the law as may be by him deemed best.

Mr. Chairman, I presume that those who have but little knowledge of the grain business, at its home, on the farm, can not understand the enormities of the present system. I could not help but be amused by the statement of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that the farmer would not be benefited by this measure. The farmer, above all other men, will be benefited by the establishment of uniform standards, because now grain dealers in the little towns in Iowa make arrangements with those who purchase grain at the various cities by which they are promised that their grain will be given a certain grade if sent to that particular market. In other words, grain standards are manipulated to secure business. Grades are promised not on merit but as inducements to secure business. The favored ones are given good grades; the unfortunate ones suffer, no matter how good their grain. In the same territory where grain is sold one man receives one standard and another man receives another standard. All that is primarily to the detriment of the man who sends his grain from the farm to be shipped to market. It is he who is the victim. He is compelled to accept the grade made by the buyer, who may sell it at a different and higher grade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has 12 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] has 14 minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] striking out the word "foreign" wherever it appears in the amendment.

These gentlemen here to-day seem to be unduly solicitous about the foreign purchasers of our grain. We have had very few complaints from the consignees on the other side of the ocean. Why, then, all this solicitude about the foreigner? I think back of this solicitude is a desire to create more offices; and that, in my judgment, is one of the controlling desires of some of the Members who are pushing this bill.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman speaks of protests. If the gentleman will examine these papers he will find many protests from foreign consignees.

Mr. COADY. The gentleman may have protests, and I have numerous protests against the passage of this bill in its present shape; protests from grain merchants along the Atlantic seaboard; protests from men who have been in this business for the last 30 or 40 years, and who have had very few complaints from men on the other side of the ocean.

From 1906 to 1913 Baltimore city alone shipped across the ocean 86,000,000 bushels of corn, with but very few complaints. Is not that evidence of the justice and the fairness and the equity of the rules that govern the inspection and shipment of grain from the port of Baltimore? I would like to read to the committee and put into the RECORD a letter I have here from the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce.

BALTIMORE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Baltimore, December 27, 1915.

Hon. CHARLES P. COADY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: House bill 4646 has been introduced in the House of Representatives. This chamber is strongly opposed to the provisions of this bill, and we feel if it is enacted into law it would be injurious, not only to the grain interests throughout the country but to the producer as well.

Baltimore, as you know, is one of the leading ports on the Atlantic seaboard, and grain is one of the principal articles exported. Would it not be reasonable to suppose that our inspectors must perform their duties conscientiously and efficiently, and our rules for the grading of grain are satisfactory to the shipper to this market and to the foreign buyer, when you consider the large volume of grain received and exported at this port for many years past.

It is our opinion that those engaged in the grain trade are in a better position to solve this problem, and any interference from other sources or unwise legislation may be followed by serious results. We would therefore earnestly request your support in defeating such bill.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS C. CRAFT, President.

This letter, as you observed from its reading, refers to House bill 4646, which was introduced and fathered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], but it is similar in nearly all respects to the pending measure, H. R. 10405, known as the Rubey bill.

I am opposed to this bill because it is an unnecessary piece of legislation. The grain men have rules formulated by themselves which are fair, equitable, and just to everyone. The city of Baltimore, which I have the honor in part to represent, is one of the greatest grain-shipping ports in the United States. As my colleague Mr. LINTHICUM pointed out to you, we shipped in the last 10 months 123,000,000 bushels of grain.

Striking evidence of the fact that our present system of inspection in Baltimore is eminently satisfactory to everyone is found in the largely increasing shipments of grain from the port of Baltimore. This surely would not be the case if the complaints were many or well founded. Foreign purchasers would not continue to deal with us if they lacked confidence in our method of inspection. Let me explain to you as briefly as I can how grain is inspected at the port of Baltimore.

When grain arrives at Baltimore, either by cars or by small boats, the grain inspector gets into the car or boat and by means of a machine called a "tryer" he obtains a sample of the grain from all parts of the shipment. He then carefully goes over the sample which he has drawn and grades the grain according to the rules laid down by the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce. If either the buyer or seller does not think the grain has been graded according to the rules laid down by the chamber of commerce, he has the right to appeal to a committee of five merchants, known as the appeal committee, and their judgment in the matter is final. These five merchants are selected because of their knowledge of the kind of grain which may be before them on appeal. Not one inspection out of five hundred is appealed to these committees.

After the grain has been inspected it is unloaded from the car or boat into the bin of the railroad-owned elevators, and placed in these bins according to the grade, without regard to the ownership of the grain. This is done for the purpose of preventing favoritism, as some merchant might think that his lot was better than some other merchant's, although of the same grade. When the grain in these bins is ordered out for export or to some local miller or consumer it is reinspected, not for the purpose of changing the grade, but to see that no deterioration has occurred while the grain was on storage. And again at this point, if the receiver of the grain by personal inspection at the time of loading does not think the grain tendered to him is up to the average, he may again appeal, for the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce has a rule which reads:

No outward certificate of inspection shall be issued for grain which is not equal in every respect to the average of the stock in the elevators of the same grade as that for which the certificate is issued.

The rules laid down by the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce for the inspection of grain do not contain any stipulation as to the moisture contents, and the amount of moisture in the grade is considered by the inspector as one of the important characteristics of the grain, but not the only one. By his long experience he is aware that corn containing 19 per cent of moisture is perfectly safe to export to Europe during the months of December, January, and February; he knows that corn with 19 per cent moisture will not be safe to ship to Europe during the months of April and May, for during these months the change in climatic conditions makes the corn of as high moisture as 19 per cent go through a chemical change which of itself puts the corn out of condition.

Under a hard-and-fast rule for the grading of corn, it would be necessary, in order to comply with standards, to ship during December, January, and February corn of not less than 16 per cent moisture, instead of 19 per cent as at present, and thus the farmers would lose the 3 per cent of weight and obtain less money for their corn, in order simply to meet the requirements of a rule.

The climatic changes in grain, especially in corn, are occasioned by corn being placed in a car at one temperature and going through several other temperatures on its way to its destination. Thus, corn loaded into a car in Nebraska at a time when the temperature was 10° above zero might arrive at Baltimore at a time when the temperature was as high as 70°. This climatic change would of itself have a tendency to put the corn out of condition. Corn that arrives at Baltimore during the active part of the year, say from the middle of November to the middle of February, contains from 18 per cent to 24 per cent moisture.

The farmers would be the first to feel the injurious effects of such inspection, because the rigid standards that would be set would apply alike to all markets and all sections of the country. I know this bill is detrimental to the interests of the big grain shippers along the Atlantic seaboard, and its effects on the farmer would be similarly injurious, and I hope, therefore, that it will be defeated.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 6, on page 29, line 3, to strike out the word "and" and substitute the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 26, line 3, by striking out the word "and" and inserting the word "or."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I presume that this particular clause is inserted to protect and safeguard the shipper in the matter of the preservation of the identity of the grain. The committee will observe from this section that any appeal that may be taken from the inspector to the Secretary of Agriculture must be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made, and before the identity of the grain has been lost. The effect of that would be to require the milling interests all over this country to keep a private representative or agent in all the various markets where they purchase grain in order to check up any possible error and be sure that the inspection was proper and in their interest as well as in the interest of those from whom it was purchased. For instance, if a miller at Nashville, Tenn., should buy grain by grade in St. Louis or Chicago, as is frequently done, and the grain was inspected, under the proposed law there would be no practical method of checking the inspection so as to appeal from it, if necessary, without maintaining a private inspector or representative at whatever market the wheat was bought in.

Of course, that is impossible both as to a matter of cost and expense as well as expediency. If this amendment is adopted, it will simply provide that the appeal may be taken either before the grain leaves the place where the inspection was made or before the identity of the grain has been lost; in other words, before the grain has been unloaded from the cars in which it is shipped.

Who can object to that? Why should not a reasonable opportunity be given the consignee to appeal from the inspection after he has had an opportunity to examine the grain when it reaches its destination and before it has lost its identity or has been unloaded from the cars? How can he protect his rights otherwise? Under the proposed system the buyer would have the insurance incident to Federal inspection, but he would have no practical method of correcting an error which occurred at the point of shipment, since the right of appeal would be lost after the shipment had left the place where the inspection was made. It seems to me that there can be no possible good reason why the buyer's interest should not also be safeguarded, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the rule providing for the submission of this bill not because I was opposed to the bill, but because I was opposed to the rule, for the reasons already stated in this House by many Members.

I am clearly of the opinion and abundantly satisfied that this bill is in the interest of the grain producers of the country, and I was considerably entertained by the remarks of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the plea that he made on behalf of the farmer. But it is quite evident that he, like other residents of that benighted and proverbially sleepy city which he so ably represents, does not understand at all the manner in which grain is marketed and sold; otherwise he would have known that the objection he is making is not valid.

Appeal can be taken now against the inspection. It can be taken under this bill, but only by the buyer or seller, the parties interested, and there is no opportunity for this to operate against the farmer. I can understand well, also, how the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], representing these exporters, object to the provisions of this bill. This bill does interfere with the manner in which the export trade has been carried on, and it ought to interfere with it. The exporters have been buying grain at one grade and exporting it at another grade. They have not fooled the foreign buyer by so doing, but they have lowered the price on that particular grade to the injury of the producer, the farmer who raised the grain, and they have so demoralized the export grain trade that before the European war broke out complaints were continual and universal about this practice.

The method has been simply this, Mr. Chairman: Grain was bought by these exporters, say, at No. 3 grade. When it got to Baltimore or New York it was cold weather, and they proceeded arbitrarily under their private system to put it at No. 2, and sold it for that grade.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think a gentleman who will make a charge of that kind ought to yield for a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am making that charge on the authority of the hearings which were had before the committee, and it has been made before by the ranking member of the committee on the Republican side [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. LINTHICUM. That can be easily answered, if you will allow it to be answered.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no control of the time. I am stating a well-known fact.

The price of corn is controlled by the export price on the No. 2 grade, and the price of this grade is controlled by the export price. When the exporter sells No. 3 corn as No. 2, he lowers the market on the last-named grade, and the farmer's price is lowered accordingly. Of course we have almost no No. 2 corn, but it remains the standard and anything that tends to lower its price hurts the farmer to the amount of the reduction.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to yield out of my time.

Mr. COADY. I would like an opportunity to disprove that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] five minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I have been taking a little time on this bill, but I do not speak often in the House, and I would not do so now were this not a matter in which I am especially interested, and one in regard to which I believe I have some knowledge.

I am glad to see the House of Representatives undertaking to deal with one of the most important and long-neglected problems of agriculture. You have dealt with the problems of production and preservation of soil fertility, and now you are undertaking an intelligent grapple with the great problem of sale and distribution. The man who produces grain is now far removed from the man who consumes it. It no longer goes to the little custom mill to be ground there. These gentlemen who control the great export markets and who object to this legislation—I say, with due respect to them—do not have the same standing here that the producer and consumer have. They are between these two classes as agents for both, performing an economic service for which they are entitled to receive fair pay, but they have no right to say that their conduct shall not be supervised in behalf of those in whose interest they are working.

It is true, and the gentlemen who represent the export market can not deny, nobody can deny, that there has been much abuse and injury here. The investigation of the transactions of one elevator showed that in one year nearly a million bushels of "no-grade" wheat went into it and not one bushel of "no-grade" wheat went out of that elevator as such. Of course, it went out, but out under grade, which they would not give it when it came in.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. I can not yield now. I am making a statement that is sustained by the record. That sort of practice has had a depressing influence on the price of American grain, and it is in the record, gentlemen, that the European buyers will not buy American wheat when they can get wheat from Argentina or Russia, or anywhere else, because of the uncertainty, to say the least of it, of our grading, and the American farmer suffers in the price he gets. [Applause.] What we need in this country is a universal trade language, so that a trade term will mean the same thing everywhere, and we need national inspection, so that men far separated may safely trade with each other. "No. 1" wheat ought to mean the same thing in every State and every market of this country, and that is what we undertake to accomplish here. I do not see how anybody can object to it. How can the man who is performing an economic service and doing it honestly object to such standards and to the measurement with them by a disinterested agency of the commodity sold? I do not mean to reflect upon my friends who are in the great export markets, but it is a suspicious fact when men engaged in exporting are not willing that the Federal Government, which represents all the people, shall establish standards and exercise the degree of supervision necessary to see that those standards are complied with.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. I yield, yes; for a very brief question.

Mr. COADY. Does not the gentleman think it is much better to have private agencies do these things, when they do them satisfactorily, rather than have a governmental agency, which is frequently a burden on the people in the way of taxation, to perform that service?

Mr. SUMNERS. The private agency does it satisfactorily to the employer of the private agency. There is the difficulty.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Sure.

Mr. COADY. I think I can disprove that statement.

Mr. SUMNERS. If they do not do it satisfactorily even to the people who have them hired, certainly they can not do it satisfactorily for anybody else. [Applause.]

I do not think this bill goes far enough. I say to you, gentlemen of this Agricultural Committee, you ought to have nerve enough to establish a clearing house of information and a real produce exchange in this country, where men who buy and sell produce can trade, so that every farmer in this country who has a thing to sell that may be standardized or sold by sample may sell through that agency.

This is the greatest opportunity for constructive work which the Agricultural Committee has. Modern conditions demand it. I know that the pressure of these conditions will become compelling before long and we had as well get ready for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire within the minute allotted to me just to call attention to the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], which is to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or" in the appeal provision of section 6.

The purpose of that is to enable the shipper to have some chance for a real appeal, other than by having to keep at the terminal market a man to inspect on his behalf, in order to see whether an appeal is necessary. Under the provision as it is written the only place where an appeal can be taken is the place where the inspection appealed from was made, and before the identity of the grain has been lost. Now, the result of that is that a man must have his own agent at the terminal markets in order to avail himself of the right of appeal. The change that is suggested would give him the right to take the appeal at any place, under rules to be made by the department, where the identity of the grain has not been lost, and there does not seem to be any reason why that should not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, does the time taken to read an amendment come out of the time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Page 24, line 2, after the word "act," insert:

"And provided further, That such grain shall not be reinspected except as provided in section 6 of this act."

[Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that we can not have time to discuss this important proposition. I regret that I have to take issue with my colleague from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE]. We are confronted with this situation: The committee has spent a large part of the time for the last two or three years in preparing this important bill, and members of this committee now, under this gag rule, can not have even five minutes in which to discuss it. In the limited time that I have, it will be impossible to go into the details of the bill. I shall content myself by saying that if ever a bill came up for consideration in this House that was entitled to the loyal support of this House it certainly is this bill. Give it your hearty support; do not allow it to be defeated by these amendments. The committee has given it careful and faithful consideration for the past two years. I believe it is safe to trust to the judgment of the committee and that the bill is as perfect in purpose as it can be made. It may not be perfect in all of its details, but in adopting any amendment one is taking a chance.

In reply to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] I call attention to the fact that this bill comes to you backed up by the unanimous report of the committee, by representatives of the Department of Agriculture, by representatives of legislative committees of the Grain Dealers' Mutual Association, the Farmers' Cooperative Association, and of elevator companies, who appeared before the committee and advocated the passage of the bill; by publishers, millers, and representatives of the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and grain exchanges of Chicago, Louisville, Ky., Buffalo, Indianapolis, Peoria, Minneapolis, Duluth, Toledo, Omaha, Boston, St. Louis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Baltimore, and others who appeared before the committee; representatives of the warehouse commission of Missouri and the Illinois State Public Utility Commission testified before the committee in favor of the bill. Mr. Stuher, specialist and barley expert, speaking, I believe, for the brewers, indorsed it; in fact, everybody expressed themselves in favor of the bill, except, as has been stated, a few exporters.

As I have stated before, even those people who appeared before the committee in opposition to the bill have realized that our foreign market had been demoralized, they have recognized the importance in passing the bill, and have recently passed resolutions indorsing the passage of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the universal indorsement and demand for this legislation, coming not only from the farmer, the cooperative associations, elevator men, but representatives of the brewers, of the millers, and the exchanges throughout the country, it seems to me there should be no opposition to this bill. Here is an opportunity to redeem party platform pledges and make good the many expressions of admiration for the farmer made upon this floor, and at the same time insure justice and assistance to all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that it was found necessary to resort to gag rule in passing this bill. It seems to me that it should have been taken up in the regular way, giving ample time for discussion and amendments, but after two years of striving to have the bill passed it is better to have it come up in this way than not at all, though I shall continue to insist and believe that gag rule and riders on appropriation bills are unwise. Having said this, I shall content myself in asking leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting in the RECORD my remarks of January 4, 1915, upon the bill.

[Mr. HAUGEN had leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

The remarks of January 4, 1915, are as follows:

The proposed bill provides for the standardization of grain for a uniform application of Government standards in determining the real grade of grain for which standards have been established and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to fix, establish, and promulgate standards of quality and condition of corn, wheat, rye, oats, and other grains. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue license to a person competent to inspect and grade grain; that such license may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be suspended or revoked whenever the Secretary is satisfied that the licensed inspector has failed to grade grain correctly in accordance with the official standard or has violated any provision of this act or if the license has been used for any improper purpose whatsoever; also, that no person shall certify that any grain which has been inspected or graded by him is one of the official grades unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture authorizing him to inspect and grade grain for interstate and foreign commerce. Whenever standards shall have been fixed, established, and promulgated no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment, sell or offer for sale, in interstate and foreign commerce any such grain by grade unless the grade by which it is sold or offered for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor and the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act and the grade conformed to the standard fixed for the specific grade.

The practice of selling by sample, by type, or under name, description, or designation, may be continued, provided such name, description, or designation is not false or misleading

It provides further that whenever standardized grain has been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grain determined by such inspector of any such grain in fact conforms to the standards any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture; if so, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause investigation to be made and to determine the true grade thereof, to charge and collect a reasonable fee in amounts to be fixed by him. In the absence of private agreement the appeal from such inspector to the Secretary shall be taken at the initial point and before the identity of the grade has been lost. The findings of the Secretary shall be accepted in the courts as prima facie evidence of the true grade. It also authorizes the Secretary to cause examination to be made of any grain for which standards have been established, which has been certified, or which has been sold or offered for sale in interstate and foreign commerce under any name, description, or designation, he may publish his findings. Heavy penalties are to be imposed for violation of the provisions of the act. The bill carries an appropriation of $375,000 to enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of it.

As has been stated, the bill does not provide for Federal inspection and grading at first hand. It does provide for Federal supervision of the grading and final determination of the grade by the Secretary of Agriculture which, in fact, amounts to Federal inspection in the end. That is, if in case the inspection and grading by the licensed inspector is not satisfactory and an appeal is taken, the only difference then is that under the proposed bill the grain will in the first instance be inspected by inspectors authorized by the States, exchanges, or municipalities and licensed by the Federal Government, and if said inspection is not satisfactory either party interested may appeal and procure Federal inspection and determination, while with Federal inspection the grain would be inspected by a Federal inspector at first hand; but in case where an appeal is taken under either system the final inspection will be by one and the same, hence in the end, if an appeal is taken, we will have Federal inspection under either system.

The contention is that at present the inspectors are controlled and under the influence of the exchanges and interested parties employing them, and therefore Congress should provide for Federal inspection and thus remove the inspectors from the influences surrounding them, such as the operators of exchanges, State politics, and interested parties who control their appointment. Undoubtedly inspectors are influenced and great injustice has been done to the shipper and buyer in inspecting and grading grain below its real grade when coming in and grading it above its real grade when going out for the benefit of the operators, manipulators, and jugglers of grading on the various exchanges; but when the inspector and those interested are made to understand that unless they do the right thing, that unless they grade grain correctly, appeals will be taken, fraud will be disclosed, licenses will be suspended and revoked, and publicity given to every evil practice of the kind. That, I believe, will have a powerful influence over the inspectors, States, exchanges, and those interested in maintaining the grain business at their market, and if the law is enforced and taken advantage of, no market can continue the evil practice of incorrect grading. If it does, it is sure to lose its business. If so, it will be up to every State and market to maintain an honest inspection and grading of grain or lose its grain business. Certainly no board of trade or market can afford to have numerous appeals taken and reversed, licenses suspended, and such facts published to the world. Under the bill, as a business proposition it will be to their interest to give a square deal. Be that as it may, whatever course they may pursue, the farmer, the miller, the brewer, the shipper, and the buyer are protected in their right to an appeal and thus have the true grade determined. Why this legislation? The answer is, simply to do away with the present fraudulent practice in grading of grain, to protect the farmers, the elevator men, the millers, the brewers, the shippers, and the buyers against fraud, deception, to insure an honest grading, to do away with the manipulations of grades, and insure a square deal.

The farmer has long suffered from the fraudulent practice; his grain all these years has been undergraded. We find that his grain when it reaches the market is graded below its true grade, and, as the grade determines the price on grain, he receives a lower price as a result. Take, for instance, barley: If you would turn to the hearings, you will find Mr. Stuher's testimony. Mr. Stuher is a crop specialist and a barley expert, with many years' experience as a shipper and as an operator on the board of trade. His statement is that——

> There is something absolutely wrong with the present system of inspection and grading of grain.

He cites one case where the farmer sold his barley at Wahpeton, N. Dak. His barley was graded No. 2 feed barley, subject to 2 pounds dockage, and sold at Wahpeton at 40 cents a bushel. The barley was shipped to Minneapolis—commission, freight, weighing and inspection charges, 7½ cents. The barley sold at Minneapolis at 58 cents, not by grade but by sample, with a No. 2 feed barley certificate stain on it, even grading and certifying it as feed barley, when in fact it should have been certified as malting barley. Mr. Stuher's statement is that—

> Barley coming to Duluth and Minneapolis is generally inspected by the inspection department as feed barley in order to correspond with the inspection and grade given the farmer; that the terminal men, under the existing laws, have to send the certificate back to the country points, and the farmer is shown the certificate in order to pacify him who is under the impression that his barley was malting barley.

Thus the farmer is deceived and defrauded of the difference in value of No. 2 feed barley and malting barley, which generally runs from 5 to 15 cents a bushel. Mr. Stuher stated to the committee that he collected and sent 30 or 40 samples of barley, all graded at Minneapolis as feed barley, to Pabst Brewing Co., to have them analyzed, and that every one of them, according to the analytical report, showed them to be malting barley. In other words, 30 or 40 samples, representing that many carloads, graded feed barley at the initial point and graded malting barley at the analysis, such being the general practice. Has not the farmer a right to ask for relief?

How about the miller, the brewer, and the buyer? Under the present system of grading, grain coming in is graded low in order to defraud the farmer and the shipper; in going out it is graded high in order to defraud the miller and the buyer. The operator gets the farmer and the shipper coming and the miller, the brewer, and buyer going. A number of years ago a bankers' association of North Dakota investigated the inspection and grading of grain in the Northwest. In going over the records of the grain-inspection department of Minnesota it found that a single terminal elevator in a period of three months had advanced the grade on 435,618 bushels of wheat. Out of its total receipt of 890,245 bushels, evidently, most of the grain handled was either undergraded coming in or graded too high going out. The records showed that 59,742 bushels had been graded rejected, 16,021 no grade, 201,267 as No. 4, and not a bushel graded such going out. All were converted into higher grades, every bushel of it going out as 1, 2, and 3 northern. According to the report, only 513,213 bushels was graded Nos. 1, 2, and 3 coming in, and 890,245 bushels graded Nos. 1, 2, and 3 going out. It is clear that the manipulation of grading was for some purpose and that whatever the elevator operator gained must have been some one's loss, and of course came out of either the shipper or the buyer, and in the end largely, if not all, out of the producer. The shipper and buyer often lose, but most of the time they can protect themselves against losses by fixing prices accordingly. If malting barley, when graded as such, is worth 50 cents and its selling price is reduced to 40 cents by reason of false grading, necessarily he pays that much less. If the brewer and the miller buy grain graded higher than its true grade, they have something to say in fixing the price, and fix the price according to its real value. With the producer it is quite different. If the price of grain is lowered by reason of manipulation of grade, he is helpless. He simply has to take what he gets. So, while the manipulation of grades is greatly to the disadvantage of the shipper and buyer, the injustice and loss falls most heavily on the producer.

How about selling and buying for future delivery? We have the testimony of Mr. Stuher, who sold 100,000 bushels of oats by sample for January delivery. He bought 100,000 bushels of standard oats which, by a purifying process, was to be made into fancy oats. He was buying the standard oats against what he had sold, and of course needed the quality of oats contracted for, namely, the standard oats. On December 2, 100,000 bushels of oats were tendered under certificate as standard oats. He had 10 or 20 cars of the oats tendered as standard inspected by a board of trade private inspector, who graded them as No. 4 white oats. He complained and took the matter up with the appeals commission. It passed on the oats as if standard oats. He served notice that he would take the oats under protest; that he would bring it into court and expose the rotten system. He was then told that the oats would be passed as standard in the East; but that did not help matters out, as he had bought oats to be made into fancy, and No. 4 oats could not be improved upon in grade to that extent and did not answer his purpose. What next? The firm financing him came to the rescue of the exchange by serving notice upon Stuher to stop; if not, it would break up the Chicago Board of Trade. If he did not stop they would stop financing him. Of course he stopped, as there was nothing else for him to do. Others testified before the committee, and all to the fact that grading and certification of grain has become so unreliable and false that millers and buyers of grain no longer do or care to accept grain on contracts certified by the terminal elevators; that they are compelled to sell their hedges for anything they can get and buy grain elsewhere for their use. Their experience has been the same as that of Mr. Stuher; that their hedges are worthless except as an insurance, and as an insurance they have become very expensive by reason of the manipulation of grades.

It would seem that the statement made by those experienced, practical, and well-informed men who appeared before the committee—recorded in 588 pages of printed hearings before the House committee and 260 pages before the Senate committee—would be sufficient to convince anybody that there is something radically wrong somewhere. I believe that anyone who will investigate will agree that there is absolutely something wrong with the present system of grading grain, and that there is a pressing demand and just cause for the proposed legislation; that the farmers and shippers have sustained heavy losses by reason of this unfair grading and manipulation of grades; that our foreign trade in grain has suffered; that our markets have been demoralized by the incorrect grading; that it is due the farmer and shipper that Congress should prevent further wrongdoing through this incorrect and unjust grading system; and that it should protect him against fraud and further demoralization of his markets.

It would seem that in this Congress, its Members professing so much interest in the farmer and so much concern about his welfare, a Congress so enthusiastic in its laudation for the farmer, coupling this with the unceasing flow of eloquence recorded in several hundred pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, all indicating a desire to help the farmer in every way possible, and with the promises in the platforms of all parties so loudly proclaimed from the stump, I take it that there will be no difficulty in passing this meritorious bill which means so much to the farmer and shipper.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Iowa tell the House whether he holds the same opinion—he being the ranking Republican on the committee—that is held by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS], that this act will not apply to Canadian grain in bond intended for export?

Mr. HAUGEN. In my opinion it does not apply to grain shipped in bond from Canada for export.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. But it applies to grain entering into interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SUMNERS. Are you in favor of the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am in favor of the bill; yes.

In availing myself of the privilege granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, in order that the RECORD may show the existing conditions, I offer extracts from the report as printed in Senate Document No. 116, page 17:

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION BY NORTH DAKOTA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION MADE NOVEMBER 23, 1906.

To Members North Dakota Bankers' Association:

Your committee appointed to investigate the subject of grain inspection and grading, as affecting the interests of North Dakota shippers, met according to arrangement at Superior, Wis., on the morning of September 27, and, after a preliminary discussion as to the scope of the investigation, proceeded to visit some of the terminal elevators in order to familiarize themselves with the methods of handling grain as it comes from the shipper. We found that grain is inspected, graded, and the dockage fixed by the State inspector under the rules of the Minnesota grain inspection board. The grain is then ordered into one of the terminal elevators and after being unloaded is elevated to the top of the elevator where it is weighed. During the process of elevating all grain is subjected to a suction draft in order to keep the building free from dust (?). This is an injustice to the shipper, as, in our judgment, all grain should be weighed immediately upon being unloaded and nothing should be taken from it before it is weighed. The amount of light grain and dirt taken out under the present method simply depends upon the force of the suction draft.

We obtained a statement showing the grain of various grades shipped in and shipped out from one of the large elevators during a period of three months.

* * * * * * *

We find that eastern millers want the grain as it comes from the farmer, and it is an injustice to the shipper and to the miller to prevent this, as is now done. The shipper must accept the inspection, rules, and customs which have been forced upon him by the powerful combination of elevator and railway interests, and the miller must take the grain is offered him by the "grain trust," so called, and not in the condition as to mixing that he wants it.

In examining the report, above referred to, of grain received and grain shipped out of the terminal elevator we were able to get a report from, we found that during the three months covered the report showed the following grain received and shipped out:

What an eloquent story is told by the above figures. The fact that nearly 100,000 bushels more of No. 1 northern, the highest grade taken in, was shipped out than was received speaks so loud against the present system and rules of inspection that it is simply unnecessary to go on down the line and call your attention to the fact that nothing lower than No. 3 wheat was shipped out.

The profit in mixing the receipts of this elevator for the three months, as shown by their report, was $83,720.69. In order to arrive at the probable profits of the terminal elevators there should be added to the above the amount realized from the screenings, the charges for handling the grain, and the proceeds of the sale of wheat and other grain taken from the screenings, for we found that all screenings are carefully cleaned over and all good grain taken out, and that the good grain taken from the screenings is shipped out as screenings in order to avoid inspection and appearing in the amount of grain shipped out of the elevator. We are of the opinion that grain hospitals, either independent or in connection with terminal elevators, should be established, where shippers could have "off-grade" grain cleaned or scoured at a reasonable cost before it is offered for sale, the shipper to pay this expense and receive the benefit resulting from such treatment of his grain needing treatment in a hospital elevator. We also favor the amending of existing laws governing the handling of grain by terminal elevators so as to allow no more grain of a given grade to be shipped out than is taken in.

Your committee found much to criticize by visiting the freight yards, in the careless manner in which cars are handled by the railroad companies and the very poor class of grain doors used. The amount of grain lost by leakage from cars and by the careless shunting and switching of cars in the yards is very large.

All the foregoing are, of course, matters of minor importance as compared with the apparent combination of the railroad and elevator interests in forcing all grain received at terminal points to be inspected under Minnesota inspection rules. A competitive market was established under Wisconsin inspection at Superior. The Wisconsin law provides that the grain and warehouse commission shall consist of three members—one from Wisconsin, one from New York, and one from North Dakota. Under this law the shipper in this State has a representative on the board, and the influence of this representative can be of great benefit to our shippers if his duties are conscientiously performed.

This board appoints all inspectors and weighers and can see to it that inspection and weighing is honestly and properly done. Our shippers were undoubtedly greatly benefited during the time the Wisconsin inspection was in force, but by the apparent combined efforts of the interests above named this Wisconsin inspection is inoperative and all grain received at the head of the Lakes must be inspected by Minnesota inspectors under Minnesota rules.

The story of how the Wisconsin law was made absolutely inoperative is an interesting one. The Duluth Board of Trade made a rule that no member of the Duluth Board of Trade could hold membership in a similar organization within a hundred miles of Duluth. This was done to compel all grain men doing business at the head of the Lakes to confine their business to Duluth. Then all terminal elevators located in Superior suddenly were closed as public elevators and became private elevators, operated by individuals holding leases. As private elevators they were able to discriminate in the business offered them, and this discrimination took the form of refusing to receive grain inspected under Wisconsin rules and by Wisconsin inspectors. It does not require anything further to show you how Wisconsin inspection was put "down and out" and why all of our grain must now be graded, inspected, and weighed under Minnesota inspection rules.

Your committee attempted to have a hearing with the Duluth Board of Trade and met with some of the officers and members of that board for this purpose.

Your committee is of the opinion that the reforms outlined will be of material benefit to the grain growers of the State and will be a stepping-stone to a better system of inspection, viz:

Federal inspection, which would do away entirely with the many conflicting inspections established in the various States.

Respectfully submitted.

Also, page 231, hearings before the Senate committee in 1908, a report from the chief inspector of the grain and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota, which show the receipts and shipments for the year ending August 31, 1901, to be as follows:

No grade	1,335,531	344,823

It will be observed that for the year 1902 about 5,000,000 bushels of the No. 2 northern was converted into No. 1, and that of the 19,693,454 bushels graded No. 2, 7,035,133 bushels No. 3 northern, 892,241 bushels were rejected, and 2,561,595 bushels, no grade; when coming in very little of it shipped out as such, the major portion of the lower grade going out at a high grade. The statement and reports tell the story. Comments seem unnecessary.

Another table, taken from the records of the weighing department of the State of Minnesota, shows the amount of each grade weighed in at, and the amount weighed out of, the elevator at Duluth during the years 1902, 1903, and 1904—found on page 207, Hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, April 4, 1908.

The following is a letter written by Robert A. Patterson, chairman of the European international committee on American grain certificates. He is an English miller and also president of the Corn Exchange of Great Britain and continental Europe. It is dated the 15th of February, 1908, and written from London to the President. It reads:

LONDON CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION,
EXCHANGE CHAMBERS, 28 ST. MARY AXE,
London, E. C., February 15, 1908.

MR. PRESIDENT: I am instructed by the European international committee on American grain certificates to communicate to you the following facts:

There has been for some years past a general consensus of opinion among European buyers of grain that the operation of the present system of certificating grain for export is increasingly unsatisfactory and that whatever may be its merits for the purposes of domestic trading, it no longer gives to European buyers the confidence and protection which is necessary in a trade where the only guaranty for reliable quality and condition in exchange for buyer's money is a paper certificate. Formerly buyers in buying from the United States of America were able, as they still are in their dealings in grain with other exporting countries, to recover from shippers any damage they sustained owing to defects in quality or condition; but since the introduction of the certificating system this is no longer possible. Even after its introduction, indeed until comparatively recent times, it was seldom found that any serious abuses arose, and trusting to their belief in the reliability of the grading system, buyers were willing to continue trading with America on less favorable terms than they demanded elsewhere; but whether from the increase of individual competition, or, what is probably more important, the rivalry between the older ports and their smaller and more recently established competitors, there seems little doubt but that the standard of grading has been lowered, either temporarily or, in some cases, permanently, in order to attract business from interior points; and we in Europe feel that the burden of such departure from the more reliable and stricter method in force formerly has been borne chiefly by European importers, who, being far away, have no power of protecting themselves against errors, or worse, in the grading methods of recent years. The result is that American grain suffers as regards price when in competition with grain from other countries. The increasing dissatisfaction culminated some 12 months ago in a general request from the principal European grain centers that a conference should be summoned by the London Corn Trade Association to consider the best measures to adopt in order to remedy the defects of the present system of dealing in grain from the United States of America.

The conference was held in London on the 8th of November, 1907, and was attended by delegates from all European importing countries. It was unanimously resolved that a committee be appointed, consisting of seven members from the United Kingdom and an equal number from other European countries (the latter being represented as follows: Belgium, 1; France, 1; Germany, 3; Holland, 1; and Scandinavia, 1), to suggest necessary improvements and to negotiate with American grain trade for their adoption.

This committee met and drew up a scheme (a copy of which I have the honor to append), which was submitted to the principal grain associations of the United States of America, but which, I regret to say, did not only prove unacceptable to the American exchanges, but even failed to draw any counter proposals from them. Indeed, the way in which this subject has been treated by some of the leading grain associations, there would almost seem to indicate that there is no desire to recognize the undoubted fact that serious faults have arisen or that there is any need to amend a system which is responsible for abuses of which European importers universally complain.

Traders here generally recognize that a reliable system of inspection and certificating presents many advantages, but that to be thoroughly reliable it must depend not only upon the expert knowledge, integrity, and independence of the inspection officials, but that the rules for grading by which these officials are bound must be uniform, applying equally to every port, and should be generally known not only in the various American but also in the principal European grain centers, and that wherever possible, from time to time, type samples should be sent to our leading grain associations.

This is the system adopted by the agricultural department of His Majesty's Government in the Dominion of Canada, and has hitherto proved generally satisfactory.

My committee observed with great satisfaction your reference to this improtant matter in your last presidential message, and that there is before your Senate and House of Representatives at the present time a bill embodying some of the above suggestions. While they would, of course, have preferred to get their own suggestions accepted by American traders, they wish to be permitted to offer you their sincere congratulations and thanks for the steps you are taking to remedy an undoubted evil, and to assure you of the warm support of the European grain trade in your efforts.

I have the honor to be, your most humble and obedient servant,

ROBERT A. PATTERSON,
Chairman European International Committee on American Grain Certificates.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, United States of America,
Washington, U. S. A.

In a letter to Senator MCCUMBER, under date of February 15, 1908, he stated:

I believe that great efforts are being made to persuade your Senators and House of Representatives that the proposed change is not only unnecessary but not generally desired, but I can assure you that unless some such change is made, and that shortly, your export trade will suffer severely.

European buyers have lost confidence in the reliability of United States certificates, and American grain consequently suffers in price, buyers giving a preference whenever possible to other grain, and only buying yours when compelled to do so, or at a reduction in price sufficient, in their opinion, to compensate them for risks they run in buying certificate final.

Another letter from Holland and one from our consul at Marseille, which is also a very strong letter. The Holland letter reads as follows:

P. J. MCCUMBER, Esq.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

During the last Berlin grain conference, held January 29 and 30 of this year by delegates of the German, Holland, and Scandinavian grain trade, the McCumber bill and the other bills of similar character introduced into Congress were one of the chief subjects on the program.

The question of American grain inspection has been a very important one these latter years, and its having been a subject of the conference program induces us to assure you of the sympathy that the proposed change in the inspection system has among the members of this association.

During many years already the American grain-inspection certificates have been very unsatisfactory, and immense losses were caused to the buyers on this side by the careless inspection of American grain shipped for export. It has been said by American opponents of the bills mentioned above that the fixing of grades on better and higher standards would injure the export trade, and that the European buyers will not buy anything but the grades which have always been shipped and to which they are accustomed.

We want to energetically deny that anything like this is the case or may be expected when Government grain inspection will have been introduced. On the contrary, we think that a more reliable inspection will greatly benefit the American export trade.

Many important firms in the importing centers on this side have absolutely given up importing American corn, taught by the experience of several years, when a single parcel of this article, certified No. 2 mixed, sail mixed, etc., and still showing 30 to 90 per cent damage on arrival, caused a loss greater than the small gain made on many shipments together. They preferred to buy from Argentina, Russia, and the Danube. A better inspection, however, and certificates which give sufficient guaranty that the grade has really been given in accordance with the grain's quality and condition will induce these firms to take up the import of American corn again.

We don't object to the export of inferio: grain, but to the fact that the grades are not given according to the condition of the grain, so that the certificates are entirely unreliable. Perhaps some buyers on this side want the inferior grain, but those who deal in the better qualities want to be sure that when they pay a better price for the higher grade the certificate gives them the guaranty to get this grade. Up till now this has not been the case, and it is quite evident that a more satisfactory inspection will be of great benefit to the trade.

As soon as grades all over the United States are uniform, and as soon as certificates of inspection will be reliable, the import of American grain will certainly increase again after the sharp decline which it has experienced.

Uniform Government inspection will bring a higher standard of export grain, induce the European importer to buy American grain more freely again, and consequently greatly benefit the honest American exporter at the cost of his dishonest competitor. It will greatly purify the trade and make an end to an unbearable situation.

ROTTERDAM, February 20, 1908.

The letter from the United States consul at Marseille is, in part, as follows:

GRAIN-INSPECTION METHODS.

It is highly desirable that certain facts in regard to American grain-selling methods be given immediate and wide circulation, and that something be done, either by action of Congress or by the concerted action of American commercial bodies, to reform or rather standardize the system under which the great cereal-exporting business has been created.

There is little popular knowledge in the United States in regard to the fact that wheat, corn, grease, and similar products of American origin are not now sold abroad by sample, but by nominal grade. The European buyer knows nothing of the merchandise whatever before it reaches his possession. He imports and resells various classes of merchandise the quality or grade of which is certified to him, not by the merchant who has sold him the article, but by the official inspector of a board of trade or other equivalent body at the port of shipment. He pays for the goods before he receives them, and when the exporter in the United States delivers to him a certificate of inspection declaring the goods to be of a given grade he has no alternative but to honor the drafts. The bargain is absolutely final upon the production to him of this certificate of inspection

Although no two ports in the United States may absolutely agree as to the descriptive terms to be applied to a given grade of wheat, although previous shipments may have been of obviously different quality, if the certificate delivered conforms to the grade ordered, the buyer must accept delivery. These are "American conditions." The fact that for many years we have exported nearly all our surplus agricultural products under these conditions speaks well for American business methods, and the fact that these methods are generally acceptable is of advantage to the people of the United States.

Of late years the murmurs against this system have been increasing in Europe, and whereas a short time ago they took the form of isolated private complaints that goods did not always conform to the certified grade they now take the form of organized protests. I have before me not merely private correspondence running through a number of years, but the recent proceedings of the London Corn Trade Association and the proceedings of a delegate conference held on December 12 at the Berlin Bourse, the general tenor of which is that foreign importers are vexed with prevailing conditions in the United States and are determined to force an improvement. At these two conferences a great many harsh things were said in regard to American certificates, and specific instances of irregularities were mentioned which I need not now repeat. The vital point which it will be well to separate from so much context is this:

"Mr. FRIEDBERG (Hamburg). It is perfectly clear that if an American inspector certifies we have no right to doubt, or if we do we are asked, 'Why do you go on buying?' I may assure this meeting that a good many of us are not going on buying. We have none of this trouble in South America. For the general trade I think that there are respectable people enough in America, and I am wondering why they do not stop the glaring abuses that are complained of."

It was the fact that not many years ago the vast bulk of our grain exportations went forward from New York, and that every year standard samples of cereals were sent out to European buyers bearing the seal of the New York commercial bodies which issued certificates of inspection. Under such circumstances, when European buyers received a certificate from New York stating that a certain cargo afloat was of X quality, they could refer to their sample of this X grain, and there was at least a moral guaranty that sample and cargo would be alike. The practice of sending out standard samples is no longer followed, while grain is being shipped under certificates of inspection from Duluth, New York, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, and probably elsewhere. In each port or place a commercial organization assumes the right to issue certificates of grade, and yet no two ports or places have agreed upon the text of the terms which they use to describe the standard grades, let alone upon the grain itself. Nor is this all. I quote from the printed rules of a great board of trade:

"The committee on grain shall have full power and authority to establish grades of grains and to alter and amend the same as may be deemed necessary or expedient."

This instability is naturally one of the conditions of American business that is least acceptable to foreign importers, and what with rivalry between ports for export business it has created not only bitter feeling abroad but definite differences in the prices at which grain of the same nominal grade is offered for sale at the different ports of shipment. There are "easy ports" and "good ports," and sometimes the "easy ports" are penalized, as thus explained in a recent letter from an importer to an officer of an American commercial organization:

"As you know, at present exporters have great difficulty selling on certificates, but where quality is reasonably assured they are willing to pay a premium over lower inspections. Newport News and Norfolk were excluded on the London and Liverpool contracts because of last year's No. 2 corn shipments, while, as you know, your inspection maintained a premium all last season over the Atlantic."

No wheat importers desire to pay a premium here, or to exact a penalty there, based upon their appreciation of inspection methods. Wheat will fix its own price readily enough, and what the importer wishes to know, and has a right to know with as much certainty as attaches to any human transaction, is that No. 1 white winter wheat, for example, is the same kind of grain, whether it be inspected at Duluth or New Orleans. The importer insists that if the American Government, commercial bodies, and individual exporters have not agreed upon the qualifications of various grains necessary that they may receive specific gradings, it is the result of their own negligence, very possibly encouraged in certain quarters by those who profit by this unsatisfactory state of affairs.

The remedy sought is so easy of application and the demand for its application is so entirely reasonable that to the importer protracted resistance is incomprehensible. The proper remedy may be applied either by our Government or by the cooperation of our trade bodies. The starting point of the reform would be, naturally, the establishment of standard descriptions by law. This done, if the Government were charged with the issuance of inspection certificates, the service would be removed from local influences, and our so-called official certificates would be rehabilitated. If this very rational proposition be objected to, the surest means of effectively combating it would be the holding of a conference of American grain-inspecting bodies for the adoption of grain standards and for the adoption of ways and means of drawing standard samples, to be deposited in American consulates at great European ports or to be issued upon demand to importers, and to provide for a board of inspectors, the members thereof to be transferred at intervals and liberated from every form of local pressure.

ROBERT P. SKINNER,
Consul General.

MARSEILLE, December 8, 1906.

Also, in order that the RECORD may show how the manipulation of grades affect our foreign markets, I will include correspondence printed in Senate Document No. 116 and hearings before the Senate committee.

Mr. Tedford, State grain inspector of Kansas, testified that the standard of grades going out of elevators was the minimum or lowest character of grade, while others testified that of the grain as it went into elevator the lowest grade in the car was the standard.

On pages 788, 789, Mr. Bevan testified as to the custom of "car plugging," and gave instances of where from 150 to 200 cars were so plugged, and described the plugging system as follows:

"Q. What is the practice of plugging cars?"

Mr. Bevan answered:

"It is putting a poor grade on the bottom and covering it with good stuff, so the inspector can not get at it. They have what is called 'trier' to push into the car. If it does not go deep enough, he does not know the poor stuff is there."

On page 790 Mr. Forsaith testified to his knowledge of the plugging of wheat going to public elevators, as follows:

"They would run up tailings, bin-burned wheat, stumpy wheat—all inferior grades of wheat they had in the house—in one spot and run contract wheat in the others. They would get a string of cars in and give me the capacities and tell me how much to drop, as they call it, of the 'dope.' I would drop it, and when I got that dropped I would drop contract on top of it."

"GRAIN-TRADE COMPLAINTS AS REPORTED BY AMERICAN CONSULS, AND CONSEQUENT LOSS TO AMERICAN PRODUCER.

"Consul Thomas R. Wallace, in a report from Crefeld, says that the grain dealers in northern and western Europe have been holding meetings, the principal purpose of which seems to be to take united action with regard to a change in the rules and methods of transacting business with the United States in their line and to correct abuses now existing in the same. The consul continues:

"'The grain trade from the United States with this district has been declining for some time, and if such dissatisfaction becomes general throughout Europe the losses to the people of America in this important branch of their export trade will be enormous. To gain some idea of the causes of the complaints regarding the grain exported from the United States I have made personal inquiry among the millers and dealers in these products, and am told that the conditions complained of here are the same all over Europe.

"'The dealers say they have suffered excessive losses through the purchase of grain from America by its not grading up to the standard given in the inspector's certificate in kind, quality, or condition when received. Wheat sold as good winter wheat and so certified to by the inspector, is very often found to be new wheat mixed with old and often wormy wheat. Grain often arrives in very bad condition. Wheat purchased as new is found weevilly—very good wheat with badly damaged grain mixed with it.

"'They say, further, that the American shippers well know these facts, but of late years refuse to take these precautions, and because of the rule that the inspector's certificate is final the purchaser is compelled to suffer the loss arising from this negligence of the shipper. If the purchaser presents a claim for loss caused by grain received in bad condition, or of inferior quality from that certified to by the inspector, he receives no satisfaction from the shipper.

"'UNITED STATES ALONE TO BLAME.

"'I am informed that such conditions have become worse; that the purchaser here does not receive what he buys, and that no reliance can be placed on the inspector's certificate. The result is the miller has ceased to buy American grain for his mill and the farmer for his stock. It is further said that grain received from South America, Russia, or Roumania arrives in good condition, that received from the United States alone being bad.

"A general meeting of those engaged in the grain trade was held in 1905 by representatives from Holland and Germany. A meeting was held in London in November last, in which appeared representatives from Germany, France, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, and England, Ireland, and Scotland, and still another meeting was held on December 12 at Berlin. At all of these assemblies the principal topic for discussion was methods to correct the alleged abuses in the grain trade with the United States.

"COERCIVE MEASURES THREATENED.

"The dealers having radical or extreme views do not believe that an amicable settlement of the matter can be made with the shippers unless coercive measures are used, and this is one of the reasons of the international character of these assemblies. It is said by them that some of the same conditions prevailed in the grain trade with Russia some time ago. The Russian dealers were invited to Berlin to a conference, but treated the action with indifference, whereupon the German dealers refused to buy any Russian grain, and in a short time Russia asked for a meeting.

"The seriousness of this movement, threatening the loss of trade in this important branch of American exports, should not be underestimated. It is general in its character and covers the countries buying about all of the surplus crops of the United States.

"The unanimity of sentiment expressed at these meetings indicates there must be good cause for complaint, and as representatives of nearly all the nations of Europe are taking part in these assemblies and the meetings have become international in character, it is time the American people, who are interested in this great and important branch of the Nation's industries and commerce, should take some action to preserve it from further losses."

FRANCE.

FAULTY AMERICAN GRAIN-INSPECTION METHODS.

Counsul General Robert P. Skinner, of Marseille, thinks it is highly desirable that certain facts in regard to American grain-selling methods be given immediate and wide circulation, and that something be done either by action of Congress or by the concerted action of American commercial bodies to reform or, rather, standardize the system under which the great cereal-exporting business has been created. Mr. Skinner writes:

"There is little popular knowledge in the United States in regard to the fact that wheat, corn, grease, and similar products of American origin are not now sold abroad by sample, but by nominal grade. The European buyer knows nothing of the merchandise whatever before it reaches his possession. The bargain is absolutely final upon the production to him of this certificate of inspection.

"STRENUOUS OBJECTIONS.

"Of late years the murmurs against this system have been increasing in Europe, and whereas a short time ago they took the form of isolated private complaints that goods did not always conform to the certified grade, they now take the form of organized protests. I have before me not merely private correspondence running through a number of years, but the recent proceedings of the London Corn Trade Association and the proceedings of a delegate conference held on December 12 at the Berlin Bourse, the general tenor of which is that foreign importers are vexed with prevailing conditions in the United States and are determined to force an improvement. "SIMPLE REMEDY PROPOSED.

"The remedy sought is so easy of application and the demand for its application is so entirely reasonable that to the importer protracted resistance is incomprehensible. The starting point of the reform would be, naturally, the establishment of standard descriptions by law. Consul General Skinner, of Marseille, France, under date of January 10, 1907, writes as follows:

"In continuation of my report dated December 18, 1906, I wish to say that my attention had been called to a report presented to the Syndical Chamber of Grain and Flour, at Paris, by George Lefebvre, delegate to the International Reunion, organized by the London Corn Trade Association. This report has been sent to me by a prominent Marseille miller, and I take it that it is a résumé of the sentiments of the trade in this city, which has not acted upon the subject as yet in an official manner, although at this port the great bulk of American hard-wheat exportations are received. The report of M. Lefebvre is quite long, and I translate merely the salient passages, as follows:

"'I have the honor to render an account of my mission as your representative at the conference of November 8, organized by the Londone Corn Trade Association for the purpose of considering final certificates covering grain exportations from America. The conference was attended by not less than 45 members, whose opinions were unanimous as to the necessity of reforming the actual system. Some wished to ameliorate it and others to abolish it. Complaints were made of a detailed nature, which I have no need here to repeat, except as to two cases, which deserve to be set forth.

"'Complaint was made in regard to the delivery of hard winter wheat No. 2, in which not only the old and the new crops were mixed, but in which there was to be found also a considerable quantity of seriously damaged wheat. From the American inspectors who delivered the certificates, the only answer received was this: "We consider our principal duty is to secure the consumption of our crop."

"'Corn certified as No. 2 or "sail grade" (the quality capable of supporting a voyage in sailing ships) and which should have been able to endure a long voyage, arrived in a completely bad condition after a rather short journey. The complaint made was met by the reply that "It is the fault of the buyers who purchase during the months when corn germinates."

"'Mr. Montgomery, of Liverpool, speaking first, declared that the inspection service was badly established in the United States; that the European buyer renouncing any right of appeal as to quality when an inspector has delivered a certificate, thus constitutes the inspector an arbiter between the seller in America and the receiver in Europe.

"'The abuses concerning which complaints arise from all parts of Europe prove that the buyers must come to an understanding, in order to determine the methods by which this business should be handled between America and the Old World. This conference is probably the first effort along these lines between the interested countries.

"'First of all, what is it that is called an "official" certificate of inspection as to quality? This is a very broad definition. There is not in the trade any definition of the word "official," and in consequence every certificate of an inspector who holds an official position must be accepted by the buyer.'"

CANADA.

The following Associated Press dispatch is corroborated by the Agricultural Department:

"GRASS SEED IS BEING DOPED WITH ADULTERATIONS FROM CANADA.

"WASHINGTON, February 13, 1907.

"The Department of Agriculture has issued a circular relative to the investigation of the adulteration of orchard grass, bluegrass, clover, and alfalfa seed. The department gathered seed from all parts of the United States, buying in the open market, and of the seed examined about one-third was found adulterated. The degrees of adulteration varied from 10 per cent to 75 per cent. The names of upward of a hundred firms which the department alleges are selling adulterated seeds are printed in the circular. It is estimated that 700,000 pounds of Canadian bluegrass seed are annually imported into the United States and mixed with Kentucky bluegrass seed and sold as the latter. A similar amount of trefoil is imported from England, mixed with alfalfa seeds, and sold at a corresponding advance, says the circular."

SCOTLAND.

AMERICAN FLOUR HURT BY MISBRANDING.

Consul R. W. Austin, of Glasgow, writes that the friends of American flour in Scotland are elated over the passage by Congress of "the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906," and are predicting that with the enforcement of the law mentioned the American flour will regain its old-time reputation and be restored to the head of the list which it occupied in Great Britain prior to 1904. Mr. Austin continues:

"At that time no flour—home or foreign—equaled the American article, which had grown in popular favor to such an extent that it had no real competitor.

"The American wheat crop of 1904 being short, enabled the continental mills to introduce their flour into Scotland, many of them not hesitating to use popular American labels. This scheme was worked successfully for some time, to the injury of the American trade and the excellent reputation of its flour. Finally a vigorous protest under the British 'sale-of-goods act' was made, and this practice of the millers of the Continent discontinued. While this afforded relief, American flour is, and has been for several years, seriously injured in Great Britain by its being misbranded or labeled before leaving America, and this unfair method, it is hoped, will be discontinued by an observance of the 'food and drugs act.'"

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to say that I appreciate the splendid statement that has just been made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], who is the ranking member of the Republican side of the Committee on Agriculture. I want to emphasize what he has said in his remarks, namely, that this bill has had the careful consideration of the Committee on Agriculture not only in this Congress but also in the last Congress. In the last Congress we held extensive hearings to which were invited the grain men, representatives of the State departments where they have State grain inspection, grain dealers, farmers' elevator people, millers, and all who were in any way connected with the grain industry either as producers or distributors. The bill was prepared, introduced, and passed through the House at the last session of Congress. It was taken up again during this session by the Committee on Agriculture, and we have gone over in detail every paragraph of this bill time after time. I have not the time to take up separately each amendment which has been offered here. I desire to state that almost every amendment that is pending here before this committee was discussed at length in the Committee on Agriculture, and each one of these amendments was rejected by the committee. I wish I had the time to take up each one of the amendments in detail. I desire especially to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], which proposes to strike out the word "and" in section 6 and substitute therefor the word "or." I want to explain to you just what that means. Under the bill as now written it carries a provision that the appeal from the inspection of a car of grain shall be made at the point of inspection, before the grain leaves the point where inspected and before it loses its identity. If you strike out that word "and" and insert the word "or," it will mean that you must follow every carload of grain from the place where it is inspected, it may be, clear across the continent to its destination, and, perchance, clear across the Atlantic Ocean to the foreign port where it is destined, and give opportunity for appeal from inspection after it reaches its destination.

If the grain has deteriorated in transit or if the price has fallen, the purchaser can take advantage of that fact to appeal in the hope that he may thus avoid loss by a change in condition or in price. We went over that situation in committee last year and also this year. We thrashed it out and looked at it from every viewpoint, and it is the concensus of opinion of everybody who has had to do with this legislation that the law as now written in this bill should stand. The millers of the country came before our committee and asked that they be given the privilege of inspecting the grain after it reached their mills and before it was unloaded; but after they failed to get that concession they have acquisced in the bill as it is now written, and the milling concerns of the country are heartily in favor of this legislation. Section 7, which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desires to strike out of the bill, is a very important section; and if you take that section out of the bill, or if you adopt his substitute, you may just as well abandon this legislation. It is not intended by this legislation to interfere with State grain inspection. It is not the desire of the Department of Agriculture to in any way cripple the States in their inspection of grain, but, on the other hand, to most heartily cooperate with them. I hope, when it comes to voting upon the amendments offered to this bill, that you will take into consideration the fact that this bill has had the careful consideration of the subcommittee and of the full committee, and that you will vote down all amendments. This bill comes to you indorsed by the farmers' organizations of the country, by the representatives of the farmers' elevators, 4,000 in number; by the grain trade, by the millers, and, in fact, by everybody who has to do with grain, from the farmer who produces it to the miller who grinds it into flour. It is opposed by exporters of grain, and by only a few of them. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, one of the amendments is very long, it is true, and is pretty well understood, and I will except that from my request and ask that the request be again put.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all amendments excepting the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, which is very long, be again reported before the vote is taken upon them. Is there objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can not the Members who want the particular amendments read ask that privilege when the particular amendment is reached for voting. Let the request be made at that time. I object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it a little late to call for a division after the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Tennessee for another purpose. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the reasons against the grain-grades act are given in the following, from the New York Produce Exchange:

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
New York, April 28, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM S. BENNET,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The New York Produce Exchange has been opposing vigorously H. R. 10405, the grain-grades act, and now learns that resort has been had to the highly objectionable practice of tacking the grain-grades act onto the Agricultural appropriation bill in the hope of passing in this way a measure that has been pending in the House through almost the entire session without favorable action, and is apparently doomed to defeat if the regular procedure is followed.

In view of the public disapproval of previous attempts at such practice, we doubt if the proposed amendment, even if adopted by the House, would be enacted into law.

However, the members of the New York Produce Exchange are unalterably opposed to the grain-grades act in whatever manner it may be presented for enactment, and we ask that you will not permit the approval by the Committee on Rules of House resolution 213 that would afford an opportunity to pass the grain-grades act in the House as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Yours, very truly,

JAS. WARD WARNER,
President.

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE,
New York, April 15, 1916.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the New York Produce Exchange to call your attention to House bill No. 10405, Union Calendar No. 38, which our members consider detrimental to the interests of the New York Produce Exchange as well as the interests of the port of New York.

This measure has been opposed by this organization, and the reasons for such action set forth in briefs that are embodied in previous records before Congress.

Your interest in opposition to the measure is solicited upon those same grounds, briefly:

First. While nominally termed "supervision of grades" the bill in reality, through the medium of authority for regulation given to the Department of Agriculture, creates practically a system of Federal inspection of grain.

Second. The New York Produce Exchange has established and maintained standards of grain, particularly for export, through the medium of an inspection department organized in 1875, and through its control maintained the integrity of those standards in its commercial transactions. The suggested licensing of a corps of inspectors by the Federal Government under Federal supervision and regulations of the Agricultural Department would take away from the New York Produce Exchange the control, so long established and to such good purpose, of such inspectors.

Third. The measure seems to be designed for the benefit of an interior movement of grain locally and such regulations should be separate and apart from the standards of the larger shipping centers for export purposes. Our foreign trade requires entirely different regulations which will in no way hamper its continued development.

Fourth. Members of the New York Produce Exchange are not opposed to Federal supervision, but believe that standards that would be established by the Department of Agriculture along the lines of chemical analysis would not be practicable for the grain trade, as has been proven by the standards established for corn, to which the export trade has so far been unable to adapt its trading.

Yours, very truly. JAS. WARD WARNER, President.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. SLOAN. And I, Mr. Chairman, make the same request.

Mr. HELGESEN. I make the same request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the same request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KINKAID. And I make the same request.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these several requests?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, amendment No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this act shall be known by the short title of "United States warehouse act."

SEC. 2. That the term "warehouse" as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure in which any agricultural product is or may be stored. The term "agricultural product" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to mean any staple and nonperishable agricultural product. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed as soon as practicable to determine, and from time to time to designate, what articles are agricultural products within the meaning of this act. As used in this act, "person" includes a corporation or partnership or two or more persons having a joint or common interest; "warehouseman" means a person lawfully engaged in the business of storing agricultural products; and "receipt" means a warehouse receipt.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate the storage, warehousing, classifying according to grade and otherwise, weighing, and certification of agricultural products; upon application to him by any person applying for license to conduct a warehouse under this act, to inspect such warehouse or cause it to be inspected; at any time, with or without application to him, to inspect or cause to be inspected all warehouses licensed under this act; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses are applied for or have been issued under this act are suitable for the proper storage of any agricultural product or products; to classify warehouses in accordance with their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, condition, and other qualities, and as to the kinds of licenses issued or that may be issued for them pursuant to this act; and to prescribe, within the limitations of this act, the duties of the warehousemen conducting warehouses licensed under this act with respect to their care of and responsibility for agricultural products stored therein.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him, to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse or warehouses in accordance with this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder: Provided, That each such warehouse be found suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product or products for which a license is applied for, and that such warehouseman agree, as a condition to the granting of the license, to comply with and abide by all the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

SEC. 5. That each license issued under sections 4 and 9 of this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding one year and shall specify the date upon which it is to terminate, and upon showing satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time be renewed or extended by a written instrument, which shall specify the date of its termination.

SEC. 6. That each warehouseman applying for a license to conduct a warehouse in accordance with this act shall, as a condition to the granting thereof, execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a good and sufficient bond other than personal security to the United States to secure the faithful performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, and of such additional obligations as a warehouseman as may be assumed by him under contracts with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse. Said bond shall be in such form and amount, shall have such surety or sureties, subject to service of process in suits on the bond within the State, District, or Territory in which the warehouse is located, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe to carry out the purposes of this act. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that a bond approved by him is, or for any cause has become, insufficient, he may require an additional bond or bonds to be given by the warehouseman concerned, conforming with the requirements of this section, and unless the same be given within the time fixed by a written demand therefor the license of such warehouseman may be suspended or revoked.

SEC. 7. That any person injured by the breach of any obligation to secure which a bond is given, under the provisions of sections 6 or 9, shall be entitled to sue on the bond in his own name in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages he may have sustained by such breach.

SEC. 8. That upon the filing with and approval by the Secretary of Agriculture of a bond, in compliance with this act, for the conduct of a warehouse, such warehouse shall be designated as bonded hereunder; but no warehouse shall be designated as bonded under this act, and no name or description conveying the impression that it is so bonded, shall be used until a bond, such as provided for in section 6, has been filed with and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, nor unless the license issued under this act for the conduct of such warehouse remains unsuspended and unrevoked.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, issue a license to any person not a warehouseman to accept the custody of agricultural products and to store the same in a warehouse or warehouses owned, operated, or leased by any State, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder. Each person so licensed shall issue receipts for the agricultural products placed in his custody, and shall give bond, in accordance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder affecting warehousemen licensed under this act, and shall otherwise be subject to this act and such rules and regulations to the same extent as is provided for warehousemen licensed hereunder.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge, assess, and cause to be collected a reasonable fee for every examination or inspection of a warehouse under this act when such examination or inspection is made upon application of a warehouseman, and a fee not exceeding $2 per annum for each license or renewal thereof issued to a warehouseman under this act. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation of satisfactory proof of competency, issue to any person a license to classify any agricultural product or products, stored or to be stored in a warehouse licensed under this act, according to grade or otherwise, and to certificate the grade or other class thereof, or to weigh the same and certificate the weight thereof, or both to classify and weigh the same and to certificate the grade or other class and the weight thereof, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder so far as the same relate to him.

SEC. 12. That any license issued to any person to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products under this act may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied, after opportunity afforded to the licensee concerned for a hearing, that such licensee has failed to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products correctly, or has violated any of the provisions of this act or of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, so far as the same may relate to him, or that he has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose whatsoever. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

SEC. 13. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall receive for storage therein, so far as its capacity permits, any agricultural product of the kind customarily stored therein by him which may be tendered to him in a suitable condition for warehousing, in the usual manner in the ordinary and usual course of business, without making any discrimination between persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

SEC. 14. That any person who deposits agricultural products for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

SEC. 15. That grain, flaxseed, or any other fungible agricultural product received for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same under this act.

SEC. 16. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep the agricultural products therein of one depositor so far separate from agricultural products of other depositors, and from other agricultural products of the same depositor for which a separate receipt has been issued, as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the agricultural products deposited; but if authorized by agreement or by custom, a warehouseman may mingle fungible agricultural products with other agricultural products of the same kind and grade, and shall be severally liable to each depositor for the care and redelivery of his share of such mass, to the same extent and under the same circumstances as if the agricultural products had been kept separate, but he shall at no time while they are in his custody mix fungible agricultural products of different grades.

SEC. 17. That for all agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under this act original receipts shall be issued by the warehouseman conducting the same, but no receipts shall be issued except for agricultural products actually stored in the warehouse at the time of the issuance thereof.

SEC. 18. That every receipt issued for agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under this act shall embody within its written or printed terms (a) the location of the warehouse in which the agricultural products are stored; (b) the date of issue of the receipt; (c) the consecutive number of the receipt; (d) a statement whether the agricultural products received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order; (e) the rate of storage charges; (f) a description of the agricultural products received, showing the quantity thereof, or, in case of agricultural products customarily put up in bales or packages, a description of such bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification and the weight of such bales or packages; (g) the grade or other class of the agricultural products received and the standard or description in accordance with which such classification has been made: Provided, That such grade or other class shall be stated according to the official standard of the United States applicable to such agricultural products as the same may be fixed and promulgated under authority of law: Provided further, That until such official standards of the United States for any agricultural product or products have been fixed and promulgated, the grade or other class thereof may be stated in accordance with any recognized standard or in accordance with such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; (h) a statement that the receipt is issued subject to the United States warehouse act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder; (i) if the receipt be issued for agricultural products of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly or in common with others, the fact of such ownership; (j) a statement of the amount of advances made and of liabilities incurred for which the warehouseman claims a lien: Provided, That if the precise amount of such advances made or of such liabilities incurred be at the time of the issue of the receipt unknown to the warehouseman or his agent who issues it, a statement of the fact that advances have been made or liabilities incurred and the purpose thereof shall be sufficient; (k) such other terms and conditions within the limitations of this act as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture; and (l) the signature of the warehouseman, which may be made by his authorized agent: Provided, That unless otherwise required by the law of the State in which the warehouse is located, when requested by the depositor of other than fungible agricultural products, a receipt omitting compliance with subdivision (g) of this section may be issued if it have plainly and conspicuously embodied in its written or printed terms a provision that such receipt is not negotiable.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards for agricultural products in this act defined by which their quality or value may be judged or determined: Provided, That the standards for any agricultural products which have been, or which in future may be, established by or under authority of any other act of Congress shall be, and are hereby, adopted for the purposes of this act as the official standards of the United States for the agricultural products to which they relate.

SEC. 20. That while an original receipt issued under this act is outstanding and uncanceled by the warehouseman issuing the same no other or further receipt shall be issued for the agricultural product covered thereby or for any part thereof, except that in the case of a lost or destroyed receipt a new receipt, upon the same terms and subject to the same conditions and bearing on its face the number and date of the receipt in lieu of which it is issued, may be issued upon compliance with the statutes of the United States applicable thereto in places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States or upon compliance with the laws of any State applicable thereto in any place not under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That if there be in such case no statute of the United States or law of a State applicable thereto such new receipts may be issued upon the giving of satisfactory security in compliance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

SEC. 21. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act, in the absence of some lawful excuse, shall, without unnecessary delay, deliver the agricultural products stored therein upon a demand made either by the holder of a receipt for such agricultural products or by the depositor thereof if such demand be accompanied with (a) an offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien; (b) an offer to surrender the receipt, if negotiable, with such indorsements as would be necessary for the negotiation of the receipt; and (c) a readiness and willingness to sign, when the products are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered if such signature is requested by the warehouseman.

SEC. 22. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall cancel each receipt returned to him upon the delivery by him of the agricultural products for which the receipt was issued.

SEC. 23. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep in a place of safety complete and correct records of all agricultural products stored therein and withdrawn therefrom, of all warehouse receipts issued by him, and of the receipts returned to and canceled by him, shall make reports to the Secretary of Agriculture concerning such warehouse and the condition, contents, operation, and business thereof in such form and at such times as he may require, and shall conduct said warehouse in all other respects in compliance with this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder.

SEC. 24. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any agricultural product stored in any warehouse licensed under this act. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the warehouseman conducting such warehouse, it is determined that he is not performing fully the duties imposed on him by this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder, the Secretary may publish his findings.

SEC. 25. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, after opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the licensee concerned, suspend or revoke any license issued to any warehouseman conducting a warehouse under this act, for any violation of or failure to comply with any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder or upon the ground that unreasonable or exorbitant charges have been made for services rendered. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

SEC. 26. That the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time may publish the results of any investigations made under section 3 of this act; and he shall publish the names and locations of warehouses licensed and bonded and the names and addresses of persons licensed under this act and lists of all licenses terminated under this act and the causes therefor.

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, through officials, employees, or agents of the Department of Agriculture designated by him, to examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses licensed under this act and of the warehousemen conducting such warehouses relating thereto.

SEC. 28. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 29. That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with, or to authorize any conflict with, or in any way to impair or limit the effect or operation of the laws of any State relating to warehouses, warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers; but the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with such officials as are charged with the enforcement of such State laws in such States and through such cooperation to secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act; nor shall this act be construed so as to limit the operation of any statute of the United States relating to warehouses or warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers now in force in the District of Columbia or in any Territory or other place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 30. That every person who shall forge, alter, counterfeit, simulate, or falsely represent, or shall without proper authority use, any license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, or who shall violate or fail to comply with any provision of section 8 of this act, or who shall issue or utter a false or fraudulent receipt or certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 31. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and he is authorized, in his discretion, to employ qualified persons not regularly in the service of the United States for temporary assistance in carrying out the purposes of this act, and out of the moneys appropriated by this act to pay the salaries and expenses thereof.

SEC. 32. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 33. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], I ask unanimous consent that the time—one hour and a half—be divided between and controlled equally by the gentleman from Iowa and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time allotted, 1 hour and 30 minutes, be divided equally between the gentleman himself and the gentleman from Iowa and controlled by them as requested. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants time, he will have no difficulty in obtaining it on this side.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I want to say that while the former amendment was under discussion, the State producing the largest amount of wheat and the largest amount of flax in the United States was given only four minutes. I do not think that was fair. But I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. YOUNG of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use a little of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by inserting, in line 22, page 30, after the word "warehouses," the words "licensed or applying for a license."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 22, after the word "warehouses," insert the words "licensed or applying for a license."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, without these words the independent phrase which I seek to amend will read as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized * * * to classify warehouses in accordance with their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, conditions, and other qualities, and as to the kinds of licenses issued or that may be issued for them pursuant to this act.

That is, this language confers upon the Secretary of Agriculture, a Federal official, the right to come within the boundaries of any one of the 48 States, to go into any man's building, to inspect that building, and then, under another provision of the act, he is required to publish the results of that inspection.

Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the Democratic Party, by action if not by words, have absolutely repudiated their old-time doctrine of State rights, which had certain merits; but if there ever was a sample of Federal aggression sanctioned by law this is it. Under the old common law every man's house is his castle, and, as Pitt said:

The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the force of the Crown. It may be frail, its roof may shake, the wind may blow through it, the storms may enter, the rain may enter, but the King of England can not enter! All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

Now, what do we purpose to do in this Democratic Congress? We purpose to put on the statute book a provision under which the Secretary of Agriculture can send into any structure or any inclosure sufficient to hold cotton, wool, flax, tobacco, or grain, anybody whom he desires to send, and publish a report as to the conditions and surroundings. That is bad enough——

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. For a question.

Mr. HELM. What is the material difference between the right to inspect a public warehouse and the right to inspect a national bank by a bank examiner?

Mr. MADDEN. But the national bank was created by the Government.

Mr. BENNET. I will answer the gentleman's question directly. I have no objection whatever to the Secretary of Agriculture sending his inspectors either into a licensed warehouse or a warehouse which is applying for a license.

Mr. HELM. Is not that what is provided for in this bill—a licensed warehouse?

Mr. BENNET. No; and that is just where the gentleman is going to vote for my amendment, if he will listen. I propose to insert on page 30, in line 22, after the word "warehouses," the words "licensed or applying for a license," because this is optional. A man does not have to go into the Federal warehouse system unless he wishes to do so, and I propose that the Federal power shall only apply to a warehouse which is either licensed or is applying for a license. Why, in my State of New York there are 70 miles of warehouses standing side by side upon the piers and wharves of New York City.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does the gentleman notice that it is provided, beginning in line 22, on page 29—

That the term "warehouse" as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure—

And so on.

Mr. BENNET. Every building.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Licensed——

Mr. BENNET. It does not say that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. For interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. BENNET. I will read it correctly:

SEC. 2. That the term "warehouse" as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure in which any agricultural product is or may be stored for interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Under this act it would only be in case the license was issued that the Government would have any authority.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Michigan ought to read this language. The gentleman is stating this act as it ought to be and as it will be if my amendment is adopted; but here is the language, in lines 11 and 12, on page 30:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized—

And now, in line 22—

to classify warehouses—

Not licensed warehouses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask the gentleman from Iowa if he will yield me some more time?

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time?

Mr. BENNET. Five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am afraid I can not give the gentleman five. I will give him three.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HELM. What is the meaning of section 4, page 31?

Mr. BENNET. That is in accordance with the scheme of the bill. That is all very proper. That is that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to issue licenses to any warehouseman when he finds the warehouse suitable and proper.

Mr. HELM. Is not that what you are advocating, a license?

Mr. BENNET. I am objecting to power being conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture to go into a warehouse that does not desire to be licensed, that is not licensed, that has not applied for a license, and inspecting that warehouse under the power which is given by the language in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman hold that the language he has read gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to inspect a warehouse?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Where?

Mr. BENNET (reading lines 11 and 12, together with line 22)—

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized * * * to classify warehouses in accordance with their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, conditions, and other qualities.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina is one of the best lawyers in the House.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman flatters me.

Mr. BENNET. I do not. I tell the truth about the gentleman. Now, will the gentleman answer me a question? I have no purpose to serve except to make the law what I think it ought to be, and what the intention was to make it. Would not my language really clarify the section if you add, after the word "warehouses," the words "licensed or applying for a license"; because that is what it is intended to apply to, is it not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not think anyone would construe the language of the section as having that meaning.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman then say why is it that this is the only place in the bill where, under similar circumstances, the word "license" is omitted. Then I call the gentleman's attention to this—what do the words "may be issued," in line 25 mean if this language does not apply to warehouses other than licensed warehouses?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My construction of it was that by that very language it was limited to warehouses to which licenses were issued. They could not be issued unless they applied for a license.

Mr. BENNET. Why not say so in explicit words, that a man's property within the boundaries of a State—and the gentleman is a Democrat and ought to agree with me—ought to be protected from the Federal Government unless he puts himself in the way of the inspection. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, on the 6th day of December, 1915, I introduced a bill (H. R. 432) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to license tobacco warehouses, and for other purposes. The bill before the House enlarges upon the scope of that bill introduced by me and includes not only tobacco but cotton, wool, grain, and flaxseed. I consider this a very wholesome piece of legislation and am most heartily in accord with it and in favor of it, and am especially gratified to see the principles of my bill, in its amplified and enlarged form, so soon enacted into law.

I was led to introduce the bill I introduced by the lesson I learned in my State from observing the operation of the bonded distiller's warehouse. I have in mind certain gentlemen who operate very extensive distilling businesses, and these men have a part of the time, but not all the time, been bankrupt; and yet during the time they were bankrupt they were able to conduct a business that amounts to perhaps half a million or three-quarters of a million dollars a year.

I was curious to understand how it was that men could conduct such an extensive business and be so weak financially. I reached the conclusion that it was a system of credits. The Government issues to distillers what is known as a bonded warehouse receipt. This piece of paper is a bankable piece of paper, like a bank note, and passes upon delivery. It is a prime, commercial, bankable piece of paper that you can take to any bank in the United States and it will be accepted as gilt-edged collateral. All the banker was interested in when the receipt was presented to him was to know that it represented a barrel of distilled spirits in a United States bonded warehouse.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think the same thing applies to the warehouses under State control?

Mr. HELM. Every State has different rules and regulations and practices. The object of this bill is to establish uniformity and regularity in order to insure commercial stability. More especially does the export trade, the export business, which in a large measure controls the domestic price, depend largely upon one established and accepted system of grading, classification, and standardization. If there is one standard of grading or classification in one State and a different standard in another State you get your wires crossed and get into complications. If there is uniformity throughout the United States the banks say "Yes; that is acceptable paper we are glad to accommodate you, glad to handle it."

Mr. MADDEN. Do not they handle it now?

Mr. HELM. They do; but not with the alacrity and willingness that they will under this standardization and uniform operation. As I was attempting to say, when the United States bonded warehouse certificate is presented to the banker he knows that security is under Uncle Sam's care and under his watchful eye, and when the time comes that it will be paid, because the collateral on which it was issued will be on hand.

The features of the bill and its different sections are admirably set forth and explained in the report of the committee accompanying the bill. Under leave of the House I shall add this report as an appendix and extension of my remarks.

The report is as follows:

This bill provides for the inauguration of a uniform system of warehousing, under Federal supervision, for staple and nonperishable agricultural products.

The outbreak of the European war emphasized the fact that the farm marketing machinery of this country is seriously weak, insufficient, and inadequate—a condition which already had been more or less recognized by students of farm economics. From a very thorough study of our system of marketing there will appear: (1) A lack of adequate storage facilities; (2) a lack of proper control and regulation of such storage systems as exist; (3) an absence of uniformity in their methods of operation and the form of receipts issued; (4) a multiplicity of standards for grading and classification, or in some cases an entire absence of such standards for grading and classification; (5) a lack of disinterested graders, classifiers, and weighers; (6) a lack of proper relationship between the storage and banking systems of the country.

The inauguration under this bill of a permissive system of warehouses licensed and bonded under authority of the Federal Government for the storage of staple and nonperishable agricultural products upon which uniform receipts may be issued, the weights and grades of the products specified therein having been previously determined by licensed weighers and graders in accordance with Government standards, would go far in the direction of standardizing warehouse construction, storage conditions, insurance, accounting, financing, and the handling and marketing of farm products.

The essential purpose of this bill is to provide machinery by which farm products may be brought into the most intimate contact with the commercial and investment banking world. Farm products of staple and nonperishable character, such as cotton, grain, wool, tobacco, and the like, undoubtedly furnish the very best security for procuring credit, for these products are the most accurate and unvarying barometers of the country's prosperity as well as indispensable factors in its physical existence and activity. Notwithstanding this fact, collateral based upon farm products affords only a most indifferent basis of credit, being rated, as it were, as of secondary strength. The result is that the farmer with perfectly sound security finds himself at the mercy of those who have come to look upon that security with a degree of suspicion as to its soundness as a basis for loans. That this situation should exist—and all agree that it does exist—is due, not to any inherent weakness in the security, but to the nonliquid and otherwise unattractive form of the collateral which it secures. We are seeking in this bill to put farm products in such position that they may assert their full value and strength, and this can be done only through a system which assures to the investor their quality, quantity, and safekeeping, and at the same time affords him an investment which is readily negotiable.

A study of the provisions of the bill will show that great care has been taken for the protection of the integrity of the receipt issuing from the warehouses proposed to be licensed, for a warehouse receipt, to be of the fullest strength as collateral and as readily negotiable as possible in the financial markets of the country, must be a receipt of unquestioned character. We are trying to enable the farmer to mobilize the greatest possible part of the value of his annual farm yields by the use of a warehouse receipt of such undoubted integrity that it will flow into the general system of securities and become realizable upon at any time in the general market. We hope to make the warehouse receipt serve the same purpose with respect to the products of the land that the bond in a rural-credit system serves with respect to the land itself.

The Federal Reserve Board has ruled that farm notes secured by proper warehouse receipts are rediscountable. It will be observed, however, that such notes must be secured by proper warehouse receipts before they may be rediscounted, and, of course, the stronger the receipt the greater its negotiability and, within the limits of the law of supply and demand, the lower the rate of interest upon the note which it secures. It is absolutely essential to the prosperity of the farmer that every facility should be offered him to take advantage of the liberal provisions of the Federal reserve act, and your committee believes that the enactment of this bill into law would go further toward the accomplishment of this purpose than any proposal heretofore advanced for your consideration.

Your committee has already directed attention to the absence of uniformity in methods of storing and caring for agricultural products, in the standards for grading and classification, and in the form of receipts issued by warehouses. The advantages to be derived from such uniformity are too patent to admit of argument, and the bill proposes, by providing for such uniformity to bring all parts of the country into the closest commercial and financial relationship.

Your committee wishes to emphasize the fact that the provisions of this bill are permissive and in no sense compulsory. It can in no wise interfere with warehouse systems organized under State or local authority, but provision is made for cooperative action between the Federal Government and the States in which warehouses are organized under State legislation.

The following is a brief summary by sections of the various provisions of the bill:

Section 1 gives the title of the bill.

Section 2 defines the terms "warehouse," "agricultural product," "person," and "receipt."

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the storage, warehousing, classifying, weighing, and certification of agricultural products; to license persons to conduct warehouses and to inspect such warehouses; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses have been applied for or have been issued under the act are suitable for the proper storage of agricultural products; to classify warehouses; and to prescribe, within the limitations of the act, the duties of warehousemen conducting warehouses licensed under the act.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized upon application to him to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse, in accordance with the terms of the act and under such rules and regulations as may be made under the act. This section contains a proviso that each warehouse shall be suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product for which a license is granted and also that such warehouseman agrees, as a condition to the granting of the license, that he will comply with and abide by all the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder.

Section 5 limits the term of a license to one year and specifies that the date upon which the license terminates shall be stated in the license, but permits renewal of licenses from time to time upon showing satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Section 6 provides that each warehouseman applying for a license shall execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a bond to the United States in order to secure the performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder, and of such additional obligations as the warehouseman may assume under contract with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse.

Section 7 permits any person injured by the breach of any obligation under the bond given under the provisions of sections 6 or 9 to sue on the bond in his own name in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover any damages that may have been sustained by such breach.

Section 8 permits a warehouse which has filed a bond which has received the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, to be designated as "bonded under the United States warehouse act," and denies this privilege to other warehouses not so bonded.

Section 9 empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to license any person not a warehouseman to accept the custody of agricultural products and to store them in a warehouse upon the condition that such person comply with and abide by the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder. It directs such person so licensed to issue receipts for agricultural products placed in his custody and requires that he shall give bond in accordance with the provisions of the act and the rules and regulations made thereunder affecting warehousemen licensed under the act, and further specifies that he shall be subject to the act and the rules and regulations thereunder to the same extent as is provided for warehousemen licensed under the act.

Section 10 directs that the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge a reasonable fee for every examination or inspection of a warehouse licensed under the act when such examination or inspection is made upon the application of a warehouseman, and a fee not exceeding $2 per annum for each license or renewal thereof issued to a warehouseman.

Section 11 gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority in his discretion to issue to any person a license to classify any agricultural product stored, or to be stored, in a warehouse licensed under this act and to certificate its grade or class, or to weigh the same and to certificate its weight upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder.

Section 12 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend or revoke for cause licenses issued under authority of this act.

Section 13 prohibits discrimination on the part of licensed warehousemen against persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

Section 14 specifies that any person who deposits agricultural products for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the terms of the act and the rules and regulations made thereunder.

Section 15 makes mandatory that grain, flaxseed, or other fungible agricultural products received for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same.

Section 16 requires that every warehouseman licensed under this act shall keep separate the agricultural products of one depositor from those of another so as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the agricultural products deposited; but permits a warehouseman to mingle or mix fungible agricultural products of the same grade.

Section 17 directs that receipts shall be issued by a warehouseman for all agricultural products stored in such warehouse and specifies that receipts shall not be issued except for agricultural products that are actually stored at the time of the issuance of the receipt.

Section 18 specifies the terms of the receipt that shall be issued for agricultural products stored in licensed warehouses. These specifications are as follows: (a) Location of the warehouse. (b) Date of issue of the receipt. (c) Consecutive number of the receipt. (d) A statement whether the agricultural products received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order. (e) The rate of storage charges. (f) A description of the agricultural products received showing the quantity thereof, or, in case of agricultural products customarily put up in bales or packages, a description of such bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification, and the weight of such bales or packages. (g) The grade or class of the agricultural products received and the standard in accordance with which such classification has been made. The proviso is made that the official standards of the United States shall be used in stating the grade or class of agricultural products stored. It is provided further that until official standards for any agricultural product have been fixed and promulgated, the grade or class of such agricultural product may be stated in accordance with any recognized standard, or in accordance with such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. (h) A statement that the receipt is issued subject to the United States warehouse act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder. (i) If the receipt be issued for agricultural products of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly or in common with others, the fact of such ownership. (j) A statement of the amount of advances made and the liabilities incurred for which a warehouseman claims a lien. (k) Such other terms and conditions within the limitations of this act as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture. (l) The signature of the warehouseman which may be made by his authorized agent.

These terms must be incorporated in every receipt. It is provided that upon request by the depositor of other than fungible agricultural products a receipt omitting compliance with subdivision (g) of this section may be issued if it be conspicuously stated in its terms that such receipt is nonnegotiable.

Section 19 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and promulgate standards for agricultural products for the purposes of this act.

Section 20 specifies the conditions under which a duplicate receipt may be issued. These terms are (1) in places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, compliance with the statutes of the United States applicable thereto; (2) in any place not under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, compliance with the laws of any State applicable thereto; (3) if there be no such statute of the United States or law of a State applicable thereto, a new receipt may be issued after giving satisfactory security in compliance with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to this act.

Section 21 requires a licensed warehouse or a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under the act to deliver the agricultural products stored therein upon a demand made either by the holder of a receipt or by the depositor thereof, if such demand be accompanied with (a) an offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien; (b) an offer to surrender the receipt, if negotiable, with such indorsements as would be necessary for the negotiation of the receipt; and (c) a readiness and willingness to sign when the products are delivered an acknowledgment that they have been delivered if such signature is requested by the warehouseman.

Section 22 makes it mandatory upon the warehouseman conducting a warehouse under this act to cancel each receipt returned to him upon the delivery by him of the agricultural products for which the receipt was issued.

Section 23 requires that every warehouseman under this act shall keep complete records of agricultural products stored within his warehouse and withdrawn therefrom, and of all warehouse receipts issued by him, and of the receipts returned and canceled. A warehouseman is required to make such reports as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture and to conduct his warehouse in all respects in compliance with the terms of this act and the rules and regulations made thereunder.

Section 24 gives authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to cause examinations to be made of agricultural products stored in warehouses licensed under this act. The Secretary of Agriculture may publish his findings in case he discovers that a warehouseman is not performing fully the duties imposed upon him by this act.

Section 25 gives the Secretary of Agriculture power to suspend or revoke for cause and after hearing any license issued under the authority of this act.

Section 26 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to publish the results of any investigations made under section 3 of this act and makes it mandatory that he publish the names and locations of warehouses licensed and bonded, and the names of persons licensed under this act, and a list of all licenses terminated under this act, and the causes therefor.

Section 27 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses licensed under this act.

Section 28 gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

Section 29 provides that this act shall not be construed to conflict with the laws of any State relating to warehouses, warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers, but authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the officials of such States and through such cooperation to secure the enforcement of this act. The section also provides that the act shall not be construed so as to limit the operation of any statute of the United States relating to warehouses or warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers now in force in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Section 30 makes the violation of the terms of the act a misdemeanor and fixes the punishment at a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 31 appropriates $50,000 for carrying out the provisions of the act.

Section 32 states that in case any court shall declare any portion of this act to be invalid such judgment shall not impair or invalidate the remainder of the act.

Section 33 expressly reserves the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 2, after the word "product," insert the words "or interstate or foreign commerce"; page 30, line 5, after the word "they," at the end of the sentence, insert the words "intended for interstate or foreign commerce."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me necessary to have this amendment adopted in order to make the bill what it was intended to be, so there will be no misunderstanding as to its meaning. and in order that if the bill becomes a law it will be less objectionable than it is now.

On line 25, page 29, we find the words "for interstate and foreign commerce" as used in defining the word "warehouse." The bill as originally prepared and for a time considered in the committee did not contain those words. It was proposed by the author of the bill and those who supported it to have Federal inspection, Federal licensing, and Federal control over all warehouses, whether they were used or intended for storing of products in interstate or foreign commerce and whether or not there were any interstate or foreign commerce feature about them. Upon the insistent demand of some who did not believe in that kind of legislation these words in line 25 were inserted. I believe they were inserted with the consent of the chairman of the committee, Mr. LEVER, with the idea that they would control the entire bill; that is, that they would relate to and define "products" wherever the word appears, the same as if the words "interstate and foreign commerce" were used wherever the word "products" appears in the law.

In my opinion the better way, the safer way, if the idea of the Committee on Agriculture is to be carried out, is to have the words "interstate and foreign commerce" inserted as I have suggested in my amendment in keeping with the idea the committee had in mind when it put the words in line 25.

I trust that the gentleman from South Carolina, in looking over this amendment and weighing what I have said, will agree to it and permit the amendment to be made to the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have approved of the other amendments offered by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the cotton-future act and the grain-standardization act, but I think this act is faulty, that it goes too far, and am not able to give it my support. The purpose of this act, the House ought to know, is to provide for Government warehouses, inspection of warehouses, the issuing of receipts on products stored in these warehouses with the idea that receipts so issued can and will be made the basis for the issue of currency under the Federal reserve act. That is at the basis of this entire proposition. If it were not for that, this bill would not be here. Unless we approve that idea, we ought not to support this measure. Unless we believe that the Federal reserve act, with such construction as may be put upon it, as it now appears on the books or as it later may be amended at the demand of those who have been insistent in securing the passage of this bill, should permit the issuance of currency based on these warehouse receipts we ought not to support this measure. This bill, if it becomes law, is to be the foundation for what we call a "commodity currency" instead of an "asset currency," as provided by the Federal reserve act, which represents actual business activities and actual business transactions throughout the country, a safe basis, in the opinion of those who ought to know and as proved by business and banking and currency experience. If this bill becomes law, an effort will be made to amend the currency act, so as to permit the issuing of "commodity" currency, based on warehouse receipts. That practice or that system of currency will be unwise and will result in improper and dangerous inflation of the volume of currency, and, besides, the basis of currency so issued will be wrong.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to lines 24 and 25, on page 29, section 2. Does the gentleman not think the language in the last line there covers the point that he is making?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I know what the gentleman has in mind. I am familiar with the bill, and I will say to the gentleman, no, they have no relation whatever to it. They are simply describing what a warehouse is and what it must be. I am talking of the purpose behind this bill, why it was introduced, what use is to be made of it, and what these receipts are expected to do—play a part in the banking and currency system of the country.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. I do not call the attention of the gentleman to this in connection with the argument that he is making now, but with that part of his argument where the words "interstate or foreign commerce" ought to be inserted.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the words in line 25—I have stated that before, evidently the gentleman not being in the room—"or interstate or foreign commerce" were inserted with the idea that they would influence and control the entire bill; but, in my judgment, in order to be sure of that, the words I have suggested by way of amendment should be inserted in line 2 and also in line 5. Congress can regulate and control interstate commerce and the products entering into interstate commerce, but Congress has no authority, nor should it seek authority, over products which are not in and which are not intended to be put into interstate commerce. Nor should Congress assume jurisdiction over places in which such products are stored.

Mr. Chairman, I have further objection to this bill. I do not like the idea of the Federal Government taking over so much, undertaking so much work. I do not like the idea of the people asking the Federal Government to do so much and take such part and so intimately in the business the people are carrying on. I do not believe that it is a proper function of the Federal Government, and I wish to say that I think the tendency of recent legislation is wrong and dangerous as the Federal Government extends its activities, reaching out in all directions for all kinds of purposes, taking upon itself one line and another of work, and employing men for one purpose and another, going into the States in all these different ways, interfering with and taking part in the business of the people of the States, influencing, controlling, and directing them in one way and another; overruning the States with Federal employees, to say nothing of the political effect of the employment and the presence in the States of this vast number of men. Section 4 of the bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized on application to him to issue a license to any warehouseman; that is, to anyone who may apply who has a building, a shed, an inclosure, anything in which he is carrying or can carry on the business of storing products, no matter how insignificant it may be. This language in section 4 shows how far-reaching the activities of the Federal Government are to be.

Section 24 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall "cause examinations to be made" of agricultural products stored in warehouses, and section 27 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, through officials, employees, or agents of his department designated by him, "to examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses licensed under this act and of the warehousemen conducting such warehouses relating thereto." The language of these sections give us an idea of the extent to which this law will carry us, of the vast number of men to be employed to make examinations of all the licensed warehouses in the country, and from time to time to examine and inspect all the products of these warehouses and to examine the books, records, papers, and accounts of everybody doing a warehouse business. We may well ask, When and where will the activities of the Federal Government end? How far is the Government to go in "investigating," "inspecting," and "controlling" private business? How far should the Government go in assisting the people in carrying on their business and in aiding them to do what they can and ought to do for themselves? This bill, in my judgment, carries the work of the Government too far. It provides for or will permit the employment of too many men to go out among the people for the purpose of taking part in, directing, and influencing the course of private business. And in my judgment there is no demand for it, except in the South, where the people ask and accept assistance in many matters which in other parts of the country the people do and insist on taking care of for themselves. There is no need of such a law as this anywhere, and there is no demand for it except, as I have said, for the purpose of making warehouse receipts the basis of issues of currency. If the bill under any circumstances or for any reason is to be passed, the amendments which I offer for the purpose of limiting its operation to products in "interstate or foreign commerce" ought to be adopted.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a more important provision relating to agricultural welfare than this warehouse amendment to the bill which we are now considering. I believe that it is one of the several real constructive measures that this Committee on Agriculture has brought before the House. During the argument and consideration of this bill we have heard a good deal said upon the question of production, and that it is quite an important problem there can be no doubt. The rapidly increasing population of the country and the decrease in the fertility of the soil brings this matter forcibly to our attention. For half a century we have been a Nation of unexampled resources, a country of "milk and honey," so to speak. Our country has been one of unrivaled resources in soil, climate, mine, and forest. But we have "skimmed the cream," and it is now our duty to turn our attention to the question of increasing the productivity of our soils and learning how to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before.

But quite as important as the question of production is the question of marketing, because if we do not give attention to scientific and business methods of marketing our production will frequently become top-heavy and result in an actual loss instead of a benefit. Therefore the question of a proper marketing system is one that demands the serious attention of the Nation, and no such system can be complete and efficient without an effective warehouse system, especially as to our nonperishable agricultural products; and no system of warehousing can be comprehensive and efficient unless it is national in its scope and activities. This is the reason why I favor this warehouse amendment which Mr. LEVER has offered. The excellent results of a warehouse law are well illustrated in the case of the State of Texas, which I have the honor to represent in part. In 1914 the South raised over 16,000,000 bales of cotton, and as my colleague, Mr. YOUNG, has told you in his able speech this afternoon, during that year the State of Texas raised about four million and a half bales of that crop. The European war came on just as we were about ready to start to gather and market the crop, and what was the result? The country was panic stricken, business was paralyzed, the bottom of the market fell out, and the price of the South's great staple dropped in a few days from 12 and 13 cents a pound to 6 and 7 cents a pound. The result was disastrous both to the farmers and the business interests throughout the South. It has been many a day since the South was struck such a terrific blow. We had no warehouse laws that were adequate to meet the situation and no means arranged to systematically finance this crop during the period of its greatest distress. Our State legislature immediately met in extra session, and we enacted an emergency warehouse law which was a most excellent measure for the limited time that the legislature had in which to consider its provisions.

THE PRACTICAL WORKINGS OF THIS WAREHOUSE LAW.

Warehouses were quickly erected in many communities in Texas and placed themselves under the operation of the law, and while it is true that many farmers were unable because of financial reasons to warehouse and hold their cotton, it is also true that many farmers and business men did avail themselves of its provisions and profited well thereby. I do not speak alone from hearsay, but give testimony from actual experience as to the beneficial workings of this law. The business firm of which I am a member, a wholesale grocery company at Clarksville, in the spring and summer of 1914 had been liberal in its extension of credit to retail merchants, and when the disastrous drop in cotton prices came, and cotton was selling at 6 and 7 cents per pound, the conditions looked bad. We went to many of our merchant customers and told them to buy cotton from farmers who owed them, and wanted to sell, at 8 cents per pound, rather than to have them sell it on the open market at 6 and 7 cents per pound, and that we would permit them to turn it in to us at 8 cents per pound on their accounts, and we would warehouse it and hold it and take the risk of the price advancing to where we would come out on it without a loss.

Quite a number of our merchant customers took advantage of this offer, and bought the cotton from their farmer customers at this price, and we put it in a bonded warehouse, kept it there until the price of cotton advanced to where we could sell for a price that repaid us for the original price paid, plus insurance and carrying charges.

If we had continued to hold the cotton two months longer, we would have made a profit of $5 per bale on all we had bought.

As it was, we did not suffer any loss. I merely mention this personal instance as a practical illustration of the advantages of a warehouse system. It is no hearsay testimony. Many other wholesale and retail merchants in Texas did the same thing.

In addition to this, I know of a number of farmers who used the warehouses at Clarksville, where I live, that year of 1914, and made anywhere from $5 to $10 per bale by doing so.

TEXAS PERMANENT WAREHOUSE LAW.

When the regular session of the Texas Legislature met in 1915 they enacted our permanent warehouse law, under which we are now operating in our State. I shall not take up the time of the House in enumerating the good points of this law, except to say that it is managed by a board of supervisors composed of the governor, the commissioner of agriculture, and the commissioner of insurance and banking, and they in turn select the active management of the system. These warehouses must under bond grade or classify each bale of cotton offered for storage, giving a receipt showing, among other things, the elevation above sea level of the warehouse, and that the warehouse company guarantees the weight, class, and grade "within approximate limits" at the time of the issuance of the receipt.

The receipt must also contain a description of the bale, the rate of storage, and a statement that the cotton will be delivered to the bearer, a specified person, or to a specified person or his order, as the party storing may desire.

In addition to these provisions on the face of the receipt, there is a blank on the back of it for showing whether the cotton is free from incumbrances or liens of any kind, and if there are any liens this fact must be clearly set out.

This, in brief, is a statement of the provisions of the Texas permanent warehouse law, except that portion which relates to ginners; and inasmuch as the Lever warehouse amendment, which we are now discussing, has no application to gins or ginners I shall not take time to discuss that feature of the Texas warehouse law. It would not be pertinent to any provision of the bill which we are now discussing.

LEVER AMENDMENT DOES NOT IMPAIR OR LIMIT TEXAS WAREHOUSE LAW.

Section 29 of the amendment which we are now discussing provides—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with or to authorize any conflict with, or in any way to impair or limit the effect or operation of the laws of any State relating to warehouses, warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers; but the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with such officials as are charged with the enforcement of such laws in such States and through such cooperation to secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

The advantages of this act are that it is national in its scope and will secure a uniform system of licensing warehouses and issuing receipts for these nonperishable products, which will be readily receivable as commodity paper at the Federal reserve banks and will enable the wheat farmer and cotton farmer, if he desires to do so, to borrow money on his product at a low rate of interest and hold it for a better price than that which obtains at the time he makes the loan. A practical illustration of what can be done along this line is seen in the marketing of the 1915 cotton crop. At the opening of the marketing season for that year there was every indication that prices would again be very unsatisfactory. The European war had enlarged its scope of activities, and all shipments of cotton to Germany and Austria had ceased, by reason of England's contraband order in August, 1915. These adverse conditions were being taken advantage of to the fullest extent by those whose interest it was to Bear the market. In the midst of this condition Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo arranged for the deposit of $30,000,000 in gold of public funds in the Federal reserve banks at Atlanta, Dallas, and Richmond for the purpose of being used to rediscount loans made by national banks, as member banks, on cotton secured by warehouse receipts.

Ten days after this announcement on the part of Secretary McAdoo that he would deposit these Government funds in the South the Federal Reserve Board contributed greatly to the relief of the cotton situation by the adaptation and promulgation, on September 3, 1915, of regulations concerning commodity paper. Under these regulations all national banks and State banks which are members of the Federal reserve system may loan money to farmers or others on notes secured by nonperishable staple agricultural products properly warehoused and insured, and if the member banks charge the farmer or borrower on such "commodity paper" a rate of interest, including commissions, not exceeding 6 per cent per annum, they may rediscount such notes with the Federal reserve bank of their district at an interest rate of 3 per cent per annum. This gives the member bank an opportunity to make loans on commodity paper at an interest rate not exceeding 6 per cent per annum, and to rediscount or sell the same loan, if desired, to the Federal reserve bank in their respective districts at 3 per cent interest per annum, thus giving the borrower credit accommodations at a low rate of interest, the member bank a fair margin of profit on such loans, and the Federal reserve bank a reasonable compensation for the use of the money.

These regulations do not apply to cotton alone, but cover as well all nonperishable staple commodities in all parts of the country and, like credit facilities, are available to producers in any part of the United States. Did the deposit of these public funds in the South by Secretary McAdoo and the promulgation by the Federal Reserve Board of its commodity paper-rate regulations help the cotton market? I think any fair-minded man who is at all familiar with conditions that obtained will not hesitate for a moment to say that it did.

The local banks for the most part evidenced a splendid spirit of cooperation in the movement, and I am pleased to state that many of the banks in the district which I have the honor to represent took hold of this matter and made these loans on warehoused cotton at 6 per cent, and quite a number of them went down as low as 5 per cent on their rate. The effect of this show of confidence in the value of cotton as security was to stabilize the cotton market and give it a firm foundation, and cotton advanced from 8 and 9 cents per pound to 11 and 12 cents per pound in a very short space of time. Of course, I would not be extravagant enough to say that all of this advance resulted from the causes which I have enumerated, because I realize that decreased production was an important factor; but the fact remains that this advance in the price of cotton was worth more than $100,000,000 to the people of the South, and I think it is only justice to say that a substantial part of this amount was due to the definite and positive arrangements to finance cotton while it yet remained in the hands of the producer. There has never anything happened in the South which taught a better lesson than this to us all of the value of cooperation between the banker, the business man, and the farmer, and I hope that it is a good omen of the spirit of mutual cooperation which will obtain in the future. I have no patience with class hatred or prejudice. I detest the demagogue who continually preaches it. In every walk of life, whether on the farm or in the marts of trade, whether in the pulpit or the forum, the Nation needs men—

Men whom the spoils of office can not buy,
Men whom the lust of power will not kill,
Men who are honest, men who will not lie,
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And down his treacherous flattery without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.

CONCLUSION.

The Democratic administration, under the able leadership of President Wilson, has been one of record achievement. Its definite purpose has been the promotion of the welfare of all the people and not that of any special class. Its product has been a group of constructive laws that challenge the admiration of the Nation. I call the roll of some of them. There is the Underwood tariff law, which fulfilled the Democratic pledges of a tariff for revenue instead of protection for the favored few. There is the income-tax law, which makes wealth bear its just share of the burden of taxation. There is the Federal reserve act, which freed the country from the dangerous domination of the financial supremacy of one small section of the Nation and mobilizes our banking resources for the benefit of all the people. There is the cotton futures act, the grain graders' act, and this warehouse law, all enacted for the benefit of our great agricultural interests; and, as the crowning achievement of it all, this Democratic administration will soon give the people of the United States a rural-credits law, which will do more for the farming interests of the Nation than any law which has ever been placed upon the statute books.

Adam Smith, when he came to write his Wealth of Nations in 1776, remarked upon it as a truism that the policy of all great nations since the downfall of the Roman Empire "has been more favorable to arts, manufacture, and commerce, the industry of towns, than to agriculture, the industry of the country."

No one who has read history carefully can doubt that the great philosopher was right. But the present Democratic administration can not be justly subjected to this criticism.

To use the expression of President Wilson, we have seen the dawn of a "new freedom"—the liberation of the spirit of Democracy, which teaches that those only are great things which tend to render life more happy, peace more secure, and pave the way for a state of future prosperity more permanent and enduring.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment by way of substitute which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, strike out all after the word "that," in line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"This act shall be known by the short title of 'United States warehouse act.'

"SEC. 2. That the term 'warehouse' as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure situated on the line or at the terminal of a common carrier engaged in the transportation of agricultural products in interstate or foreign commerce in which any agricultural product is or may be stored for hire, but shall include such warehouses operated by a State or by cooperative associations for the benefit of their own members. The term 'agricultural product' wherever used in this act shall be deemed to mean grain, flaxseed, cotton, wool, and tobacco. As used in this act 'person' includes a corporation or partnership or two or more persons having a joint or common interest; 'warehouseman' means a person lawfully engaged in the business of storing agricultural products, and 'receipt' means a warehouse receipt.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate the storage, warehousing, classifying according to grade and otherwise, weighing, and certification of agricultural products; upon application to him by any person applying for license to conduct a warehouse under this act, to inspect such warehouse or cause it to be inspected; at any time, with or without application to him, to inspect or cause to be inspected all warehouses licensed under this act; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses are applied for or have been issued under this act are suitable for the proper storage of any agricultural product or products; to classify warehouses according to their ownership, location, surroundings, capacity, condition, and other qualities, and as to the kinds of licenses issued or that may be issued for them pursuant to this act.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him, to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse or warehouses in accordance with this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder: Provided, That each such warehouse be found suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product or products for which a license is applied for, and that a bond shall have been filed and approved as required by this act.

"SEC. 5. That each license issued under sections 4 and 9 of this act shall be issued for a period not exceeding one year and shall specify the date upon which it is to terminate, and that it is issued under the terms of this act.

"SEC. 6. That each warehouseman applying for a license to conduct a warehouse in accordance with this act shall, prior to the granting thereof, execute and file with the Secretary of Agriculture a good and sufficient bond other than personal security to the United States to secure the faithful performance of his obligations as a warehouseman under the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which he is conducting such warehouse, as well as under the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, and of such additional obligations as a warehouseman as may be assumed by him under contracts with the respective depositors of agricultural products in such warehouse. Said bond shall be in such form and amount, shall have such surety or sureties, subject to service of process in suits on the bond within the State, District, or Territory in which the warehouse is located, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe to carry out the purposes of this act. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that a bond approved by him is or for any cause has become insufficient, he may require an additional bond or bonds to be given by the warehouseman concerned, conforming with the requirements of this section, and unless the same be given within the time fixed by a written demand therefor the license of such warehouseman may be suspended or revoked.

"SEC. 7. That any person injured by the breach of any obligation to secure which a bond is given, under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to sue on the bond in his own name in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the damages he may have sustained by such breach.

"SEC. 8. That it shall be unlawful for any person to designate any warehouse owned or operated by him as bonded or licensed under this act, or to use any name or description in any receipt issued by him, conveying the impression that it is so bonded or licensed, or otherwise convey such impression, unless said warehouse is licensed under this act.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall charge, assess, and cause to be collected a reasonable fee for every examination or inspection of a warehouse under this act when such examination or inspection is made upon application of a warehouseman, and a fee not exceeding $2 per annum for each license or renewal thereof issued to a warehouseman under this act. All such fees shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation of satisfactory proof of competency, issue to any person authorized under the laws of any State to grade or weigh agricultural products a license to classify any agricultural product or products, stored or to be stored in a warehouse licensed under this act, according to grade or otherwise, and to certificate the grade or other class thereof, or to weigh the same and certificate the weight thereof, or both to weigh and classify the same and to certificate the weight and the grade or other class thereof, upon condition that such person agree to comply with and abide by the terms of this act and of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder so far as the same relate to him.

"SEC. 11. That it shall be unlawful for any person to certify the class, grade, weight, or condition of any agricultural product stored or to be stored in any warehouse licensed under this act, or to use any name or description conveying the impression that he is authorized to issue such a certificate under this act, unless such person is licensed under this act.

"SEC. 12. That any license issued to any person to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products under this act may be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture whenever he is satisfied, after opportunity afforded to the licensee concerned for a hearing, that such licensee has failed to classify or to weigh any agricultural product or products correctly, or has violated any of the provisions of this act or of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, so far as the same may relate to him, or that he has used his license or allowed it to be used for any improper purpose whatsoever. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 13. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall receive for storage therein, so far as its capacity permits, any agricultural product of the kind customarily stored therein by him which may be tendered to him in a suitable condition for warehousing, in the usual manner in the ordinary and usual course of business, without making any discrimination between persons desiring to avail themselves of warehouse facilities.

"SEC. 14. That grain, flaxseed, or any other fungible agricultural product received for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be inspected and graded by a person duly licensed to grade the same under this act.

"SEC. 15. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep the agricultural products therein of one depositor so far separate from agricultural products of other depositors, and from other agricultural products of the same depositor for which a separate receipt has been issued, as to permit at all times the identification and redelivery of the agricultural products deposited; but if authorized by agreement or by custom, a warehouseman may mingle fungible agricultural products with other agricultural products of the same kind and grade, and shall be severally liable to each depositor for the care and redelivery of his share of such mass, to the same extent and under the same circumstances as if the agricultural products had been kept separate, but he shall at no time while they are in his custody mix fungible agricultural products of different grades.

"SEC. 16. That for all agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under this act original receipts shall be issued by the warehouseman conducting the same, but no receipts shall be issued except for agricultural products actually stored in the warehouse at the time of the issuance thereof.

"SEC. 17. That every receipt issued for agricultural products stored in a warehouse licensed under this act shall embody within its written or printed terms (a) the location of the warehouse in which the agricultural products are stored; (b) the date of issue of the receipt; (c) the consecutive number of the receipt; (d) a statement whether the agricultural products received will be delivered to the bearer, to a specified person, or to a specified person or his order; (e) the rate of storage charges; (f) a description of the agricultural products received, showing the quantity thereof, or, in case of agricultural products customarily put up in bales or packages, a description of such bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification, and the weight of such bales or packages; (g) the grade or other class of the agricultural products received and the standard or description in accordance with which such classification has been made: Provided, That such grade or other class shall be stated according to the official standard of the United States applicable to such agricultural products as the same may be fixed and promulgated under authority of law: Provided further, That until such official standards of the United States for any agricultural product or products have been fixed and promulgated, the grade or other class thereof may be stated in accordance with any recognized standard or in accordance with such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; (h) a statement that the receipt is issued subject to the United States warehouse act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder; (i) if the receipt be issued for agricultural products of which the warehouseman is owner, either solely or jointly or in common with others, the fact of such ownership; (j) a statement of the amount of advances made and of liabilities incurred for which the warehouseman claims a lien: Provided, That if the precise amount of such advances made or of such liabilities incurred be at the time of the issue of the receipt unknown to the warehouseman or his agent who issues it, a statement of the fact that advances have been made or liabilities incurred and the purpose thereof shall be sufficient; (k) such other terms and conditions within the limitations of this act as may be required by the Secretary of Agriculture; and (l) the signature of the warehouseman, which may be made by his authorized agent: Provided, That unless otherwise required by the law of the State in which the warehouse is located, when requested by the depositor of other than fungible agricultural products, a receipt omitting compliance with subdivision (g) of this section may be issued if it have plainly and conspicuously embodied in its written or printed terms a provision that such receipt is not negotiable.

"SEC. 18. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards for agricultural products in this act defined by which their quality or value may be judged or determined: Provided, That the standards for any agricultural products which have been, or which in future may be, established by or under authority of any other act of Congress shall be, and are hereby, adopted for the purposes of this act as the official standards of the United States for the agricultural products to which they relate.

"SEC. 19. That while an original receipt issued under this act is outstanding and uncanceled by the warehouseman issuing the same no other or further receipt shall be issued for the agricultural products covered thereby or for any part thereof, except that in the case of a lost or destroyed receipt a new receipt, upon the same terms and subject to the same conditions and bearing on its face the number and date of the receipt in lieu of which it is issued, may be issued upon compliance with the statutes of the United States applicable thereto in places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States or upon compliance with the laws of any State applicable thereto in any place not under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That if there be in such case no statute of the United States or law of a State applicable thereto such new receipts may be issued upon the giving of satisfactory security in compliance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

"SEC. 20. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act, in the absence of some lawful excuse, shall, without unnecessary delay, deliver the agricultural products stored therein upon a demand made either by the holder of a receipt for such agricultural products or by the depositor thereof if such demand be accompanied with (a) an offer to satisfy the warehouseman's lien; (b) an offer to surrender the receipt, if negotiable, with such indorsements as would be necessary for the negotiation of the receipt; and (c) a readiness and willingness to sign, when the products are delivered, an acknowledgment that they have been delivered if such signature is requested by the warehouseman.

"SEC. 21. That a warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall cancel each receipt returned to him upon the delivery by him of the agricultural products for which the receipt was issued.

"SEC. 22. That every warehouseman conducting a warehouse licensed under this act shall keep in a place of safety complete and correct records of all agricultural products stored therein and withdrawn therefrom, of all warehouse receipts issued by him, and of the receipts returned to and canceled by him, shall make reports to the Secretary of Agriculture concerning such warehouse and the condition, contents, operation, and business thereof in such form and at such times as he may require, and shall conduct said warehouse in all respects in compliance with this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder.

"SEC. 23. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any agricultural product stored in any warehouse licensed under this act. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the warehouseman conducting such warehouse, it is determined that he is not performing fully the duties imposed on him by this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder, the Secretary may publish his findings.

"SEC. 24. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, after opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the licensee concerned, suspend or revoke any license issued to any warehouseman conducting a warehouse under this act, for any violation of or failure to comply with any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder or upon the ground that unreasonable or exorbitant charges have been made for services rendered. Pending investigation, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time may publish the results of any investigations made under section 3 of this act; and he shall publish the names and locations of warehouses licensed and bonded and the names and addresses of persons licensed under this act and lists of all licenses terminated under this act and the causes therefor.

"SEC. 26. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 27. That nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with, or to authorize any conflict with, or in any way to impair or limit the effect or operation of the laws of any State relating to warehouses, warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers; but the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with such officials as are charged with the enforcement of such State laws in such States and through such cooperation to secure the enforcement of the provisions of this act; nor shall this act be construed so as to limit the operation of any statute of the United States relating to warehouses or warehousemen, weighers, graders, or classifiers now in force in the District of Columbia or in any Territory or other place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

"SEC. 28. That every person who shall forge, alter, counterfeit, simulate, or falsely represent, or shall without proper authority use, any license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, or who shall violate or fail to comply with any provision of section 8 of this act, or who shall issue or utter a false or fraudulent receipt or certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 29. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and he is authorized, in his discretion, to employ qualified persons not regularly in the service of the United States for temporary assistance in carrying out the purposes of this act, and out of the moneys appropriated by this act to pay the salaries and expenses thereof.

"SEC. 30. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 31. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have not offered this amendment with any hope that it will be adopted. I offer it in order that the House and the country may be informed of my notion of what this bill ought to provide.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair interrupt the gentleman to inquire how much time he wishes to take?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; five minutes. I realize the utter futility of offering an amendment which attempts to deal with this proposition on any basis different from that proposed in the amendment now under consideration.

In the circumstances under which we are legislating we are able to get only five minutes in which to discuss the fundamental propositions involved in this amendment. We can not get a vote at the end of the argument, but as a result of the rule adopted the vote on such amendments as are proposed will be determined by men who are not on the floor now, who do not hear the arguments, and who consequently can know nothing of the merits or demerits of the respective propositions advanced.

The amendment under consideration as it was originally reported to the House dealt with warehouses, whether those warehouses were engaged in the storage of grain, cotton, wool, or other agricultural products, in interstate and foreign commerce or in intrastate commerce. I attempted in the committee to have adopted amendments which would bring this proposition clearly within the constitutional power of the Congress. The committee having failed to take my view of the question, I prepared a speech, outlining my position and the constitutional objections to the bill as it was originally reported; but the committee had a change of heart on that subject, and after the bill was reported inserted in it amendments limiting its scope to warehouses engaged in the storage of grain in interstate and foreign commerce only, thereby accepting the position which I had taken on the bill.

I suppose I should be satisfied that the committee has accepted my view of the situation, but I can not but regret that the committee has deprived me of an opportunity to deliver a very good speech on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. That is for the speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think the House ought to be deprived of the opportunity of reading the speech, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may insert it in the RECORD at the end of my remarks to-day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the speech indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. The amendment as it is now presented deals with warehouses on the theory that Congress has the right to regulate warehouses receiving grain shipped or intended for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce. Its jurisdiction rests upon the proposition that the grain stored in these elevators has moved or will move in interstate and foreign commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, may I have three or four minutes more?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered deals with the elevator as an instrumentality of interstate and foriegn commerce and is consequently much broader than the amendment offered by the committee. In addition, the amendment which I have offered eliminates from the bill the provisions for an inspection service which I believe will seriously interfere with the State systems as they now exist. The bill of the committee, as originally reported, was wholly permissive, and the obligations of the warehouseman rested entirely upon his agreement to be bound by the regulations issued by the Department of Agriculture. The amendment which I have offered imposes those obligations not by virtue of any agreement which the warehouseman may make with the Secretary of Agriculture, but upon the power of Congress to regulate warehouses or warehousemen engaged in operating warehouses as instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce; and in that respect I think it improves the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

The speech referred to is as follows:

"The pending bill is the result of a great emergency.

"During the season of 1914 the South raised the largest crop of cotton in its history. The European war destroyed the market for a large part of this crop, and the South found itself with some 2,000,000 bales of cotton which it must carry over to the succeeding year.

"A survey of the situation showed that the warehouse facilities of the South were absolutely inadequate for the storage of this vast quantity of cotton until the next season and that the Southern States were for the most part entirely without adequate laws for the regulation of such warehouses as actually existed or might be established.

"Warehouse receipts issued under these circumstances were not liquid and loans could be made upon them only in a comparatively limited market. The bill under consideration was originally introduced to meet this situation, to provide facilities for the storage of the cotton and at the same time such regulation as would stabilize the receipts issued by the institutions licensed under the act and make them available as a basis for the issue of currency by the Federal reserve banks.

"For several years there has been in the grain-growing sections of the country a feeling that the State inspection and warehousing systems operated in the interest of the large users and speculators in grain. A great many people in these grain-growing sections believed that Federal control of warehousing and grain-inspection systems was necessary in the interest of the producer. They saw in the cotton-warehouse bill a vehicle for the passage of Federal legislation for the regulation of grain warehousing and grain inspection. They sought to take advantage of the emergency confronting the South to bring about certain legislative results which they thought desirable. The consequence of this situation was the coupling of the supposed interests of the cotton sections of the South with the grain-growing sections of the North in the warehouse bill which is now under consideration.

"The bill proposes, if it accomplishes what I understand to be its ideal, to do in a different way for the warehouses of the country what the national-bank law did for national banks—to make a warehouse as safe a depository for agricultural products as the national bank is for money; to make a certificate of storage issued by a warehouse as stable, as negotiable, as liquid as a certificate issued by a bank. These purposes are desirable. My objection to the bill is not that it will accomplish these results, but that it will not accomplish them.

"The bill, as a whole, is of such doubtful constitutionality, so uncertain in its terms, and so unenforceable in its regulations as to defeat the purposes for which it is proposed to be enacted.

"When I say the bill is unconstitutional, I do not wish to be understood as questioning the power of Congress to regulate the warehousing of agricultural products so far as the warehousing may be incidental or appropriate to the transportation of these products in interstate or foreign commerce. I merely assert that we have not the power to regulate the warehousing of agricultural products in the way and to the extent which it is proposed by this bill to regulate it.

"It is significant that the report of the committee makes no attempt to establish a constitutional basis for the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is one of the ablest and most adroit men in this House. He is at the same time the kindliest and most amiable. But I have too high a regard for his wisdom to suppose that the failure to establish a constitutional basis for the bill was the result of inadvertence. I suspect that this omission was the result of a desire on the part of the Chairman to make it present as small a target as possible.

"It is obvious from the definition of the term "warehouse" in the second section of the bill, which controls the operation of the bill and which reads as follows:

"That the term 'warehouse' as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, structure, or other protected inclosure in which any agricultural product is or may be stored.

"That its provisions apply to warehouses doing a strictly intrastate business. There are no provisions in the bill which can possibly be construed in such a way as to limit the operation of the bill to warehouses whose operation is incidental or appropriate to the transportation of agricultural products in interstate or foreign commerce. In the absence of language limiting the operation of the act to such warehouses as are operated incidentally or appropriately to the transportation of agricultural products in interstate or foreign commerce, it is apparent that the constitutionality of the bill can not be sustained under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the Trade-Mark cases—One hundredth United States Reports, page 82—and the Employers' Liability cases—Two hundred and seventh United States Reports, page 463.

"In both of these cases it was decided that where no language was contained in the act restricting its operation to subjects legitimately within the scope of the interstate-commerce clause, the court could not, and would not, write in such words for the purpose of sustaining the constitutionality of the act.

"In the Trade-Mark cases the court said, page 99 (207 U. S., p. 502):

"If we should, in the case before us, undertake to make by judicial construction a law which Congress did not make, it is quite probable we should do what, if the matter were now before that body, it would be unwilling to do, namely, make a trade-mark law which is only partial in its operation, and which would complicate the rights which parties would hold, in some instances under the act of Congress and in others under State law.

"This language is quoted with approval and the principle stated sustained in the Employers' Liability cases referred to.

"In the Employers' Liability cases the constitutionality of the employers' liability act approved June 11, 1906, was in question. The act, by its terms and by the construction of the court, applied to the employees of all common carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, whether these employees were at the time of the injury or death actually engaged in interstate commerce or not. The court said, page 504:

"Concluding, as we do, that the statute, whilst it embraces subjects within the authority of Congress to regulate commerce, also includes subjects not within its constitutional power, and that the two are so interblended in the statute that they are incapable of separation, we are of the opinion that the courts below rightly held the statute to be repugnant to the Constitution and nonenforceable.

"The decisions in these cases are unquestionably applicable to the bill under consideration, and undoubtedly prohibit the possibility that the court would sustain the constitutionality of this bill under the interstate-commerce clause.

"If the bill can not be sustained by the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, I assert that it can not be sustained at all. The proponents of the bill assert that it may be sustained under the so-called 'general-welfare clause' of the Constitution, which provides:

"That Congress shall have power to levy taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts; and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

"The bare statement of this proposition is its own refutation. So far as I know, this is the first time it has ever been asserted that under this clause Congress might pass legislation affecting the substantive rights of individuals or invade the domain of the powers reserved to the States.

"It has uniformly been held by law writers and by the courts that the power conveyed to the Congress by the language 'to provide for the general welfare' was the power to appropriate money for the general welfare. It is not contended that this power is confined to the appropriation of money for the purposes specified in the remaining paragraphs of section 8 of the Constitution. Congress may appropriate for whatever in its judgment conduces to the general welfare, but this does not mean that Congress may, under the guise of appropriation, legislate upon upon every field of human activity, or that it can, under this clause of the Constitution, define the rights or liabilities of individuals or exercise a police power with respect to the domestic concerns of a State.

"I quote from Mr. Jefferson in his opinion on the power of Congress to establish a Bank of the United States, as it is found on page 390, Volume I, of Watson on the Constitution, as follows:

"To lay taxes to provide for the general welfare of the United States; that is to say, 'to lay taxes for the purpose of providing for the general welfare.' For the laying of taxes is the power and the general welfare the purpose for which the power is to be exercised. Congress are not to pay taxes ad libitum for any purpose they please, but only to pay the debts or provide for the welfare of the Union. In like manner they are not to do anything they please to provide for the general welfare, but only to lay taxes for that purpose. To consider the latter phrase not as describing the purpose of the first but as giving a distinct and independent power to do any act they please which might be for the good of the Union would render all the preceding and subsequent enumerations of power completely useless. It would reduce the whole instrument to a single phrase—that of instituting a Congress with power to do whatever would be for the good of the United States; and as they would be the sole judges of the good or evil, it would also be a power to do whatever evil they pleased. It is an established rule of construction, where a phrase will bear either of two meanings, to give it that which will allow some meaning to the other parts of the instrument and not that which will render all the others useless. Certainly no such universal power was meant to be given them. It was intended to lace them up strictly within the enumerated powers, and those without which, as means, these powers could not be carried into effect. It is known that the very power now proposed as a means was rejected as an end by the Convention which formed the Constitution."

"And from President Monroe's message to Congress of May 4, 1822, on the bill for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland Road, as found on pages 393 and following of the same volume of Watson on the Constitution, he says:

"That the second part of this grant—i. e., to provide for the general welfare—gives the right to appropriate the public money and nothing more is evident from the following considerations: First, if the right of appropriation is not given by this clause, it is not given at all. * * *

"In the second, because if the clause in question is not construed merely as an authority to appropriate the public money, it must be obvious that it conveys a power of indefinite and unlimited extent; that there would have been no use for the special powers to raise and support Armies and a Navy, to regulate commerce, to call forth the militia, or even to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. An unqualified power to pay the debts and provide for the general welfare and the common defense, as the second part of this clause would be if considered as a distinct and separate grant, would extend to every object in which the public could be interested. A power to provide for the common defense would give to Congress the command of the whole force and of all the resources of the Union, but a right to provide for the general welfare would go much further. It would, in effect, break down all the barriers between the States and the General Government and consolidate the whole under the latter."

"Again, on page 396, same volume:

"I have dwelt thus long on this part of the subject from an earnest desire to fix in a clear and satisfactory manner the import of the second part of this grant, well knowing from the generality of the terms used their tendency to lead into error. I indulge a strong hope that the view herein presented will not be without effect, but will tend to satisfy the unprejudiced and impartial that nothing more was granted by that part than a power to appropriate the public money raised under the other part."

"I quote from Watson on the Constitution, page 398, the second paragraph, as follows:

"We have seen that such eminent constitutional critics and commentators as Jefferson, Hamilton, Monroe, St. George Tucker, and Judge Story have given strong reasons in support of the view that the words 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises' did not confer upon Congress an unlimited power to lay taxes, but that the proper construction of these words connected them with those which immediately follow, namely, to 'pay the debts and provide for the general welfare of the United States,' and that they were limited by such words to levying taxes for the purpose of paying the debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare of the country. This view has been generally accepted as correct, and the controversy upon the subject may be regarded as settled.

"It thus appears that the powers granted by the first paragraph of section 8, namely, 'The power to levy taxes and provide for the common defense and the general welfare,' are in no way different from the powers granted in the other paragraphs of the same section. In other words, the power to levy taxes, provide for the common defense and the general welfare, is not a general power, but a specific power.

"The power to provide for the general welfare is not the general power to legislate upon everything which concerns the general welfare, but is the power to provide the funds; in other words, to appropriate money for the general welfare. It is the power to appropriate, not the power to regulate. That power exists only under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

"If it be established, as I think it is, that the power granted by the language 'To provide for the general welfare' is that of appropriating money, the question arises as to how far it extends and what its limits are.

"It has already been established that this power does not differ in kind from the other powers granted in the Constitution. It is an enumerated and specific power. Therefore the rules which apply to the construction or interpretation of the other enumerated and specific powers granted by section 8 ought to be and are the rules to be applied to the paragraph in question. One of these rules is found in the final paragraph of section 8, which reads as follows:

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

"The leading case interpreting the section just quoted is the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., p. 421), which defines the incidental power of Congress in this language:

"If the end be legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, all the means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited, may be constitutionally employed to carry it into effect.

"Applying this statement to the clause which empowers Congress to provide for the general welfare—in other words, to appropriate money for the general welfare—we find that Congress may employ 'all the means which are appropriate and which are plainly adapted' to carry into effect the power to appropriate money for the general welfare.

"The second rule which limits this power is found in Article X of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

"These paragraphs are just as much limitations upon the power to appropriate money as they are upon any other power granted by the Constitution, and limit the power to appropriate money to such laws as are 'necessary and proper' to carry that power into effect. They prohibit the invasion of the field of legislation reserved to the States under the power to appropriate money as much and to the same extent as they prohibit such invasion under any other power.

"The rule, then, is that such means may be used or laws passed under the power to appropriate money as are appropriate or applicable to the appropriation of money, and such as do not by their terms invade the domestic jurisdiction or police power of the States.

"The immediate question is whether the provisions of this bill are such as are appropriate or applicable to the appropriation of money. In order to determine this question recourse must be had to the terms of the bill itself. I confine myself to such sections as are clearly regulatory and which invade the police power of the State.

"Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, among other things, to prescribe the duties of the warehousemen conducting warehouses licensed under the act with respect to the care of and responsibility for agricultural products stored therein.

"Section 4 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a license for the conduct of the warehouse, providing the warehouseman shall agree to comply with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and by the terms of the act.

"Section 6 requires the warehouseman to file a bond to secure the faithful performance of his obligations and his compliance with the act and the rules prescribed.

"Section 7 authorizes any person injured by breach of the obligations of the bond to sue thereon.

"Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint persons to inspect, grade, and classify products which may be stored in warehouses licensed under this act, whether such products are stored in the course of interstate or intrastate commerce.

"Section 13 requires the warehouseman to receive agricultural products without discrimination.

"Section 14 provides that every person who stores grain in a licensed warehouse shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the provisions of the act and the rules made thereunder.

"Sections 16, 17, and 18 make applicable to warehouses licensed under the act the so-called uniform warehouse-receipts law.

"Section 23 requires the warehouseman to keep books and records.

"Section 24 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cause examination to be made of agricultural products stored in warehouses licensed under the act, and to publish his findings if it is determined that the warehouseman is not performing the duties imposed upon him by the act.

"Section 25 authorizes the Secretary to suspend or revoke the license of a warehouseman for failure to comply with the act or rules, or for making unreasonable charges.

"Section 27 authorizes the Secretary to inspect and examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses and warehousemen licensed under the act.

"Section 28 is a blanket provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations.

"Section 30 is a penal section designed to protect the genuineness of certificates of grade or of storage issued under the act.

"These provisions are clearly regulatory. Any and all of them might be imposed by a State under its police power. No power is anywhere given to Congress to regulate the internal affairs of the States, and such regulatory power as it possesses exists only as to interstate and foreign commerce.

"Can it be said that the power to appropriate money is the power to fix the duties and responsibilities of warehousemen in transactions wholly within a State; to require a warehouseman to give a bond for the performance of his duties; to fix his liabilities under that bond as they relate to a citizen of a State; to require every person who stores agricultural products in such a licensed warehouse to comply with the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, and to fix the rights of such person as against the warehouseman, whether the transaction is one in interstate or intrastate commerce; to require the receipts to be in certain form; to make it a penal offense subject to fine and imprisonment for a person to falsely simulate, counterfeit, forge, or alter a fraudulent receipt or certificate of weight or grade, or to violate the provisions of the act?

"These provisions do not relate to the appropriation of money. They have nothing to do with the appropriation of money. They in no proper sense control or limit the appropriation of money or its use when appropriated. They are purely regulatory. They regulate and determine the rights and obligations of individuals in both intrastate and interstate transactions. In every line they invade the domestic field of State legislation.

"It is claimed that if this bill can not be sustained under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, then it is not possible to sustain the act creating the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Reserve System, the reclamation acts, and the agricultural-extension acts.

"Each of these acts is distinguishable from the bill under consideration and rests upon wholly different provisions of the Constitution. The Federal Government is itself one of the enumerated powers. The Agricultural Department and the Federal reserve banks are agencies of the Federal Government, and as such it is within the power of Congress to create them and to appropriate money for their maintenance and support.

"The reclamation act applies to public land over which the Federal Government may exercise the same control as a private individual might exercise; if it is desirable to improve these lands in order to enhance the price at which they may be sold, the Federal Government, as a private owner, may appropriate money to improve them.

"No attempt was made in the Lever Act, or has been made in any other act resting upon the power of Congress to appropriate money, to fix or determine the rights of individuals or invade the exclusive domain of the States. The conditions imposed were conditions upon the departments of the Government in expending the money, and not regulations upon the individuals who received the benefits of the appropriation.

"The regulation of warehouses, the fixing of the responsibilities of warehousemen, the enactment of police ordinances for the protection of the public in dealing with such warehouses are powers exclusively within the domain of the States, except in so far as the warehouses may be instrumentalities in the transportation of goods in interstate or foreign commerce or the operations of the warehouses incidental to commerce between the States or with foreign countries. In so far as the operation of such a warehouse is intrastate, it can not be regulated by Congress under the general-welfare clause or any other, except as such regulation might be incidental to its regulation as an instrument of interstate or foreign commerce under the commerce clause, where its intrastate business could not be separated from its interstate business.

"The bill is obviously unconstitutional in that it attempts to regulate purely intrastate transactions and to fix the rights and liabilities of persons within the States with respect to such transactions. The proponents of the bill, however, claim that the regulatory provisions are valid because they are permissive only; that is, they apply only to such persons as apply for licenses and agree to be bound by them. I do not think this position is tenable.

"Whatever power Congress possesses it gets from the Constitution. The power is plenary and absolute, but it is not unlimited. If we have the power to regulate the business of warehouses at all, and to the extent that we have the power to regulate it, we may regulate it without the consent or agreement of the persons to be regulated. Their consent or agreement neither validates nor invalidates the law or any regulations made under it. In other words, the power to make a permissive law is the power to make a compulsory law, for the power to make the law at all is the sovereignty of the Government and not the will of the class to be regulated. If the regulations are invalid or unenforceable without the consent or agreement of those regulated, they are invalid and unenforceable with such consent or agreement.

"I have pointed out that this bill seeks to regulate intrastate transactions. Is it possible, if the Constitution gives us no authority to regulate those transactions, that we may acquire that power by the consent of the persons to be regulated? The powers of the States can not be enlarged or diminished by the Federal Government, nor can the powers of the Federal Government be enlarged or diminished by the States. How much less can they be enlarged or diminished by the consent or agrement of individuals?

"In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan et al. (3 Howard's Reports, p. 212), the court said (p. 224):

"And all constitutional laws are binding on the people, in the new States and the old ones, whether they consent to be bound by them or not. Every constitutional act of Congress is passed by the will of the people of the United States, expressed through their Representatives, on the subject matter of the enactment; and when so passed it becomes the supreme law of the land, and operates by its own force on the subject matter, in whatever State or Territory it may happen to be.

"This case involved the rights of the State of Alabama to the land between the high and low water marks in navigable streams, and the respective power of the Federal Government and the States to grant these lands or regulate their sale. On the particular question in controversy, the court said (p. 229):

"Then to Alabama belong the navigable waters, and soils under them, in controversy in this case, subject to the rights surrendered by the Constitution of the United States; and no compact that might be made between her and the United States could diminish or enlarge these rights.

"In the Passenger cases (7 Howard's Reports, p. 399), the court used this language:

"But the argument is, that a State acting in a subordinate capacity wholly inconsistent with its sovereignty, may regulate foreign commerce until Congress shall act on the same subject; and that the State must then yield to the paramount authority. A jealousy of the Federal powers has often been expressed, and an apprehension entertained that they would impair the sovereignty of the States. But this argument degrades the States by making their legislation, to the extent stated, subject to the will of Congress. State powers do not rest upon this basis. Congress can in no respect restrict or enlarge State powers, though they may adopt a State law. State powers are at all times and under all circumstances exercised independently of the General Government, and are never declared void or inoperative except when they transcend State jurisdiction. And on the same principle, the Federal authority is void when exercised beyond its constitutional limits.

"In the Chinese-exclusion case (130 U. S. Repts., p. 581), the court held:

"That the power of the legislative department of the Government to exclude aliens from the United States is an incident of sovereignty, which can not be surrendered by the treaty-making power.

"And that—

"The act * * * excluding Chinese laborers * * * so far as it conflicted with existing treaties between the United States and China, operated to abrogate the treaties as a part of the municipal law of the United States.

"In that case the court said (p. 609):

"The power of exclusion of foreigners being an incident of sovereignty belonging to the Government of the United States, as a part of those sovereign powers delegated by the Constitution, the right to its exercise at any time when, in the judgment of the Government, the interests of the country require it, can not be granted away or restrained on behalf of any one. The powers of government are delegated in trust to the United States, and are incapable of transfer to any other parties. They can not be abandoned or surrendered. Nor can their exercise be hampered, when needed for the public good, by any considerations of private interest. The exercise of these public trusts is not the subject of barter or contract.

"In the case of In re Rahrer (140 U. S. Repts, p. 545), which involved the constitutionality of an act making shipments of liquors subject to the police power of the State upon its arrival within the State, whether introduced in original packages or otherwise, it was held a valid exercise of the police power of the States, and not a regulation of interstate commerce. In that case the court said (p. 554):

"The power of the State to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the General Government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

"On page 560 the court said:

"Nor can Congress transfer legislative powers to a State nor sanction a State law in violation of the Constitution; and if it can adopt a State law as its own, it must be one that it would be competent for it to enact itself, and not a law passed in the exercise of the police power.

"On page 564 the court said:

"Congress did not use terms of permission to the State to act, but simply removed an impediment to the enforcement of the State laws in respect to imported packages in their original condition, created by the absence of a specific utterance on its part; It imparted no power to the State not then possessed, but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction.

"I now wish to direct attention specifically to one of the so-called 'permissive' sections of the bill—section 4:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him, to issue to any warehouseman a license for the conduct of a warehouse or warehouses in accordance with this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder: Provided, That each such warehouse be found suitable for the proper storage of the particular agricultural product or products for which a license is applied for, and that such warehouseman agree, as a condition to the granting of the license, to comply with and abide by all the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"The meaning of the term 'license' as it is used in this section is well defined in law. Briefly, it is the permission to do something which would otherwise be unlawful.

"The bill does not make it unlawful to operate a warehouse without a license. It is just as lawful to operate a warehouse without a license as with a license, and therefore the question of applying for a license will be determined on the part of the warehouseman by the character of the regulations to which he must agree. He will not apply for a license unless the regulations proposed are less onerous than those imposed by the States.

"The rules and regulations, therefore, will not be made in the interest of the general welfare, with an eye single to the public interest, but will be the subject of a bargain between the Secretary of Agriculture and the warehouseman.

"Do the proponents of this bill think that we shall stabilize warehouse receipts and improve the warehouse business by imposing less stringent regulations than are now imposed by the States, or regulations which can only be imposed so long as the warehouseman wishes to be bound by them? He may at any time refuse to be bound by the regulations of the department or the provisions of the act; and if he does so, no penalty is provided except the revocation of his license, which he did not require in the first place and which he himself has doubtless determined is of no value to him.

"It does not seem to me that such regulations can be valid or binding upon the warehouseman, but assuming that they are, how can they be binding upon those who do business with the warehouseman? How can we by contract fix the rights of persons who are not parties to the contract?

"Section 14 of the bill declares—

"That any person who deposits agricultural products for storage in a warehouse licensed under this act shall be deemed to have deposited the same subject to the terms of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"This provision certainly does not rest upon any contractual relation which may be established between the Government and the warehouseman. If it has any force at all, it has force because Congress has the power to say what the rights of a person who stores agricultural products in a warehouse may be.

"As I shall show later, a public warehouse is affected with a public use, and there arises from that public use a right on the part of any person to employ the services of the warehouse in the storage of his grain. The privileges, benefits, and responsibilities arising from this right can neither be increased or diminished by a contract entered into between the Government and the warehouseman, nor can they be affected by any action of Congress, so far as they may be exercised in or may be incidental to a purely intrastate transaction.

"It is possible, I think probable, that we have the power to fix those rights with respect to grain stored in the course of interstate or foreign commerce, but we certainly have no power to fix the rights of such persons with respect to purely intrastate transactions.

"There are four decisions of the United States Supreme Court which bear directly upon the power of the States and of the Federal Government to regulate warehouses and warehousemen. These decisions are: Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S., 113); Budd v. New York (143 U. S., 517); Brass v. North Dakota, ex rel. Stoeser (153 U. S., 391); W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota (180 U. S., 452).

"The case of Munn v. Illinois is the leading case, establishing the basic doctrine of the power of the States to regulate warehouses, and is approved and followed in the other three.

"In the case of Munn v. Illinois several fundamental propositions are decided. They are:

"First. When the owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest he in effect grants to the public an interest in such use, and must to the extent of that interest submit to be controlled by the public for the common good so long as he maintains that use.

"Second. That a warehouse engaged in storing, shipping, or handling grain for the public is affected with the public use and is subject to the police power of the State.

"Third. That regulations requiring such warehouses to be licensed and fixing the maximum charges for storage are properly within the police power of the State, and do not amount to a regulation of interstate commerce.

"In that case the court said (p. 135):

"The warehouses of these plaintiffs in error are situated and their business carried on exclusively within the limits of the State of Illinois. They are used as instruments by those engaged in State as well as those engaged in interstate commerce, but they are no more necessarily a part of commerce itself than the dray or the cart by which, but for them, grain would be transferred from one railroad station to another. Incidentally they may become connected with interstate comerce, but not necessarily so. Their regulation is a thing of domestic concern, and certainly, until Congress acts in reference to their interstate relations, the State may exercise all the powers of government over them, even though in so doing it may indirectly operate outside its immediate jurisdiction.

"It may be pointed out in this connection that there is no suggestion on the part of the court that the Federal Government might regulate other than the interstate relations of warehouses.

"In the case of Brass v. Stoeser the State of North Dakota undertook to regulate every warehouse erected and operated 'for the purpose of buying, selling, storing, shipping, or handling grain for profit,' and required such warehouses to give bond for the faithful performance of their duty, fixing the rates of storage, and required them to keep insured for the benefit of the owners of grain stored therein.

"The Supreme Court held all of these regulations to be a valid exercise of the police power of the State.

"In the case of W. W. Cargill v. Minnesota, in which case I may say the facts arose in the town in which I have the pleasure of making my home, the State of Minnesota declared all warehouses 'in which grain is received, stored, shipped, or handled' to be public warehouses. The law required such warehouses to procure a license from the State as a condition precedent to doing business; made such warehouses subject to the regulations of the railroad and warehouse commission; required the making of reports, the keeping of proper books of account; regulated the form and issuance of receipts; and prohibited discrimination.

"In this case the court held that the regulations were a proper and valid exercise of the police power and did not infringe upon interstate commerce, notwithstanding that all of the grain purchased by the warehouse company was immediately shipped to points outside of the State. If these regulations constitute a valid exercise of the police power of the State, it is apparent that the imposition of such regulations by the Federal Government in regard to transactions which do not relate to interstate commerce, and which constitute domestic or intrastate transactions, are not within the power of the Federal Government. To hold otherwise would be to break down absolutely the line of demarcation now established between the powers of the Federal and State governments.

"The act contained the following provision, almost identical in terms with section 4 of the bill under consideration:

"Such license shall confer upon the licensee full authority to operate such warehouse or elevator in accordance with the laws of this State and the rules and regulations prescribed by said commission, and every person, company, or corporation receiving such license shall be held to have accepted the provisions of this act and thereby to have agreed to comply with the same.

"Touching this provision, the court said (p. 468):

"The defendant, however, insists that some of the provisions of the statute are in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and if it obtained the required license it would be held to have accepted all of its provisions, and (in the same words of the statute) 'thereby to have agreed to comply with the same' (p. 1). The answer to this suggestion is that the acceptance of a license, in whatever form, will not impose upon the licensee an obligation to respect or to comply with any provisions of the statute or with any regulations prescribed by the State railroad and warehouse commission that are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

"This language effectually disposes of the contention that the regulations imposed by this bill, if otherwise invalid, are validated or made enforceable by the consent or agreement of those applying for a license under it.

"If the language which has just been quoted means anything, it means that the acceptance of a license or the agreement to be bound by rules or regulations, can apply only to such regulations as are in themselves valid and which the legislature or the commission to whom the power is delegated has the constitutional power to make.

"In other words, if the regulations are not such as Congress, either acting itself or through a department of the Government, has the constitutional power to impose, they will not be validated by the agreement of the person regulated to be bound by them or his acceptance of a license under the terms of the act.

"Again, it is claimed that the relation created between the Government and the warehouseman is one of contract, and that it is possible to do by such contract that which might not have been done by law.

"To state the proposition again in other words, that these regulations may be enforced as a part of a contract between the Government and the warehouseman, though they would not be enforceable if imposed as a matter of law, by regulation. This position is wholly unsound.

"If the State can do that by contract which it has not the power to do by law, or that which it is prohibited from doing by the fundamental law of the State, there would be no further need of constitutions, and the Federal Government might invade by contract, any right or power reserved to the State; the State might invade by contract any right granted to the Federal Government; and the State and Federal Governments might each invade the rights guaranteed to the people by the Federal Constitution.

"I revert now again to the substantive purposes of the bill as distinguished from its constitutionality.

"That purpose is fundamentally to make warehouse receipts a more stable, liquid, and negotiable security. A warehouse receipt can be no better than the law which authorizes it to be issued and which regulates its issuance and the responsibility of the warehouseman issuing it.

"What confidence will be placed in a receipt issued upon articles stored in a warehouse which may consist of a piece of ground surrounded by a barb-wire fence, 50 miles from a railroad, by a warehouseman who may, whenever he elects, refuse to be bound by the regulations and rules and the law under which the receipt was supposedly issued.

"The purpose is to make a warehouse receipt as negotiable, as representative of value in New York or San Francisco, as it may be in the place where it is issued, and where all the circumstances surrounding its issue and the character and responsibility of the warehouseman issuing it are known. This can only be accomplished where the law which governs its issuance is certain in its terms, obviously within the power of the Government to enact, and the regulations issued under it so certainly enforceable as to leave no doubt whatever as to its validity and enforceability.

"The bill under consideration utterly fails in all of these respects. It can only serve to throw a blanket of uncertainty over the entire field of warehousing and warehousemen's receipts. Instead of making definite and certain the validity, stability, and negotiability of warehouse receipts, it will render them the legitimate object of suspicion, doubt, and distrust.

"I repeat again, that I believe that all that we can legitimately hope to be accomplished by the Federal Government in the regulation of warehouses and warehouse receipts, in the grading, classifying, and weighing of grain, is within the power of Congress to accomplish under the commerce clause, but this only emphasizes the utter futility of an attempt to accomplish it under a paragraph of the Constitution which confers no authority whatever except to appropriate money for the general welfare.

"I have drawn amendments to this bill, bringing it within the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and which I believe will make its provisions valid and enforceable. These amendments I shall offer when the bill is read under the five-minute rule.

"I have also incorporated these amendments into a new bill, which I will offer as a substitute for the bill now pending."

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] would limit the provisions of this act to the terminal stations and to the warehouses located along the lines of interstate carriers. To do that would, in my opinion, defeat the very purposes of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say that the amendment under consideration restricts it very much more than that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I differ with the gentleman. I think the amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], restricting the provisions of the bill to warehouses in which are stored products intended for interstate shipment, would make it possible for nearly all warehouses to come under the provisions of the act.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] have both referred to the bills as they were framed and acted upon in the last Congress. At that time the only opposition to this warehouse bill was based upon its alleged unconstitutionality. By the amendment agreed to all doubt of the constitutionality of the bill is removed, according to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who made the strongest argument against the bill in the last Congress, and others who have spoken on the subject.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan opposes it on the ground that it is no function of the Federal Government, but should be left entirely with the States. That might well be said of rural-credit legislation. Each State has the right to enact rural-credit legislation. They could provide land-mortgage banks for the marketing of farm mortgages, and certainly it would be an improvement over the existing conditions, and yet the great majority of this House is in favor of some form of rural-credit legislation by Congress and not by the States. The Members differ only as to the scope of such legislation and as to the extent of governmental aid.

The same argument that applies as to the necessity for rural-credit legislation by this Congress applies to this warehouse proposition. The bill seeks not only to provide a protection against the elements, but it also seeks to revolutionize the marketing of agricultural products by enabling the farmer to distribute that marketing over 12 months, instead of limiting the marketing of a product like cotton, for instance, to 60 or 90 days.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] says that the purpose of the bill is to enable the farmer to take advantage of the rediscount section of the Federal reserve act. He is right. That is one purpose of it, or should be, and it is a most laudable purpose. No rural-credit legislation brought in at this session of Congress will provide for personal credit; but the Federal reserve act under the section giving to these Federal reserve banks the power to rediscount notes secured by agricultural products furnishes ample and sufficient personal credit if the farmers will only take advantage of it. In order to take advantage of it, the passage of this bill is essential. It does not conflict with State warehouses, for the reason that it is permissive. My own opinion is that it will supplant them, for any sane man must realize the advantage of a warehouse receipt showing upon its face the grade and the weight of cotton certified to by a man licensed by the Department of Agriculture, and he will realize that that receipt will have a wider and a better market than the warehouse receipt of a warehouse system organized by and under the control of any State or of a private corporation.

The cotton crop of the South is marketed during two or three months by reason of the credit system under which the making of the crop is financed and his inability to hold his cotton. All debts of the cotton farmer fall due within a period of 60 days in the fall of the year. The banks and the lien merchants call upon him to pay his debts, and the farmer is forced to sell in order to meet his obligation, even though the price at that time may be depressed to the point where he will receive no profit for his year's work. He may be satisfied that he will receive less than the average price paid during the entire year, and he may be satisfied that if he could hold his cotton for even 60 days he would receive a higher price. But he must sell in order to meet the obligation and because he has no opportunity to warehouse his cotton and borrow money on it at a rate of interest which, together with the storage charges, will leave him any profit. Even where cotton has been stored in private warehouses, the investing public has been slow to lend money upon warehouse receipts for cotton, because there was no guaranty of the reliability of the warehouseman; no certainty that should the farmer not pay the loan and the lender endeavor to secure the cotton that he would find it there; no certainty that if he did find it there that it would be in good condition or that the weight of the bale would be as represented in the warehouse receipt; and no certainty that it would be of the grade represented in the receipt. Of all of these things the farmer might be certain because of his knowledge of the warehouseman and of the cotton, but the banker in New York would have no such knowledge and would therefore refuse to lend money to the local bank upon the receipt, and this refusal would cause the local bank to refuse to lend to the farmer.

To remedy this condition, a number of States, including South Carolina, have established a State warehouse system. They have been and will continue to be of great assistance in making negotiable warehouse receipts for cotton, but the State warehouse system naturally has its limitations. A receipt issued by the warehouse system in South Carolina may differ from a receipt issued by the warehouse system of the State of Texas, and this lack of uniformity will detract from the negotiability of this receipt. Again, the value of the receipt will depend in great measure upon the honesty of the weigher of the cotton and of the ability of the man who grades it. In the absence of some civil-service provision, by which the most competent men would be secured for the duty of grading and weighing the cotton, the investing public would fear the effect of political influence upon the local system.

The warehouse system provided for in this bill will eliminate all these objections. The warehouse would have to be constructed in accordance with plans approved by the Department of Agriculture, which would insure cheap insurance for the cotton stored in it. The warehouseman would have to give bond to the Department of Agriculture for the faithful discharge of his duties. The cotton weigher and the cotton grader would have to be licensed by the Department of Agriculture, assuring both competency and honesty, and their license would be revoked whenever they failed to properly discharge their duties. It would not be compulsory for any warehouse to come under the terms of this act. It is entirely optional with a warehouse in the State of South Carolina to come under the terms of this act or not, as it may please, but it is certain that the advantages offered to the farmer who stored his cotton in a warehouse bonded by the Government would result in warehouses all over the South complying with the terms of this act. Now, what are the advantages? Under the Federal reserve act passed by Congress a year or two ago, the Federal reserve banks were authorized to rediscount agricultural paper having a maturity of not more than six months. This meant that the Federal reserve bank at Richmond could lend money to any local national bank in any county in South Carolina that would offer as security the note of a farmer secured by agricultural products, wherever the security was ample to protect the loan. In the exercise of the power thus given to them the Federal Reserve Board on September 3 of last year authorized the lending of money to local banks at a low rate of interest on notes secured by warehouse receipts for marketable nonperishable staples, properly insured, but this privilege was granted only where the local bank could show that the rate of interest charged the farmer did not exceed 6 per cent. Under this privilege nearly every national bank in South Carolina loaned large sums of money to the farmers, secured by warehouse receipts for cotton, charging only 6 per cent interest. It was the first time the farmer had ever been able to borrow money at 6 per cent. Unfortunately there are in the rural communities but few national banks, and therefore the great majority of farmers were unable to secure the benefit of this legislation. But as it becomes generally known that national banks can borrow money upon such terms as will enable them to lend it to the farmer at 6 per cent, and yet make a profit, more national banks will be established in the rural districts, so that this relief will be furnished to a greater number of those who wish it. It is stated that some national banks refrained from availing themselves of this privilege on the ground that they did not care to lend money at 6 per cent on cotton when they were charging 8 per cent and more on other securities. But this short-sighted policy will not continue very long. The customers of a bank will demand that they be given an opportunity to borrow money at 6 per cent when other banks are lending at that figure, or else they will transfer their business.

The Federal reserve bank is able to lend money to local banks upon notes secured by warehouse cotton receipts, because they in turn can borrow from the Federal reserve bank in New York or elsewhere upon the receipt in case it is necessary for them to do so. The more valuable the warehouse receipt is the more easily can it be negotiated in the financial markets of the country, and, consequently, the more money they will be able to lend to the farmers at the rate of 6 per cent. It does not require much consideration on the part of any man to come to the conclusion that the receipt of a warehouse, bonded by the United States and containing the grade and weight placed in the receipt by a man licensed by the Department of Agriculture, will be more acceptable in the financial world than a receipt issued by a private warehouseman or even a State warehouseman.

In this connection it is interesting to note the statement of Hon. W. P. G. Harding, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, that—

> The proposed warehouse act, in my opinion, will tend to make cotton stored at interior points available as collateral for loans without the intermediation of local banks and will broaden very materially the market for loans secured by warehouse receipts for cotton.

This must be the goal for those who hope to secure money for the farmers at a lower rate of interest. If the banks fail to join the Federal Reserve Association, and thus place themselves in position to secure money, which they can loan at 6 per cent interest on cotton warehouse receipts, then some plan must be devised whereby this receipt can be marketed without the intermediation of local banks. I believe this warehouse bill must be adopted if we are to give to the farmer the relief provided for in the Federal reserve act. As I have on several occasions been asked for information as to the manner in which the section of the act providing for the rediscount of agricultural paper was adopted, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from the Hon. Robert J. Buckley, of Ohio, at that time a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, who with Representative GLASS was in charge of the bill on the floor of the House, and whose activities in behalf of rural credits is so well remembered in this House.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1914.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Responding to your favor of June 27, my recollection about the rediscount section of the currency bill in the Democratic caucus last August is as follows:

There was an agitation in favor of allowing certain privileges by way of rediscount to notes secured by agricultural products. Certain Members representing agricultural communities did not believe that agricultural papers should be allowed any special privileges, yet were of the opinion that the bill as presented to the caucus by the committee would in practice result in a discrimination against agricultural interests. There seemed to be an irreconcilable difference of opinion between the committee and those advocating extreme and ill-considered amendments.

This difference was very embarrassing to those who held more moderate opinions, and threatened a serious breach in the Democratic Party.

At this juncture you and certain other Members representing agricultural communities, among them I recall especially Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi, and Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, expressed to me and the other members of our committee the suggestion that some compromise ought to be made, and proposed the form of a compromise.

I told you that I would endeavor to secure the acceptance of a reasonable compromise by the committee, and for two or three days the language was discussed without any definite conclusion. Finally, while the caucus was in session, and just before the vote was to be taken on the rediscount section, Mr. GLASS and the other ranking members of the Banking and Currency Committee being on the floor in charge of the debate, I met you and others in the corridor and presented to you a slight modification of your own language and told you that with that modification your amendment would be acceptable to the committee. You stated that you could accept and support the amendment as modified provided that the time for which agricultural notes could be rediscounted should be increased from 60 days, as provided in the bill, to 6 months. I stated that the committee would not agree to that, but that I would undertake to go on the floor of the House and secure their consent to some increase in the rediscount period. I then secured their agreement to increase the period to 90 days and induced Mr. GLASS to offer your amendment as a committee amendment. You agreed to this arrangement and did valuable work in rallying the agricultural Representatives to the support of the committee. Your efforts restored harmony in the caucus and secured the adoption by the committee of an amendment favorable to the farmers.

It is my judgment that even if the Senate had so amended the bill as to allow six months rediscount period for agricultural paper it would have been impossible for the Senate conferees to secure the agreement of the House conferees to this proposition if you had not induced the House leaders to increase the time to 90 days before the bill was passed by the House.

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) ROBT. J. BULKLEY.

The rural-credits bill, which is being considered by the Banking and Currency Committee and which I hope will pass at this session of Congress, seeks to provide a method by which loans can be made to farmers for long periods when such loans are secured by farm mortgages, but it does not provide any means whereby the farmer can secure money for short periods at a reasonable rate of interest. It will be difficult to devise a plan more comprehensive than that provided for in the section of the Federal reserve act, referred to by Mr. Bulkley. This is demonstrated by the hundreds of thousands of dollars loaned to the farmers of my State by the national banks at 6 per cent interest last winter. But what is now necessary is to provide means whereby national banks will be formed in rural communities in order to avail themselves of this privilege, or, failing in this, some plan whereby the warehouse receipt can be marketed without the intermediation of the national banks. In either event this legislation is essential in order that the farmer of the South can place the only security he has, his cotton, in such shape that a warehouse receipt for it will be regarded as gilt-edge collateral in the financial markets of the world.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

Mr. LEE. I also yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMLIN). The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] yields 5 minutes and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] yields 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN], who is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, when this amendment, which was originally drawn as a separate bill, was drafted, it was intended to cover cotton alone; but it seemed to me that if we were to have a Federal warehouse bill, we ought to have one broad enough in its scope to cover more than one or two agricultural products, and that it ought to take in the principal nonperishable farm products of the country. After discussing it with my colleagues on the committee they were intelligent enough and fair enough to admit that that was the only proper thing to do. So, instead of having two warehouse bills—one covering the products of the South and the other the products of the North—we have only one bill, covering the entire country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the people in that section of country from which I come have been very much dissatisfied with the markets that they have been compelled to patronize, because there have been so many evils creeping into the market situation as to completely demoralize it. Particularly are they dissatisfied with the export situation.

A number of gentlemen on the floor of the House to-day have attempted to defend the exporters of the Atlantic coast, and they say that this bill will deprive them of what the exporters call a climatic advantage, the benefits of which in their export business they claim they are entitled to. Why, Mr. Chairman, according to their own testimony they do not conduct a legitimate business.

In the hearings before the Agricultural Committee in 1914, when they came before that committee to protest against the bill known as the United States grain-grades act, after stating that that bill would take away from them their climatic advantage, and they were asked to explain what that was, they said that corn particularly, and most other grains, came to the Atlantic coast for export so late in the season that the weather was very cold and that at that time of the year it was possible for them because of their "climatic advantage" to ship No. 3, and even No. 4, corn to Europe as No. 2. They also ship other grains with more moisture in them at that season of the year than the rules for grading grain in this country permit, and as a result American grain has been discredited in Europe to such an extent that European buyers before the war got together and agreed not to buy any grain from this country until they have first secured all that the rest of the world had to offer. And, as I said yesterday, there is now a claim for some 30,000,000 bushels, involving millions of dollars, before the State Department for grain that has been shipped to Europe under a grade far above its actual value. What is the result of that? If you ship No. 3 or No. 4 corn to Europe as No. 2, you are not dealing with fools over there and the European buyer pays for that corn just what it is worth as No. 3 or No. 4, but it is quoted in the market over there as American No. 2. It is called by the exporters either export No. 2 or seaboard No. 2.

These exporters admitted before our committee that the grain that was shipped abroad, whether the quantity was great or small, usually established the price of the grain that is consumed in this country. Now, that being so, if you will go and ask any grain dealer in this country what corn is worth, you will find that as the contract grade is No. 2 they will quote you No. 2.

Now, if they ship No. 3 or No. 4 grain to Europe as No. 2 as they are doing and have been doing for years, they are thereby depreciating the value of the No. 2 in Europe from one to two grades, and as the price of the real No. 2 here is based on the Liverpool false No. 2, our grain here is undergraded, not only No. 2 but all the other grades in the same proportion, as the price of all other grades are based on No. 2. If you will stop to consider the fact that we are raising 5,000,000,000 bushels of grain in this country, and if they only undervalue that grain one single grade, and the price reduced thereby is 3 cents a bushel, it takes $150,000,000 out of the farmers of this country every year.
